PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS
FOURTH SESSION.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1923.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for every remembrance of our needs, for the pathway ordained for our feet, and the duties which come to us day by day. We would ask Thy guidance through this day's session with its multiplied responsibilities. And when the time comes for separation we pray for journeying mercies. Grant this unto each of Thy servants on his homeward way, and so through the months coming may heavenly guidance be realized, and in all his ways may there be the recognition of the God who loves and cares for us. Hear and help us and direct us to Thine own glory. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SALE OF REAL PROPERTY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4216) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes, which were, on page 5, to strike out lines 16 to 22, inclusive; on page 5, line 23, to strike out "3" and insert "2"; on page 5, line 23, to strike out all after "properties" down to and including "department," in line 25; on page 6, line 7, to strike out "4" and insert "3"; on page 6, line 23, to strike out "5" and insert "4"; on page 7, line 4, to strike out "6" and insert "5"; on page 7, line 7, to strike out "7" and insert "6"; and on page 7, line 13, to strike out "8" and insert "7."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, one word of explanation of the House amendments to the bill. The amendments adopted by the House in effect strike out the provision which the Senate adopted, which would authorize the Secretary of War to transfer real property to other executive departments of the Government without charge. No other change is made in the list of properties to be sold. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TRIBUTE TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present a tribute to Abraham Lincoln, by George M. Bailey, which appeared in the Houston (Tex.) Post of February 12. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. Mr. Bailey was formerly a prominent member of the House and Senate press galleries, is now connected with the editorial staff of the Houston (Tex.) Post, and is a writer of unusual eloquence and power.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN—FEBRUARY 12, 1809.

(By George M. Bailey.)

One hundred and fourteen years ago, according to the vague records of the event, Abraham Lincoln was born. A child of the southern wilderness, his character was molded and wrought in an environment of loneliness, sorrow, and privation. His heart bled from early youth until, under the weeping skies of a sad April morning in '65, it was drained of its last crimson drop. The joys of the world never knew him, to happiness he was a stranger, life's burdens clung to him with ever-increasing weight until death struck them from his tired shoulders. The great duties that came to him were duties of pain and sorrow; the triumphs he won were triumphs that crushed his soul with grief. Looking back upon his strange career, it almost seems as if the man stalked across the stage of life with a crown of thorns upon his brow, bearing a cross to his Calvary, beholding the world through a mist of tears. He loved his country unselfishly, and he served it nobly and with unfaltering faith. His spirit knew neither malice nor hatred; no impulse of vengeance ever sought refuge in his bosom. He was gentle of speech, sympathetic, charitable, compassionate, patient, tender, brave. Destiny made him the broken-hearted commander in chief of an embattled Nation turned against his native South; duty drove him through the tragic ordeal; and at the end fate struck him down and left even his estranged kinsmen bowed and dumb above his prostrate form. History reveals no counterpart of Abraham Lincoln. In body, heart, soul, and mind, as well as in the fatefu' career that God marked out for him, the world has had no other like him among all its sons who have led mankind, from Eden to Versailles. The pyramids in time may sink beneath the desert sands, the temples of the earth crumble in the dust of ages, the fame of the Cæsars vanish in the darkness of oblivion, but surely so long as the race endures it will behold in the familiar figure of this martyred son—strange, gaunt, silent, colossal, with agony written in the lines of his kindly face and love glowing in his wistful eyes—the saddest, gentlest, and most pathetic figure in all human history.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Labor, reporting, in further response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, relative to the automobiles and garages owned and controlled by the United States Immigration Service, which was ordered to lie on the table.

CALCIUM ARSENATE (S. DOC. NO. 345).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 417, agreed to January 23, 1923, a preliminary report setting forth certain facts regarding the calcium arsenate industry, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE (S. DOC. NO. 344).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 457 (agreed to February 27, 1923, and submitted by Mr. ASHURST), information relative to the administration of paragraphs (9), (10), and (11) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act, regarding the operation and control by railroads of common carriers by water, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE NEAR EAST RELIEF (S. DOC. NO. 343).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the general secretary of the Near East Relief, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Near East Relief for the year ended December 31, 1922, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that House bill 14401, which came over from the House last night, be laid before the Senate.

The bill (14401) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act was read twice by its title.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the purpose and effect of the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I was about to ask unanimous consent that the Senate may pass upon the bill without reference to the Committee on Finance. I can very briefly state what it is and then, if there is objection, of course, it would have to be referred.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have carefully read over the bill, which is somewhat lengthy, and also the report made thereon by the House committee. The bill is one that has been close to the hearts of the veterans of the late war, and one which they have been pressing upon the House for enactment into law.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator if the bill has been reported or is it available for the consideration of the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill has passed the House and is here with a report. We can get the House print. If the Senator will allow me, I will very briefly state what the bill is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to see the bill itself, if possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Copies of the bill are available.

Mr. ASHURST. Is this the so-called Sweet bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the Sweet bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That identifies it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may have the attention of Senators for a few moments, I will state that H. R. 14401 is a bill to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

Section 1 changes the law so that persons guilty of treason, mutiny, spying, or offenses involving moral turpitude or willful and insistent misconduct will not be deprived of insurance and compensation benefits unless they have been found guilty by a court-martial. This section is made retroactive.

Section 2 amends section 300, so that a person who is suffering any neuropsychiatric or tubercular disease developing within three years after separation from the service shall be considered to have incurred such disease while in the service. It extends the present law one year.

The bill includes those suffering from these diseases provided they have been examined by a medical officer of the bureau or legally qualified physician and found to be suffering from a disease of more than 10 per cent degree within the said three years after separation from the service.

Section 3 provides that where a veteran dies after discharge and does not leave assets to meet the expenses of his burial, the Veterans' Bureau shall pay for a flag to drape the casket, and, after burial, to be given to the next of kin, a sum not to exceed $5, and also burial expenses not to exceed $100. This provision is made applicable to veterans of all wars and then applies to those cases where the deceased has left no means.

Section 4 provides for transportation to be furnished veterans who are receiving hospitalization facilities at the present time through the United States Veterans' Bureau. Under the present law, under a ruling of the Comptroller General, these persons, although entitled to hospitalization, are not entitled to transportation to and from hospitals. This section provides for transportation to and from hospitals as well as hospitalization.

Section 5 extends the time for obtaining a certificate of disability from the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to March 1, 1924.

Section 6 provides that no compensation shall be payable for death inflicted as a lawful punishment for crime or a military offense except one inflicted by the enemy.

Section 7 provides that insurance shall not lapse where the bureau has sufficient uncollected compensation to pay the premiums—this irrespective of whether application for reinstatement was made or not.

The second portion of this section provides that where the soldier has applied for reinstatement, and such reinstatement has been denied because of health conditions, where at the time of such application the soldier was suffering from a disease of service origin, but was not permanently and totally disabled, then the bureau is authorized to pay the soldier or his beneficiaries the amount of the insurance attempted to be reinstated, less the premiums, and so forth. (See report, page 3.)

Section 8 amends the present law whereby the payment of premiums on yearly renewable term insurance and United States Government life insurance (converted insurance)—this applies, of course, to those cases of illness or mental incompetency—on the due date may be waived, and the insurance may be deemed not to lapse in the case of those who while mentally incompetent and for whom no legal guardian had been or has been appointed, allowed or may allow their insurance to lapse while such rating is effective during the period for which they have been or may hereafter be so rated; the waiver in such case to be made without application and retroactive where necessary.

The amendment to this section relates solely to those who are mentally incompetent and for whom no legal guardian has been appointed. If this section becomes a law their insurance will not lapse during the period of such incompetency.

Section 9 of the bill amends section 411 of the present law so that a policy of insurance shall be incontestable after it has been in force six months, instead of providing that the policy shall be incontestable six months after date of issuance or reinstatement.

I can see but very little difference in that, but under certain rulings it was thought necessary.

Section 10 provides that the Treasury is authorized to invest and reinvest United States Government life-insurance funds, or any part thereof, in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or bonds of the Federal farm-loan banks, and to sell said obligations of the United States or the bonds of the Federal farm-loan banks for the purpose of such fund.

In other words, this section simply amends section 412 of the war risk insurance act by adding the words "or bonds of the Federal farm loan bank."

In substance, those are the changes made to the existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether the Committee on Finance has had an opportunity to consider the provisions of the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that it has not been referred to the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I could not hear the Senator, because of conversations in the Chamber. The Senator presented a detailed analysis of the bill, but it was impossible to follow him, because of the continued disorder in the Chamber. I doubt if any Senator understood any material part of the Senator's statement. That, of course, was not his fault.

It is regrettable that a bill of such importance can not receive the consideration which it is entitled to by the Senate. It comes here within a few hours of the end of the session and is taken up under conditions that make it impossible for Senators to familiarize themselves with its provisions.

Mr. President, I give notice to Senators now that the business of the Senate can not proceed under the disorderly conditions that are prevailing here. I understand from the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that this bill has the approval of the American Legion, of the organization for the protection of the interests of disabled veterans, and similar organizations?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Arkansas is correct in that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator received any protests from any of those organizations or their members against the passage of the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not, and I am certain that the committee has not. Of course, the bill has not been before our committee; but I do not think there has been any objection urged against the bill, even in the other House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while I regret that no opportunity is afforded to study the provisions of the bill, I have heretofore given some consideration to them, and I have no disposition to delay the passage of the bill. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Arkansas that all he has stated is certainly correct. We have not now the time to give the bill the consideration which otherwise would be given to it. There are some provisions of the old law, however, that ought to be modified, and great injustice will be done unless they are modified and modified now. I can see nothing in the bill as the modification is proposed to be made that will do any injustice to the Government as I have read the bill over.

The bill could go to the committee, but if it shall be referred to the committee it would be impossible to get the members of the committee together to-day in order to act upon it. All the chairman of the committee could do would be to poll the committee, and from the mere polling the committee and its members would know nothing more about what the bill contains than the Senate knows at this time. So I hope we may be able to pass the bill at the present time, feeling certain that there can be nothing in the bill which will be injurious to the rights of the United States and that it will cure a number of defects in the old law. In the next session Congress, of course, may make any amendment which it may see fit.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit, I desire to propound some interrogatories, the replies to which may clear away some doubt which may exist in reference to this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I am familiar with the bill and am in favor of it. On page 9 of the copy of the bill which I have before me, to wit, House bill 14401, printed some time ago, the so-called Sweet bill, commencing on line 4, the bill reads:

Provided, That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion suffering from neuropsychiatric or tubercular ailments and diseases, including transportation as granted to those receiving compensation and hospitalization under the war risk insurance act.

Is that provision still in the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is in the bill at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very important provision. I will read to the Senate a telegram which I have just received indicating how vital that provision is. This telegram is signed by a number of gentlemen in Prescott, Ariz., representing soldier organizations:

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., March 2, 1923.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Read to Senate that Leo Klecho, with Philippine and border service with Pershing, is dying in Prescott in want. Too sick to move to Sawtelle. Technicality prevents hospitalization Whipple Hospital. In name of patriotism give this man justice and benefit last days. Don't let him die in streets. Sick soldiers providing food for him. What is technicality to man's life? Grant emergency hospitalization Whipple until he can be moved to soldiers' home at Sawtelle or dies. A soldier is a soldier, no matter what war he served in.

ROBERT LEE BEVERIDGE,
State Commander Disabled American Veterans.
WINKELBACH,
Commander United Spanish War Veterans.
DRISCOLL,
Commander Veterans of Foreign Wars.
BAKER,
Commander American Legion.

This is the second case in my State to which my attention has been called within a few days.

I ask the Senator from North Dakota another question. Under the present law any tubercular involvement appearing in a veteran must be shown to have been caused or to have originated within two years after his dismissal from the service. But this bill extends the time to three years. Am I correct about that?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Arizona is correct. The Senator understands, of course, that in cases of tubercular trouble very often the disease may run for 10 years before physicians will get it into their heads that that is what the trouble is.

Mr. ASHURST. Indeed, so insinuating is the tubercular plague which inflicts itself upon mankind that I can say within the limits of conservative speech that nearly all persons have in them some tubercular germ. When the tubercular germ may assert itself and become aggressive enough to overcome the vitality of the human being no one can tell. So I believe it is a just thing to extend the time in these soldier cases from two years to three years.

Whilst on this subject I want to say that I hope there will be no objection to the bill; but I join with the able Senator from Arkansas in deploring that it came before us so late that there has been no opportunity for its real consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there has not been any objection to the consideration of the bill. Why not pass it?

Mr. ASHURST. I am in favor of its passage, and I thank the Senator for admonishing me.

Mr. BORAH. If any Senator should object, then would be the time to discuss it.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to know he joins with me in urging the passage of the bill. However, Mr. President, I will not be swept off my feet. Before I sit down I am going to say some words that the Senate ought to hear. I regret to say what I am about to say, because in the closing hours of the Congress I would rather say complimentary and pleasant things; but there was appointed during the present Congress a committee of Senators to visit the various veterans' hospitals. In season and out of season—some Senators thought out of season—I pleaded with that committee to go to the West to investigate. One member of the committee, Senator WALSH of Massachusetts, went West and inspected some western hospitals. Now a new committee has been appointed under a resolution adopted yesterday and $20,000 have been appropriated to pay the expenses of that committee. No Senator shall escape the sting of the lash that I shall apply to him publicly if, after having gone upon that committee, he refuses to go to the West and investigate conditions. I demand that the committee go to Tucson, Ariz., and see the sick soldiers there, see the flimsy, inflammable buildings in which they are housed. If that committee fails, as the last one failed, to go there, they must not hope to escape criticism. I now request, invite, demand that that committee go West to investigate the condition of disabled veterans.

To make this investigation and to become familiar with the hospitalization question is a task that will be arduous and protracted; but no Senator could engage in a nobler work or one that could more warmly engage the good impulses of heart and brain.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, as a minority member of the Finance Committee, I feel that I ought to say that it is most regrettable that a bill of this importance, involving the Government's close relationship to a million or more of its citizens, is brought in here in the last hours of the session. It has not even been given the consideration of a committee of the Senate. I join with the Senator from Arkansas in denouncing the policy that compels us to vote at this late hour in the session for a bill without even an opportunity to read the bill. I think it is a very dangerous way to legislate. We must take it for granted that it is favorable and helpful legislation to our ex-service men, for the Members of the Senate have not had even an opportunity to read the bill. I for one refuse to assume the responsibility of any irregularities or bad provisions that may be incorporated in this bill; yet, because it is asserted that the representatives of our ex-service men favor it, I shall vote for it rather than have Congress adjourn without action on a measure that may bring some relief to our disabled service men.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if he has any estimate as to how much this bill will cost the taxpayers?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not imagine that it will cost $100,000 additional. Where a soldier has become demented and there has been no guardian appointed, it is provided that his insurance shall not lapse because of his failure to keep up the payments. The bill also provides for the little additional expense of taking these neurasthenic cases to and from the hospital and giving them the benefits of attention and treatment in the Government hospitals. There is nothing in it that involves any large sum of money.

Mr. HARRELD obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not want to block this measure by asking for the regular order, because I think it ought to pass, but I do hope that Senators will let the bill go through if it is going to be passed. It is interfering with other business.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I have not had much to say during the present Congress, and I wish to say a few words now. If there has been one blot on the escutcheon of this administration during the last two years, it has been its Veterans' Bureau hospitalization program. Two years ago $18,600,000 were appropriated for hospitalization. Then the so-called White committee was called into being. They made a finding that the two places in the United States where hospitalization was more especially needed were Oklahoma—a new State, where few hospitals have been built of a private nature to take care of the situation—and New York.

The original bill as it came here provided that five central hospitals should be built in five distinct parts of the United States. That provision was cut out in the Senate. I noticed from the report the other day the result of that expenditure. It appears that of that $18,600,000 nearly $2,000,000 of it has been spent for furniture, and of the other $16,000,000 nearly $5,000,000 has been spent in one State, namely, in the State of New York, to build two big hospitals, while other parts of the country have gone without any at all. That has been the program all the way through.

In my section the disabled soldiers have been left to die in droves in their homes, on their parents, because they could not get proper hospitalization. The State was finally forced to build one. Favoritism has been shown in the matter. I picked up the other day a weekly report on hospitalization. What do I find from that report? I find that there is approximately one salaried attendant in these hospitals for every patient in the hospitals. That will be shown by the report, if Senators will examine it; and it does not mean that those patients are in the hospitals for 30 consecutive days a month. It is made up on the first day of each week. It does not mean that the salaried attendants are the same in number as those who are being treated. It means that the attendants are greatly in excess of the number of people who are being treated in these bureau hospitals, because a man is put in a hospital for treatment today and he is out to-morrow or he is out next day, and he goes to swell the sum total of the patients in the hospital for the week or the month, though in for a day only, while these attendants go on from day to day and from month to month drawing their salaries; and yet that report shows that there is one attendant for every patient that is in these hospitals. I want to say to you that if the committee that has been appointed to make this investigation does its duty the smell will reach to heaven before it gets through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is this discussion proceeding by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair undertook to put the question as to unanimous consent, and was interrupted by the Senator from Arizona; so the Chair has not yet had the opportunity to put the question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I mean it can only proceed by unanimous consent at the present time. Is that so?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the case.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think very likely this is a very worthy bill, and I shall make no objection to its passage if Senators want to pass it; but if they want to spend their time in talking about favoritism to other States and past abuses on the last day of the session I give notice that I shall object. If they are willing to take a vote on it, I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, immediate consideration will be had.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if we can have a vote it is all right. If we have another delay, I shall object.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am sure nobody will object to having put in the RECORD a statement by the American Legion about this bill. I understand that organization is favorably disposed to the passage of this bill. They have made an analysis of it which will help those who read the RECORD to understand this bill. I have just been called from the Chamber and asked by Mr. Taylor, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Legion, to put this statement in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C.

* * * * * * *

A measure of great interest to all ex-service men and women was reported to the House February 21. This was H. R. 14401, a new Sweet bill, which was drafted by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House to liberalize the war risk insurance act following the hearings given the national legislative committee of the Legion on H. R. 14003. While the present bill does not include all the legislative recommendations of the Legion, its enactment will greatly relieve the present situation.

THE MANNER IN WHICH H. R. 14401 WOULD AMEND THE WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

1. Section 29: Amended to prevent termination of war risk insurance unless discharged by court-martial. This provision made retroactive to April 6, 1917.

2. Section 300: Provision relating to service origin of disability strengthened by insertion of word "conclusively."

3. Section 300: Word "pulmonary" stricken from the law to allow service men suffering from all forms of tuberculosis to become compensible.

4. Section 300: The period of automatic service connection for tuberculosis extended from two years to three years.

5. Section 300: The period of automatic service connection for neuropsychiatric diseases extended from two years to three years.

6. Section 300: Provides compensation for disability, etc., incurred prior to April 6, 1917, if discharged subsequently to April 6, 1917.

7. Section 301, subdivision G: One hundred dollars for burial and $5 for flag to be paid veteran of any war who dies and does not leave sufficient assets to meet expense of burial.

8. Section 301, subdivision G: Five dollars for flag and $100 for burial in addition to transportation cost where death occurs when the veteran is receiving governmental, medical, surgical, or hospital treatment or vocational training.

9. Section 302, subdivision 6: Veterans' Bureau hospital facilities made available to Spanish-American War, Philippine Insurrection, Boxer Rebellion, veterans suffering from neuropsychiatric or tuberculosis ailments and diseases, with transportation.

10. Section 306: Provides that certificate of disability shall be incontestable except for fraud.

11. Section 306: Extends the time for obtaining certificate of disability from August 9, 1922, to March 1, 1924.

12. Section 308: Requires a court-martial sentence for discharge to bar a person from the benefits of the provisions of the war risk insurance act.

13. Section 408: Makes permanent disability payable under same conditions death benefits are now payable where insurance lapsed at the time compensation was due the veteran.

14. Section 408: Makes insurance payable where a disabled soldier, not permanently and totally disabled, was not allowed reinstatement of his insurance and has since died or has since become permanently and totally disabled. The unpaid premiums with interest at 5 per cent will be deducted from the premiums.

15. Section 409: Prevents insurance from lapsing for mental patients without guardians appointed by law.

16. In sections 409, 411, and 412, provisions have been added designed to safeguard the Government and to facilitate the administrative feature of the act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There will be unless there is a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The chair hears none; and, without objection——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course none of us have had an opportunity——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator is going to make a speech, I shall object to the consideration of this bill at the present time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I understand that the bill has been submitted to the Senate for action by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; unanimous consent is asked, and I am willing to let it go and be passed if we can pass the bill instead of listening to speeches about it. I gave notice to that effect twice before.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I did not intend to make a speech; but I am a member of the Finance Committee, to which this bill would ordinarily be referred, and I think I have a right to ask some questions about it before it is passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I object.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if this question-asking back and forth on the last day of the session, with many other bills here that Senators want to get through, is to proceed, it is debate. I am willing to have this bill passed if it can be done without further debate; I am willing to have the Senator or anybody else put into the RECORD what they want to put in about this bill; but I have given notice twice that——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish to be put in the attitude of proposing to have a bill passed here without permitting a Senator even to ask a question concerning its provisions?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will take a chance on the attitude that I assume, Mr. President. I have stated what I will do if there is further debate on this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator, in answer to his question, that I made a full statement of each section of the bill and what it provided. It took some time to make it, because it is a somewhat lengthy bill, but it was a prepared statement, which I put in the RECORD before the Senator came in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall object to further debate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to pass.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Regular order!

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

AMENDMENT OF COAL COMMISSION ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4160) to amend the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes," approved September 22, 1922, which were on page 4, line 21, to strike out "of" and insert "or"; and on page 5, after line 21, to insert—

SEC. 4. That the last paragraph of such act of September 22, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available until expended, for carrying out the provisions of this act."

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14408) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 22, 36, 66, 72, and 76 to the said bill; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 24, 40, and 54, and concurred therein severally with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4137) to authorize the transfer of certain vessels from the Navy to the Coast Guard, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

[These amendments were subsequently laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.]

The message further announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. J. Res. 455. Joint resolution to amend the China trade act; and

H. J. Res. 456. Joint resolution authorizing the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to appoint a subcommittee to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture to join with a like committee of five heretofore appointed by the Senate to investigate problems relating to reforestation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. FROTHINGHAM, Mr. GREENE of Vermont, and Mr. FIELDS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 87) providing for the correction of an error which occurred in the enrollment of House bill 14408, the third deficiency appropriation bill, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 574. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," as amended;

S. 1076. An act establishing standard grades of naval stores, preventing deception in transactions in naval stores, regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes;

S. 2703. An act to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates;

S. 3123. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended;

S. 3892. An act authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.;

S. 4146. An act permitting the State of Wyoming to reconvey certain lands to the United States and select other lands in lieu thereof and providing for the patenting of certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for public-park purposes;

S. 4211. An act authorizing preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Intracoastal Waterway in Louisiana and Texas;

S. 4469. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River in the State of Alabama;

S. 4536. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Peedee River in South Carolina;

S. 4548. An act declaring Bear Creek in Humphreys, Leflore, and Sunflower Counties, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream;

S. 4552. An act to incorporate the Belleau Wood Memorial Association; and

S. J. Res. 240. Joint resolution authorizing the erection, on public grounds, of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 455) to amend the China trade act, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE REGENERATION OF THE AMERICAN POSTAL SYSTEM.

Mr. PHIPPS. Under date of February 26, the Postmaster General addressed a communication to the President of the United States reporting on the operations of the department for the past two years, which I think is of value to Senators, and I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is it?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is a report of the Postmaster General to the President of the United States.

There being no objection, the report was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

THE REGENERATION OF THE AMERICAN POSTAL SYSTEM.
BIENNIAL REPORT MARCH 4, 1921, TO MARCH 4, 1923.

The story in a nutshell.

In 1920–21 the postal deficit was $81,387,387.08.
In 1921–22 the postal deficit was $60,815,400.36.
In 1922–23 the postal deficit will be $30,000,000.
In 1923–24 there will be no deficit.

FEBRUARY 26, 1923.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am pleased to transmit a summary of the important changes in the operation of the Post Office Department during your administration:

A complete regeneration of the Postal System has been effected during the past two years. From March 4, 1921, when the new administration assumed control of the management of the Post Office Department, until March 4, 1923, a policy of reconstruction and rehabilitation has been relentlessly pursued, resulting in 123 distinctive achievements.

Confronted with a deficit of $81,387,000 several months after going into power, the reorganization of postal finances became a vital necessity that overshadowed all other problems. Unable to raise the postage charges upon any of the various classes of mail matter to obtain additional revenues to offset the prevailing heavy losses, the only recourse remaining was the institution of rigid economies for the reduction of expenditures. The first step was an unlimited and comprehensive survey of the financial operations of the entire Postal Service. This task, starting in the Post Office Department itself at Washington and extending from the largest to the smallest post office in the country, proved so mammoth that it is not more than half completed, although it has been in progress for 24 months.

The results so far attained have been more than satisfactory. Not only has the whole method of conducting the postal business been revolutionized but a new system based upon modern principles of efficiency has been substituted. Duplication of efforts, different groups of employees doing the same work, endless red tape, indirect routes to accomplish ends that could be reached through direct routes, extravagance and waste in time and labor, concentration of all authority in the department at Washington, thereby stifling the initiative of individual workers in the field, complicated and intricate bookkeeping, and many other antiquated practices of handling postal affairs have been definitely eradicated.

A year after the inauguration of these reforms the postal deficit was reduced to the round sum of $60,000,000 due almost in every respect to the economies consummated both upon a wholesale and retail scale. Continuing this policy unflaggingly through the present fiscal year, it is a positive certainty that the deficit will be further reduced to a sum around $30,000,000, with every prospect that the ensuing fiscal year will see it wiped out of existence. The following epitome gives some of the approximate savings that have been successfully put into effect:

Payment of claims to railroads saved by legal department	$15,750,000
Through cancellation of stamped-envelope contract	6,250,000
In the reorganization of larger post offices of country	2,000,000
In clerical force of Railway Mail Service by reorganization	1,980,000
By complete change in methods of purchasing postal supplies	1,500,000
In release of 740 employees of department at Washington	1,200,000
In cost of railroad transportation of the mails	1,000,000
In pay connected with the railway post office car service	900,000
In the cost of the purchase of motor-vehicle accessories	500,000
As result of new manufacturing methods in mail-equipment shops	500,000
In cost of mail messenger service taken over from railroads	410,000
Through four-year contracts for star-route service	200,000
Profit through advantageous purchase of foreign exchange	125,000
Through manufacture by mail-equipment shops of facing tables	110,000
Through adoption of standard types of motor vehicles for service	100,000
By establishing 25 central shops to repair motor vehicles	100,000
By using surplus supplies of other departments of Government	86,000
By the elimination of certain unnecessary stamped envelopes	53,000
In receipts of philathetic stamp agency from sale of unused stamps	30,000

Equally important as the postal finances has been the question of the restoration of an efficient mail service to the American public. Due principally to careless handling of the mails, tardiness in its dispatch, and indifference as to whether delays occurred in its delivery, the solution of this problem resolved itself into a revival of the morale of the 339,000 workers of the Postal Service that had fallen to a low ebb.

Executives of the department directed their efforts toward this end. Employees throughout the country were invited to present their grievances to postmasters of their particular offices and the postmasters were instructed to rectify existing wrongs wherever possible. The Postmaster General himself lent a sympathetic ear to all complaints coming from the rank and file, and through unbiased investigations conducted at his own initiative and direction many injustices and inequities responsible for widespread discontent and dissatisfaction were elminated.

The human element was recognized. Justice tempered with leniency supplanted discipline harshly administered. A spirit of partnership in the Postal Service, combined with pride of accomplishment in expediting the mails, was inculcated into the personnel. A campaign unprecedented in the history of the Post Office Department was started and prosecuted to improve not only the physical welfare of the postal workers but assure their health and comfort while engaged in the performance of their duties. Insanitation, congestion, and inadequate lighting were made the subject of searching inquiries.

Speeding the mails became the slogan of the present administration. By airplanes, by harbor boat, by motor truck, by quick railroad connection, and by new devices for facilitating the postmarking and sorting of the mails, their dispatch, and transportation were accelerated to a remarkable degree.

CONFERENCE CONVENTIONS SOLVE INTRICATE PROBLEM.

For the last three decades the greatest problem confronting the Post Office Department has been its inability to effect a direct and personal contact between the executives at Washington and the workers in the field. As the Postal Service expanded into the biggest business organization in the world the only intercourse between the rank and file of employees and the officials has been through form letters, routine correspondence, and formal instructions couched in legal phraseology.

The present administration found the solution of this perplexing question in the organization of an annual conference convention of postal workers in each State. These conference conventions provide for the assembling of postmasters, carriers, clerks, and other employees at some central point in each State on a given date, when the Postmaster General or his Assistant Postmasters General come from Washington to personally discuss postal questions with them.

A special feature of these meetings is an "open forum," when the postal workers may take the floor and present their grievances direct to the Postmaster General or the other executives of the department.

Up to this time the following conference conventions have been held, with attendances at each one of them ranging from 1,000 to 2,500, and the schedule calls for similar gatherings in every other State:

Portland, Me.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Denver, Colo.; Topeka, Kans.; Omaha, Nebr.; Des Moines, Iowa; Kansas City, Mo.; Richmond, Va.; Nashville, Tenn.; Winston-Salem, N. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Atlanta, Ga.; Jacksonville, Fla.; New Orleans, La.; Vicksburg, Miss.; Birmingham, Ala.; and Hartford, Conn.

Through these 18 conference conventions held during the last six months over 30,000 postal workers in these States have been able to come into confidential relations with the high executives of the department, the Postmaster General alone greeting over 16,000 of them. When the full complement of State meetings is held during the coming year, followed by others in subsequent years, it is figured that every one of the 339,000 employees of the entire postal system will have talked personally to the Postmaster General and the Assistant Postmasters General, an opportunity heretofore unknown in the history of the department.

FIRST INTERNATIONAL POSTAL CONFERENCE HELD WITH CANADA.

Mailing facilities and conveniences to both the people of the United States and Canada were increased to a marked degree by the first international postal conference at Ottawa, Ontario, December 4, 1922. Heading the American delegation was the Postmaster General, accompanied by other executives of the Post Office Department, while the Canadian representatives included Postmaster General Charles Murphy and other leading postal officials. The attitude of mutual reciprocity that developed at the conference brought immediate results and a new postal agreement was completed within two days after the opening of the meeting. This treaty was later signed by President Harding and went into effect on the 1st of January, 1923.

A summary of the benefits in improved mailing exchange follows:

Maximum weight of parcel-post packages increased from 4 pounds 6 ounces to 11 pounds.

Maximum indemnity on registered articles originating in either country and addressed to the other fixed at $25 instead of old Canadian domestic limitation of $9.65.

Parcels passing between the two countries insured for $100 as limit, insurance to be paid by country in which loss or pilfering takes place.

Established special-delivery service between United States and Canada with international rate of 20 cents in addition to ordinary postage.

Complete cooperation arranged between post-office inspectors to prevent operation of mail frauds across the borders of the two nations as well as adoption of uniform methods in detecting thefts.

Transportation of Canadian parcel-post packages destined for South America over routes across the United States. Free transit of closed mail through both countries.

The direct handling of inquiries between postmasters of Canada and the United States, eliminating the necessity of these communications going through the several bureaus of each department, as was the old practice.

POST OFFICE BUILDING PROGRAM IS INAUGURATED.

A public-building program destined to save the American taxpayers millions of dollars annually by the discontinuance of the present payment of high rental for leased properties result in the construction of post offices in cities only where actually needed and bring about ideal working conditions for postal workers by relieving congestion and insanitation, is now being vigorously agitated by the present administration. To the present administration belongs the credit for having discovered that the Government is leasing hundreds of buildings for postal use throughout the country, suffering heavy losses through exorbitant rentals, when by the adoption of the simple plan of borrowing money at 4 per cent, purchasing the necessary site, and the erecting of its own buildings, the unearned increment of gain now going to the landlords would go into the Public Treasury.

No less than five lengthy communications recommending the abolition of the present leasing policy have been sent to Congress urging that immediate steps be taken to curtail the $12,000,000 annual drain for leased postal buildings, which grows greater each year, by the substitution of a Government ownership of post offices program.

The serious and acute shortage of space for conducting postal business in innumerable cities where postal employees have been compelled to work in stuffy basements and where parcel-post packages are being handled upon sidewalks instead of indoors has been urgently pressed to the attention of the National Legislature with appeals for prompt relief. Communities have been named specifically, showing that the most minute investigation has been conducted by the Post Office Department. A total of 165 cities of the United States were cited to Congress where additional buildings were needed, giving the exact amount of appropriation necessary to cover the requirements of both the Postal Service and other branches of the Government. These later recommendations were contained in joint communications from the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury.

COMPLETE REORGANIZATION OF LARGER POST OFFICES.

One hundred of the larger post offices of the country, serving millions of patrons and employing thousands of postal workers, are being made the subject of special investigations by trained experts. Already sums mounting into several millions of dollars have been saved by the rearrangement of working schedules, reassignments of forces, and elimination of incompetent and inefficient supervisory officers. In one office alone $300,000 was cut from the pay roll; in another $500,000; and in a third now being surveyed it is estimated that a $1,000,000 economy will be effected. Reorganization of these larger post offices that handle 65 per cent of the entire postal business is being accomplished without impairing or curtailing the service to the public.

SERVICE RELATIONS COUNCILS ORIGINATED.

Two years ago a new nation-wide organization started with a membership of nothing; to-day it numbers 140,000 members in 1,049 chapters from Portland, Me., to Los Angeles, and is growing rapidly. This organization was created by the present administration to revive the morale of the personnel of the Postal Service and was built up under the Welfare Bureau. Through it postal employees are invited to partnership in the development of the Postal Service. The response from the members of the service was immediate and enthusiastic. Soon the organization outgrew the conception of "welfare," so the title was changed to service relations to suit the broader purpose it has achieved. The 1,049 chapters are known as councils, of which 784 are Local Service Relations Councils in first and second class post offices, and 265 are County Service Relations Councils in the rural districts. These councils, composed of representatives of the various classes of employees, make suggestions to the postmaster for the improvement of the service and working conditions. In turn, they cooperate with the postmaster in promoting the various campaigns and aims of the service. A National Service Relations Council, composed of representatives of the employees' associations and the Director of Service Relations, representing the Post Office Department, make up the national committee of the service relations organization.

WORKERS RELEASED ON LOCAL AND STATE HOLIDAYS.

Postmasters throughout the country were authorized to permit postal employees in their post offices to participate in all State and local holidays. Previous to the issuance of these instructions by the Postmaster General, it has been the custom for workers to observe only national legal holidays. The change in policy provides that whenever business is suspended in any locality due to a local or State holiday, postmasters shall retain only the necessary force in the post office to meet the reasonable requirements of the service, allowing as many employees as possible their freedom from regular duties.

MAIL RECEPTACLES AT HOMES FACILITATE MAIL.

Probably the most far-reaching and permanent movement to facilitate the delivery of mails ever initiated in the Postal Service was the campaign for the installation by householders of mail receptacles at their front doors. Started in the summer of 1922, this crusade was pushed energetically by the Post Office Department through postmasters all over the country. So successfully was it conducted that many cities of larger size reported that all homes within their corporate limits had been equipped with either mail boxes or door slots within a few months after the inception of the movement. Hundreds of letter carriers also succeeded in inducing the full complement of patrons on their routes to provide these conveniences at their residences within a short period of time.

Estimates compiled and submitted by the Postmaster General to the public during the course of the campaign showed that the immense sum of $5,350,000 would be saved in the time of the 35,000 carriers formerly wasted in stopping at front doors, ringing door bells, and waiting for responses from householders in order to deliver mail. Another advantageous feature of particular appeal was the elimination of the necessity of patrons going to the door every time the mail man called.

Originally the 1st of January, 1923, was the final date when the delivery of mail would cease at homes not providing receptacles, but owing to the inability of manufacturers to supply the heavy demand for mail boxes the time limit was advanced to the 1st of March, 1923. Reports received by the department at the close of this comprehensive plan to increase the efficiency of the Postal Service indicate that there have been few delinquencies and that practically every home throughout the United States is now equipped with either a mail box or a door slot.

ECONOMIES IN RAILWAY SPACE.

Within the past year an annual reduction in the cost of railway post office car pay equaling $900,000 has been made by the Railway Mail Service without delay or interruption in handling the mails. This has been possible by an intensive study and an exact matching up of the transportation needs of the service. By a similar study of the needs as to storage space for handling mail en route it has been possible to effect material economies in many instances or has made it possible to handle the increased flow of mails without additional expense. Any economies which have been effected, however, have been eliminated by the increased flow of mails on other routes, so that there has been no actual reduction in the annual rate of expenditure. Nevertheless, without this reorganization, increased expenditures to handle increased business would have resulted.

DECENTRALIZATION POLICY NOW AN ACCOMPLISHED FACT.

Elimination of tortuous red tape, causing endless waste and delay in administration, was effected through the adoption of a policy of decentralization, the result of which has been the establishment of a miniature post office department in each State, known as a central accounting post office. Fifty-two of them have been organized and are in full operation throughout the country. These central accounting offices conduct the postal affairs of their respective territories, serving their post offices with promptness and dispatch almost incredible in comparison with the old method of handling all postal business in the department at Washington. The new system also changed accounting in post offices, permitting postmasters to finance themselves from their receipts instead of sending the money to the department and then having it returned to them through vouchers to cover their expenses. Rendition and auditing of half a million money-order accounts was abolished and these activities were transferred to the central accounting offices. Instituted with absolutely no extra cost, decentralization resulted in the release of 740 employees of the department at Washington, thereby saving $1,200,000 annually. A summary of the functions of the central accounting post offices follows:

Auditing of quarterly accounts of postmasters.

Adjusting and payment of parcel-post claims on damaged C. O. D. matter.

Settlement of claims on insured parcel-post packages sent through mails.

Distribution of supplies, including stamps, to all post offices.

Reviewing trip reports of rural route carriers and making pay deductions.

Answering routine inquiries and other correspondence of postmasters.

Besides simplifying the entire business organization of the Postal System, the organization of these 52 central accounting post offices has saved incalculable time and labor. By the distribution of supplies through them, postmasters may receive necessary stamps or stamped paper within 24 hours after filing their requisitions, while under the old order of things it sometimes took from a week to 10 days.

NEW DESIGNS FOR SERIES OF STAMPS.

In order to eliminate errors in the sale of stamps because of their similarity and to assist postal clerks throughout the service in detecting short-paid matter an entire new series of stamps, 21 in number, has been issued. Previously the various denominations were almost identical in appearance with portraits of either George Washington or Benjamin Franklin upon them, and with only a slight variation in color. The new series, regarded as a masterpiece in the art of engraving, were so designed that every one of the stamps had upon its face a different portrait or subject, with a distinctive contrast in the colors. The only change in denomination was the abandonment of the 13-cent stamp. A complete list of the revised designs follows:

Franklin, 1 cent.
Washington, 2 cents.
Lincoln, 3 cents.
Martha Washington, 4 cents.
Roosevelt, 5 cents.
Garfield, 6 cents.
McKinley, 7 cents.
Grant, 8 cents.
Jefferson, 9 cents.
Monroe, 10 cents.
Hayes, 11 cents.
Cleveland, 12 cents.
Indian Head, 14 cents.
Statue of Liberty, 15 cents.
Yosemite Valley, 20 cents.
Niagara Falls, 25 cents.
Buffalo, 30 cents.
Arlington Amphitheater, 50 cents.
Lincoln, $1.
United States Capitol, $2.
American Head, $5.

Already nine of these new stamps have been issued and will be in general use as soon as the old supply of stamps is exhausted at the various post offices of the country. The other 12 designs of the series are expected to be placed upon sale within the next few months. It is estimated that thousands of dollars will be saved the Government in revenue through the eradication of mistakes and in detecting short-paid mail matter. Cost of the die proofs necessary to manufacture these new stamps has been wiped out entirely by the heavy sales to stamp collectors for which the department renders no service.

RURAL ROUTE SERVICE EXTENDED TO MILLIONS.

No steps have been left untaken in extending the beneficences of rural mail delivery to the farming populations of the country. A total of 741 new rural routes were added during the past two years, giving daily mail facilities to 381,000 people. In addition, by the lengthening and readjusting of over 4,000 existing rural routes, some 263,000 inhabitants of farms were provided with increased service.

These changes had the direct effect of giving every modern postal convenience to more than 700,000 persons, bringing the number of rural routes in full operation to 44,186, supplying mail to approximately 6,425,000 families or 29,742,000 individuals living in rural districts. Particular efforts were also made to supply mail to farming sections lacking in transportation and railroad advantages by horse-drawn and motor vehicles, with the result that the number of star mail routes were increased to 10,715, involving annual travel aggregating 83,208,656 miles.

TWO-CENT RATE FOR WESTERN HEMISPHERE.

As a result of the Pan American postal convention, initiated and negotiated by the present administration, the 2-cent stamp is now the postal passport practically everywhere in the Western Hemisphere. All nations of North and South America, with the exception of Venezuela, Chile, the colonies of Dutch Guiana and French Guiana, and the island of Martinique, are now parties to the Pan American postal convention signed at Buenos Aires September 15, 1921, which provides for the extension of the domestic rate of the signatory nations. Ratification of the convention is now being considered by Venezuela and Chile, and if they agree to it, American citizens will be able to send an ounce letter for 2 cents to every independent State and all British colonies in the New World. The postal congress also adopted a parcel post convention, which is now in effect generally in the Western Hemisphere. American shippers receive substantial benefits by the terms of the agreement, since it increased the weight limit on articles.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT REDEEMS SAVINGS STAMPS.

More than $400,000,000 out of $550,000,000 worth of war savings stamps maturing January 1, 1923, which have been redeemed thus far have been handled by the Post Office Department. Of this amount about $65,000,000 worth were exchanged for new Treasury certificates. More than 50,000 cases of redemption requiring special procedure, such as claims on account of lost registered certificates, payment of certificates belonging to deceased owners, and so forth, have been adjusted to date. During the calendar year $336,232,470 worth of Treasury savings certificates were issued to postmasters. The work of handling the redemption of the war savings certificates has been so large as to nearly overwhelm the Postal Service, causing both postmasters and employees in the field and the department to work many hours overtime. Relatively few cases of delay, however, have occurred.

NEW YORK CITY MAIL DELIVERY EXPEDITED.

Four important changes in Postal Service and equipment have resulted in a speeding up of mail deliveries in New York City. The changes include the reestablishment of the pneumatic-tube service, the reopening of the Hudson Terminal Station, improved harbor-boat service, and the direct delivery from early morning trains to stations in the financial district of registered mail for that district. The pneumatic-tube service was resumed after an abandonment of four years. Pouches of registered mail for the financial district arriving on trains between 4.30 and 8.30 a. m. are sent direct to postal stations in the financial district instead of the general post office, thus permitting the banks to put the money through the clearing house on the date of its arrival, instead of the following day. By taking incoming foreign mail from steamers at quarantine, a saving of from 15 to 20 hours is made in this class of mail, besides reducing street congestion by docking the harbor boats at Pier 72, North River. The reopening of the Hudson Terminal Station with 16,000 additional feet of space also provides better mail facilities for lower Manhattan.

AIR-MAIL SERVICE WINS 1922 HONORS.

Transcontinental air-mail service of the Post Office Department, in recognition of its performance, has been awarded the honor of making the "greatest achievement in American aviation in the year 1922" by the National Aeronautic Association. Men concerned with the progress of aviation are also agreed in the opinion that the air-mail service, operating the longest route in the world, is making the most remarkable demonstration of the commercial possibilities of aircraft to be found in this country or in Europe. For making "the greatest achievement in American aviation" for last year, by flying nearly 2,000,000 miles on the mail route without a single fatal accident, the personnel of the air-mail service were given the Collier trophy, which goes with the award.

Experiments looking toward the establishment of night service on the mail route have reached a point where postal officials are convinced of the practicability of such service. Night flying service between Chicago and Cheyenne, Wyo., will make it possible to send letters from New York to San Francisco in 28 or 30 hours. Emergency landing fields have been located every 25 miles on the route between Chicago and Cheyenne and beacons are being installed on them to guide pilots. The date for starting night service is set for early summer.

A new up-to-date airplane repair and construction shop has been erected on the Chicago air mail field.

STANDARD ILLUMINATION FOR ENTIRE POSTAL SYSTEM.

At the request of the Postmaster General, a survey of the lighting of post offices of the country was undertaken and completed by the office of industrial hygiene and sanitation of the United States Public Health Service. A report resultant from this survey advocated the establishment of a standard system of illumination for post offices, the examination of the eyes of postal workers by specialists every year, and the abolition of work in the basements of post office buildings. Information was obtained further to the effect that tests in one post office alone resulted in a saving of from 5 to 7 per cent in clerk hire by the installation of improved lighting facilities, and that the adoption of a similar system of illumination in all post offices would bring about an economy running into a large sum annually. Other valuable knowledge tending to safeguard the eyes of postal workers was developed through this survey.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS GIVEN POSTAL WORKERS.

As a result of an arrangement made by the Postmaster General with the United States Public Health Service, free medical examinations were offered to postal workers. The plans call for the examination of 32,000 employees annually at 61 different stations located in various cities of the country. Several tests conducted at principal postal centers showed that many workers were suffering with various physical defects of which they were not aware until examined by surgeons of the United States Public Health Service. It was also revealed that these deficiencies led to inefficient work, which were later corrected through proper attention.

MAIL MESSENGER SERVICE ASSUMED.

Service for carrying the mails between railroad stations and post offices by mail messenger has been rapidly taken over from the railroads. This action has materially improved the service and at the same time effected a saving in cost. Under orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, railroad companies are separately compensated for any such side service required of them. This annual rate paid the railroads for this service, according to last figures, was more than $4,000,000. Practically one-half of that service has been assumed by the Post Office Department, with an approximate saving of $410,000.

SEAPLANE SERVICE EXPEDITES THE MAILS.

Seaplane service was reestablished between Key West, Fla., and Habana, Cuba, January 11, 1923, and provides for a trip to Habana six times a week. Letters are carried exclusively, and are advanced from 7 to 12 hours in delivery at Habana. Seaplane service has been inaugurated between New Orleans and Pilottown, thereby connecting outgoing steamers from New Orleans at Pilottown with mails received after the departure of the steamer from New Orleans and receiving mails at Pilottown from incoming steamers and advancing their delivery. The contract for seaplane service between Seattle, Wash., and Victoria, British Columbia, has been renewed, thereby continuing in operation the facilities by which important incoming trans-Pacific letters are expedited in delivery from 3 to 20 hours and outgoing letters are advanced from 2 to 28 days.

NEW CHICAGO MAIL TERMINAL OPENED.

The world's greatest mail terminal—two blocks long, six stories high, and 80 feet wide—was opened in Chicago at the beginning of 1923 to consolidate the mail activities of this important transportation center of the Nation. This new terminal has equipment capable of handling the postal business for the present and for years to come. Four miles of belt conveyor, the longest system ever installed, rapidly carry incoming mail to distributors and deliver sacked mail to spiral chutes leading to the mail cars. It is conservatively estimated that 600 per cent increase in efficiency, chiefly through the use of machinery adapted for parcel post, is effected in Chicago postal operations in the new building. The new, specially designed distribution system constitutes a revolution in the methods of handling parcel post, and when in full operation has a capacity of 100,000 sacks per hour. On the track over which the terminal is built, 42 cars receive mail at one time.

SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAYS FOR POST-OFFICE WORKERS.

Saturday half holidays have been granted postal employees. The privilege, first extended during the summer season only, was later amplified to include the entire year. The result of this policy, adopted to increase the morale of the personnel of the department, is the release of many workers from their duties at post offices throughout the country on Saturdays providing there is little or no service for them to perform. The detention of employees also at their posts when stores and business houses are closed is no longer practiced.

SEAPOST SERVICE UPON TWO OCEANS.

To expedite the delivery of mails received from foreign countries, provision was made for the establishment of seapost service on steamships plying between Europe, Porto Rico, the Canal Zone, and the United States. This service is now in operation on nine steamships sailing between New York and the Canal Zone, and three steamships sailing between New York and Porto Rico. Joint arrangements with France, Great Britain, and Germany, with a view to a further extension of this service, are anticipated. United States seapost service has been established for the first time on steamships sailing from Pacific ports, the service having been inaugurated November 11, 1922, and is in operation on five steamers. By means of the seapost service, mails are distributed in post offices on steamers so that on arrival the time formerly required to distribute the mails is utilized in effecting delivery.

DOUBLE MAIL BOX DESIGNED FOR THE PUBLIC.

A double mail box, which will provide for separation of local and out-of-town mail as the mailer puts his letters in the street-corner box, is now being designed by the Post Office Department. Effective use of this type of receptacle will speed up local and out-of-town mails and will cut down expense for post-office distribution. Successful tests of 14 experimental double mail boxes put up on a business street of Washington, D. C., showed that the separation was 94 per cent perfect. Single boxes will be replaced by double boxes in the business districts of all large cities if further tests are as successful as the first.

COMBATS SWINDLING OF PUBLIC THROUGH MAILS.

An energetic campaign prosecuted to protect the public from the operation of hundreds of new and unique swindling schemes has resulted in the arrest during the past fiscal year of 3,153 persons, of whom 1,756 were convicted on evidence secured by post-office inspectors. It is estimated that during the present administration the number of arrests exceeds 6,000, with convictions in excess of 3,500. While it is impossible to estimate the amount of money which would have been collected by these fraudulent concerns had they been allowed to continue to operate, the magnitude may be realized when it is stated that between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 were mulcted from the innocent victims during one year by the schemers before their arrest and conviction.

TREMENDOUS SAVINGS IN PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES.

Sweeping changes in the method of purchasing supplies have earned approximately $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 during the past two years. These changes consisted of canceling many contracts at war-time prices and in the elimination of long-term contracts covering every variety of supplies necessary for the Post Office Department. Modern business methods of making purchases on the open market when prices were at low levels were also successfully put into effect. The result has been the return to the Public Treasury of unexpended appropriations amounting to $1,000,000 and a reduction in the annual appropriation of some $500,000.

STAMP AGENCY'S PROFIT $31,000 FOR FIRST YEAR.

Stamp collectors responded to the Post Office Department's offer to sell them United States stamps direct with purchases totaling $46,576.39 at the close of the first year's business. This income paid for the entire new issue of stamps and for the operating expenses of the sales office, known as the philatelic agency, and left a clear profit of $31,000. In this way old stamps, which ordinarily would be destroyed, are made to produce revenue for the Post Office Department.

SMALL-SIZE LETTERS AND POSTAL CARDS TABOOED.

Discouragement of the use of small cards and envelopes resulted in a material diminution in the number of these "postal pests." Objection to the miniature mail is manifold. Because of their size they can not be run through the canceling machines and must be stamped by hand; the postmark frequently obliterates the address; there is insufficient space for forwarding addresses; they can not be tied satisfactorily with standard-size letters; they are easily lost and require considerable extra handling.

WARFARE ON MAIL BANDITS SUCCESSFUL.

The relentless warfare waged by the Post Office Department against mail bandits has had its effect. Major mail robberies which totaled more than $6,000,000 for the year ending April 1, 1921, were cut down to $79,000 for 11 months of this year. Post-office inspectors recovered approximately one-half of the loot two years ago, and of the thefts for the last 11 months $54,600 has been regained, leaving a net loss of a little more than $24,000. The policy of arming postal employees and of placing military guards in railway mail cars for a period has effectually stopped the wave of mail robberies. There are now in the hands of railway mail clerks, postal messengers, and other employees 40,000 revolvers and 300 shotguns to be used against mail bandits. In the period of 11 months there have been no major train holdups and no major truck holdups.

RURAL ROUTE CARRIERS CONDUCT CENSUS OF PIGS.

Rural route carriers of the Postal Service made a complete enumeration of the pig and sow production of the United States. This census, conducted after other administrations had refused to cooperate with the Department of Agriculture, was conducted in every State of the Union, rural route carriers filling and distributing over 500,000 questionnaires to farmers. The result was the first accurate statistics upon the number of swine ever collected.

INTENSIVE STUDY OF WORKING CONDITIONS.

That more floor space and better lighting and ventilating systems are needed in thousands of post offices was revealed by a thorough survey of physical working conditions. As a result of this investigation, in the course of which 4,500 reports were secured from postmasters and service relations councils, the cooperation of the Treasury Department, which controls public buildings, has been secured to rectify these conditions. Many improvements in sanitation have already been accomplished at little expense.

SPEED GOVERNORS PUT ON AUTO MAIL TRUCKS.

The installation of speed governors on each of th 4,453 motor vehicles in the Postal Service has resulted in an appreciable diminution in the number of accidents, thus bringing about a considerable saving in the amount of repair expense as well as reducing the jeopardy to human life. Statistics compiled by the police department at Philadelphia show that during the past year, of 265 deaths resulting from motor accidents, only one was caused by a mail truck, while of 7,613 persons injured mail trucks were responsible for but 12, although there are 195 in the Philadelphia service.

REST BARS PURCHASED TO RELIEVE DISTRIBUTERS.

Rest bars numbering many thousands furnished postal employees through the service who are compelled to sort mail continuously at distributing cases for hours at a stretch. Contracts for these rest bars call for their delivery and installation in post offices by the 1st of July, 1923. Many designs were submitted by postal workers, and the one finally adopted was a combination of suggestions from the personnel of the service.

FACING TABLES MADE BY THE DEPARTMENT.

Excessive bids from private contractors on facing tables resulted in a saving of $110,000 within a six-month period when the Postmaster General decided the tables could be made in the department. The best bid from an outside concern was $3,200 for each table. The mail-bag equipment shop has manufactured 50 of them at an approximate cost of $1,000, making a saving of $2,200 on each table.

SPECIAL SHOE PROVIDED FOR LETTER CARRIERS.

A tested high-grade shoe for letter carriers was adopted through the National Service Relations Council of the Post Office Department with the approval of the Postmaster General. The arrangement enables letter carriers to purchase this shoe with its high quality of workmanship, material, and comfort at a cost lower than the prevailing retail prices.

INCREASE IN FORCE OF POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS.

To assure the integrity of the Postal Service and to augment the high administrative standard the Postmaster General made urgent representations to Congress for 100 additional post-office inspectors. Fifty of these were granted by Congress and appointed during the past year. Fifty more were authorized in legislation just enacted and will be appointed after July 1, 1923. This addition to the force will enable the department to close up the tremendous accumulation of depredation, fire, and other cases under investigation by the Inspection Bureau.

SPECIAL CLERKS REDUCED ONE GRADE INSTEAD OF TWO.

The reduction of special clerks one grade instead of two on demerits for minor irregularities or infractions of the regulations has resulted in a greater equity in disciplining this class of employees. Heretofore, as a result of case examinations showing a decrease in the efficiency of a special clerk, it was necessary under the former practice to reduce him two grades.

LARGEST STAR ROUTE OPERATED IN WINTER.

For the first time upon record the Government-operated Price to Vernal star mail route, supplying mail service to the rich Uintah Valley, in Utah, was kept open throughout the winter. Two 10-ton caterpillar trucks cleared a path through the heavy snow for the fleet of 27 trucks carrying daily mail in and out of this territory, unsupplied by any railroad communication.

MAIL BOXES MADE AT WASHINGTON NAVY YARD.

For the first time in history street letter boxes are being made by a branch of the Government service instead of by contract. The innovation was instituted to secure more prompt delivery, but it also reduced costs as well as maintaining intact the working organization of the Washington Navy Yard, where the boxes are being made. The initial order was for 10,000 boxes.

GRIEVANCES OF WORKERS MADE SUBJECT OF HEARINGS.

Postal employees having grievances were granted the privilege of appointing committees to present them to the postmaster of their particular office. In such instances postmasters are authorized to rectify unsatisfactory conditions and correct abuses within their power; otherwise they are instructed to report them to the department with appropriate recommendations.

STEEL RAILWAY MAIL CARS PROTECT CLERKS.

The department has insisted on the abolition of wooden railway mail cars for modern steel cars. As many as 91 steel mail cars were provided in a single month for safety for mail clerks in cases of railroad wrecks.

MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR EMPLOYEES OF SERVICE.

In conjunction with the Supplement to the Postal Guide, a monthly magazine for postal workers was started. This magazine, which contains illustrated articles of special interest to the personnel, is the first of its kind in the service and has resulted in lessening the monotony of the regular post-office publications.

SENIORITY OBSERVED THROUGHOUT SERVICE.

In order to prevent favoritism which breeds discontent, the principle of seniority has been maintained in post offices. While efficiency and merit are still held preeminent, selection of men for promotion is closely allied with seniority. A readjustment of shifts from night to day work according to seniority has also been put into effect.

MAIL EQUIPMENT SHOPS COMPLETELY REORGANIZED.

The mail equipment shops, a Government enterprise for the manufacture of mail sacks, pouches, locks, and other postal equipment, was completely reorganized, producing savings amounting to half a million dollars. Adoption of modern, up-to-date factory methods and standardization of equipment brought increased production at lower costs.

COOPERATION WITH FIRMS TO REVISE MAILING LISTS.

To prevent tremendous waste and avoid rehandling of vast quantities of advertising matter and circulars placed in the mails incorrectly addressed, instructions were issued to postmasters to cooperate with business firms everywhere in the country in revising antiquated mailing lists. Post-office clerks were authorized to give their services to these firms at a charge of 60 cents per hour for this purpose.

COMPREHENSIVE PLAN FOR SELLING POSTAL SERVICE.

Dissemination of information to large users of mail throughout the country to shorten processes of preparing mail for shipment and expedite distribution and dispatch was the first step taken by Postmaster General Work in this plan of selling the Postal Service to the public. Complete publications are to be distributed, giving the minute details of the advantage of the use of the mails as well as the best methods of taking advantage of mailing privileges.

MOTOR VEHICLE SERVICE REORGANIZED.

A reorganization of the motor-vehicle service, involving a standardization program which has reduced from 30 to 8 the different makes of machines, and the establishment of 25 central repair units, has resulted in greatly increased efficiency in the service as well as a substantial reduction in operating costs. There are 4,661 motor vehicles in the service, of which 4,453 are trucks and 208 are motor cycles.

POSTMASTERS NAMED INCLUDE MANY WOMEN.

There have been appointed 9,891 postmasters since March 4, 1921. Of this number 1,320 were ex-service men, 1,611 were women, and 122 were employees who were promoted from the ranks without examination, the latter being an innovation which enabled the department to reward meritorious service. There have been 11,069 fourth-class postmasters appointed also, making a total of 20,960.

SUBSTITUTE EMPLOYEES GIVEN AN EQUAL CHANCE.

Past injustices of probationary appointments were brought to an end through a change in the rules whereby clerks and carriers are given credit for service actually performed. After an equivalent of 1,224 hours as a substitute, or six calendar months as a regular employee, the appointment is made permanent.

RETIREMENT POLICY PERMITS RETENTION.

Forced retirement of postal employees after having reached the retirement age was revoked by the present administration and workers who successfully pass physical examinations showing them to be fit to perform their work may be retained.

ADJUSTMENT OF OVERTIME PAY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Adjustment of inequities in the overtime pay of postal employees has been urged upon Congress by the Postmaster General. Since overtime pay is computed on a basis of 365 days to the year and the regular service on a basis of 306 days, the postal clerk gets 16 per cent less per hour for services performed after his regular tour of duty.

FREE VACCINATION FOR POSTAL WORKERS.

The 339,000 postal employees were offered free vaccination against smallpox, typhoid fever, and paratyphoid at the special request of Postmaster General Work, the inoculations being done by the United States Public Health Service. This is the first effort to counteract the spread of contagious diseases through the handling of the mails.

PURCHASE OF STAMPS AT POINT OF DISPATCH.

Large users of mail maintaining agencies in various cities but purchasing their stamps at their central offices were importuned to buy the stamps for use on mail and parcels at points of dispatch so that postmasters and postal clerks would receive credit for this postal revenue otherwise denied them, thus rectifying an inequitable practice that has been in vogue for some time.

COMPUTING MACHINES INSTALLED IN OFFICES.

The installation in 53 central accounting offices of computing, balancing, and bookkeeping machines for auditing postmasters' accounts has saved thousands of dollars annually. This work was formerly done at the Post Office Department at Washington, the change being made under the decentralization policy of the present administration.

ARMY MOTOR TRUCKS HASTEN CHRISTMAS MAIL.

Through arrangements with the War Department, hundreds of Army motor trucks were used during the holidays to facilitate the handling of the heavy Christmas mail. While gasoline, oil, grease, and repairs were furnished by the Post Office Department, a considerable saving was effected through the use of the borrowed machines over charges that would have accrued from renting vehicles.

REORGANIZATION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

By a complete reorganization of the Railway Mail Service, ultimate economies in the amount of $1,927,000 will be effected in the clerical force. The reorganization has been completed, but some of the changes have not been placed in full operation, so that the full effect of this economy will be more apparent in the future than in past months.

REDUCTION OF NIGHT WORK IN POST OFFICES.

A systematic study of working schedules maintained in larger and middle-sized post offices has been conducted with the result that night work of postal workers, wherever feasible, has been abolished.

$15,750,000 CLAIMS OF RAILROADS DISALLOWED.

Through the determined opposition of the legal department of the Post Office Department before the Interstate Commerce Commission, additional compensation to the railroads for the transportation of the mails amounting to approximately $15,750,000 was disallowed. The question involved was an interpretation of the mail pay order, the contention of the department being finally sustained after argument before the commission.

RETIREMENT ACT EXTENDED TO POST OFFICE LABORERS.

An Executive order extended the privileges and benefits of retirement to all unclassified laborers employed in the post offices throughout the country, who previously had been denied the privileges of the retirement act.

PURCHASE OF EXCHANGE GIVES $130,000 PROFIT.

Through the purchase of foreign exchange in anticipation of settlements of balances on money-order business, the Post Office Department made a profit of $130,000, with only a single loss of $5,000.

NEW STAMPED ENVELOPES CONTRACT SAVES MILLIONS.

Through the cancellation of an existing four-year contract and successful negotiation of a new agreement, an economy of $6,276,000 was effected.

BETTER MAIL SERVICE TO CONVENTION DELEGATES.

Delegates of conventions and other meetings were given better mail service as the result of instructions to postmasters to keep accurate checks on such assemblies and to make unusual efforts to deliver mail to visitors attending them.

ADDITIONAL CHANGES FOR PUBLIC BENEFIT.

Expeditious handling and delivery of daily newspapers through the country put into effect.

Haphazard handling of hotel mail addressed to traveling public supplanted by new system.

Adjustment and payment of indemnity claims accelerated through changes in the old methods.

Stamps ordered sold at registered windows of post offices to end inconvenience to the public.

Complaints against careless postmarking of letters by business firms are rectified.

Instruction of school children in proper method of addressing letters started in many cities.

Extraordinary vigilance by postal workers to protect reading matter for blind sent through mails.

Postmasters instructed to participate in civic affairs of their respective communities as part of their duties.

Extra-quality envelopes with superior grade of paper placed on sale to supply public demand.

Post offices and postal stations equipped with conspicuous signs for benefit of the public.

Ruling puts end to practice of placing labels on packages permitting them to be opened before payment of C. O. D. charges.

Box and refrigerator cars mustered into service to handle immense volume of Christmas mails.

Postmaster General authorizes the sale of Christmas tuberculosis seals in lobbies of post offices for first time.

Time extended for credit given postal workers for military service during World War.

A new policy grants postal employees leaving the service the leaves of absence due them.

In computing sick leaves of postal workers, Sundays and holidays were excluded by new law.

Automatic promotion of postal employees absent on account of illness adopted as policy by department.

Special study to determine the effect of dust in mail sacks and pouches upon health of postal employees.

Detailed first-aid instructions in pamphlet form distributed for use of postal workers.

Cafeterias and cooperative buying among postal workers provided for in many post offices.

Program inaugurated for proper swing room and women's rest room accommodations in post offices.

Saving and loan associations instituted through local council of service relations at many post offices.

Mail carriers provided with cap number or badges showing number of routes and post offices.

Rural route carriers throughout Postal System paid semimonthly instead of monthly.

First-aid equipment of 1,800 boxes and 115 chests distributed to post offices to protect workers in emergency.

Finger printing of all postal savings depositors as precaution against defrauding post-office clerks.

Training school for new postmasters organized and successfully conducted at central accounting offices.

Early-mail campaign results in transferring many postal workers from night to day work.

Postal employees not engaged in sorting mail relieved from necessity of taking case examinations.

Reorganization of Government-owned garages throughout the service saves thousands of dollars.

Discontinuance of several hundred blank forms promotes efficiency and reduces lost motion.

Unprecedented transportation difficulties during railroad strike overcome through ingenuity of postal executives and workers.

A locking mechanism to prevent safe robberies installed in many post offices for the first time.

Cost of 2,080,000 pounds of paper purchased in 1922 reduced by more than 15 per cent.

Chief engineer of Post Office Department appointed to supervise mechanical equipment and labor-saving devices.

Finger printing in New York City post office reveals 49 workers with criminal records.

Safety locking device designed to prevent looting of mail pouches containing parcel-post packages put in general use.

Cooperation with other departments of the Government in printing of post and rural route maps.

Purchase of paint for conducting tests in 10 different cities results in saving time from two to three days.

More Democrats than Republicans appointed postmasters in many Southern States during past two years.

Material saving effected in connection with the production of post-route maps of various States.

Improved mail bag manufactured for purpose of lessening load of city letter carriers.

Device invented by employees of mail-equipment shops accelerates grinding of locks and caps.

Completion of arrangement whereby unloading of canvas at Atlanta, Ga., will be done without expense to the department.

Installation of 12,000-gallon gasoline tank at Boston, thereby reducing cost of gasoline.

Correction of objectionable practices in addressing and preparing second-class matter for mailing.

Transfer of postal savings accounts from one post office to another put into effect.

Development of radio communication both in transmitting messages and broadcasting to general public.

Rural-route carriers given permission to assist State authorities in distributing food to starving birds.

Negotiations for establishment of international money-order business with Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria started.

United States postal agency at Shanghai, China, closed in accordance with Limitation of Armament Conference.

Consummation of agreement with China for exchange of postal money orders between two countries.

Installation of public telephones in post-office lobbies for the convenience of the public.

Moving-picture films instructing public as to proper method of addressing mail displayed in theaters.

Separation of mail destined for foreign countries effected in railroad post offices to facilitate dispatch.

Parcel-post service established throughout the Belgian Congo in Africa by way of England.

Increase of maximum weight limit on parcel-post packages exchanged with Poland.

Time for reinstatement of civil-service employees into service after resignation extended to five years instead of one.

A FORECAST.

Notwithstanding the many advantageous changes enumerated above, there is still much to be done in placing the Post Office Department upon such a basis that its operation will be conducted along sound business principles. Handling the vast sum of $3,000,000,000 annually, with the amount increasing by leaps and bounds, the problems of the future are even more difficult than those of the past.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW POSTMASTERS.

The fundamental of good post-office service is the postmaster. The theory of the Executive order of May 10, 1921, appeared sound, but practice has proved it to be unsatisfactory alike to the uncompromising civil-service advocate and to those antagonistic to it. Delays from the Civil Service Commission's participation in examinations; unfamiliarity with the duties of postmasters; the community strife engendered, often bitter and lasting; embarrassments imposed on Congressmen and Senators, whom custom has charged with recommending postmasters for appointment, with the elimination of the Postmaster General's prerogative of selection from the process; each contributes to the general dissatisfaction with the present method.

The selection of postmasters by the Post Office Department itself, for nomination by the President, is earnestly urged. The postmaster appointment should be no longer regarded as a political perquisite. This department has become the business pride of the Government, and should be conducted on modern business lines. Such is impossible if its managers continue to be selected from those who apply only, by officials not trained to appraise their qualifications for a particular service and who never see the applicants. The continuance of the above referred-to order will not harmonize with the adopted business policy impressed on postmasters.

SUBWAYS AND TUBES A NECESSITY.

The restoration of pneumatic-tube transmission of mail in big cities has been agitated, and it is actually in service in New York City at an annual rental of a half million dollars. Cartridges 6 by 21 inches, propelled by air, bear inadequate relation to the rapid transit of United States mail in cities in its present volume. The department must, as soon as possible, utilize subways or devise overhead transit for mail in volume. Our newly organized engineering division in the department is at work on this question of pressing importance.

CHANGES IN METHODS OF HANDLING PARCEL POST.

Changes in methods of handling parcel post in transit, both by train and vehicle, are rapidly maturing and promise to be comprehensive, effective, and economical. One of the plans under consideration is to divorce the parcel-post business from all other mail matter from an operating point of view, with an arrangement whereby parcel post is to be moved over the railroads every 24 hours instead of the present method. Along with this proposed project is the final movement of parcel post to the town of its destination on fast freight trains, this final freight-train movement to be confined solely to the railway division on which the town of destination is located. By this plan, shipment of parcel-post packages would reach their destination without any delay whatever and at the same time congestion upon passenger trains would be avoided. Another proposition in contemplation is the handling of parcel-post mail at railroad freight houses instead of at post-office buildings.

FOREIGN PARCEL-POST SYSTEM IS COMPLICATED.

The rules and regulations under which parcel post may be sent abroad are multitudinous and complex. The present administration plans in the near future to lend itself to an effort to procure some sort of universal parcel-post regulations for shipment abroad and for receipt of packages from foreign countries, which might eliminate a large number of complications which now exist.

REDUCTION IN RAILWAY-MAIL PAY ANTICIPATED.

The department has presented its case to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the matter of the railroads in the New England section for increase in railway-mail pay and is preparing to present its case in the short-line railroads in Intermountain and Pacific Coast States and electric railway cases. It is believed that the contention of the department in presenting the facts in these cases will not justify increases in rates.

ASCERTAINMENT OF COST OF CARRYING THE MAILS.

The department has been instructed by Congress to ascertain the cost of carrying and handling the several classes of mail matter and of performing the special services. No official ascertainment based upon recent data has been made since 1908, and the investigation and report thereon by the Hughes Commission in 1911. A system of procedure has been devised and $500,000 appropriated. This will furnish important information to the department and Congress.

RURAL DELIVERY WILL BE GREATLY INCREASED.

There are now pending hundreds of cases for the establishment, extension, and increase in frequency of the Rural Delivery Service. Our ambitions include the authorization of mail facilities to every meritorious case as soon as the proper investigation has been conducted. It is also planned, if our recommendations to Congress are enacted into law, to establish motor-vehicle service rural routes of not less than 36 nor more than 75 miles in length. Semiannual inspection of rural routes by postmasters operating out of their post offices is expected to yield better service to patrons.

TO INCREASE OUTPUT OF RURAL ROUTE MAPS.

Several economies of importance are being projected with regard to post-route maps, including the increase in output of rural-route maps, the decrease in the cost of compilation of State maps, and the decrease in the cost of printing of post-route maps. The department is also seeking to secure better results in the mechanical reproduction of worn-out tracings than has been obtained by the process now employed. The exorbitant number of blue prints will be likewise reduced.

HAMPER BASKETS AS SUBSTITUTE FOR SACKS—PARCEL POST.

Use of mail sacks in which to place parcel-post packages for transportation by railroad has proven unsatisfactory and the department has been investigating other receptacles to supplant the canvas sack or pouch. It is probable that tests will be made in the near future of large hamper baskets in which packages may be carried without danger of damage. With a cover fastened by a lock, the shipment will be secure against petty depredation and the baskets when empty will be nested to conserve space. Greater facility in filling and emptying will serve to expedite service and contribute to economy.

The business done by the department is rapidly growing; the number of employees increasing and the cost of operation diminishing. The attitude of the public for which we do business, and the morale of those who do our business for us, are of the very best at the end of this, the first biennial period of your administration.

Respectfully submitted.

HUBERT WORK,
Postmaster General.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I request permission to insert in the RECORD certain resolutions and communications in regard to the coal shortage and counterfeit coal conditions in New England. The Federal Coal Commission may find these communications enlightening as to what the people of New England have had to suffer and endure during the present winter. Of course, it is painfully evident that no legislation will be passed this session, but let us hope for some action in the immediate future that will prevent a recurrence of the hardships described in these communications.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPRINGFIELD WOMEN'S CLUB,
Springfield, Mass., February 26, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WALSH: The Springfield Women's Club has passed the following resolution and asks your help in securing appropriate action:

Whereas the coal strike of 1922, with the resulting shortage and poor quality of coal, has caused acute suffering and much loss of life in Massachusetts, we, the members of the Springfield Women's Club, protest vigorously against a governmental policy which permits industrial strife to bring about such conditions, and urge that immediate steps be taken to prevent the repetition of such a catastrophe, and that copies be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and our United States Senators.

Very sincerely yours,

MARION DUNCAN MCGANN
(Mrs. John N. McGann),
Chairman Legislative Committee.

CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
North Adams, Mass., February 26, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH.

DEAR SIR: The above organization authorized me to communicate with you to the effect that you use as much influence as possible which may bring about some relief in the coal situation, which is in a deplorable condition. There is much suffering here; in fact, all over the Berkshires.

They also went on record as being strongly opposed to the ship subsidy bill. Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

[SEAL.]

WALTER HAIGH, Secretary,
63 Mill Street, Blackinton, Mass.

CITY OF SOMERVILLE, CITY CLERK'S OFFICE,
February 27, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: I am forwarding to you a copy of the resolution passed by the board of aldermen of the city of Somerville relative to the deliveries of coal.

Yours truly,

JASON M. CARSON,
City Clerk.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN, CITY OF SOMERVILLE, MASS.,
February 20, 1923.

Whereas the coal situation in our city is now a most serious matter, and especially the problem of transportation is absorbing the earnest attention of a majority of our citizens: Be it

Resolved, That immediate action be taken by the proper authorities to hasten the deliveries of coal to this city that our citizens may be relieved of the anxiety and suffering consequent to the existing conditions; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to both United States Senators from this State and the Representative to Congress from this district.

A true copy of an order approved February 21, 1923.

Attest:

[SEAL.]

JASON M. CARSON,
City Clerk.

CHICOPEE FALLS, MASS., February 26, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Ward Five Improvement Association of Chicopee Falls wishes to extend to you its commendation upon your stand in regard to the coal situation in New England. It appears as though people outside of New England did not realize the seriousness of the situation, and we, your constituents, depend upon you to keep this matter before them until the crisis is past.

Thanking you for your efforts in this direction in the past and assuring you of our hearty cooperation and support on any like matter in the future, we are,

Sincerely yours,

WARD FIVE IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION,
DAVID R. SPENCE, Secretary.

WEYMOUTH BOARD OF TRADE,
East Weymouth, Mass., February 27, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In behalf of the citizens of Weymouth I most respectfully call to your attention the deplorable condition of our people owing to the lack of coal.

The Weymouth fuel administrator reports no coal on hand nor in sight, and to-night we are having another snowstorm.

May we ask you to record our appeal for relief and our hope that you will do your utmost to impress upon the proper officials the absolute necessity of immediate shipments of coal to New England to relieve the present suffering and anxiety, and may we also suggest that some effort be made to safeguard our people from a repetition of coal shortage in the future.

Respectfully yours,

MICHAEL L. FLYNN, Secretary.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATIONARY ENGINEERS,
Madison, Wis., February 24, 1923.

Hon. Mr. WALSH,
Senator from Massachusetts.

DEAR SIR: I recently received a copy of your bill, S. 4447, and was very much interested by it. It occurred to me that you might be interested in a resolution which was passed by our last State convention and afterwards indorsed by the national body at their convention in Des Moines. A copy of this resolution is inclosed.

While your bill protects the user of anthracite coal would it not be worth while to include in such a measure the protection of the bituminous consumer as well? Such protection would be provided for all consumers by such a bill as suggested in the resolution submitted.

Thanking you for the good work started and begging your kind consideration of that suggestion, I am

Yours very truly,

CALVIN Z. WISE.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATIONARY ENGINEERS,
Madison, Wis., August 10, 1922.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: At the Wisconsin State convention the following resolution was presented by Charles A. Cahill and passed unanimously:

"Resolved by the Wisconsin State Association of the National Association of Stationary Engineers in convention assembled, That this organization is in favor of a national law requiring that all coal produced and shipped by the mines of this country be accompanied by a certified copy of analysis attached to the bill of lading giving the proximate analysis and heat value of the shipment; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the proper Government officials and to each of our Representatives in Congress."

The educational committee are recommending this resolution to the national convention, and ask that each local association instruct its delegates in favor of it.

We feel that it is useless to tell the members of this association the advantages to be gained by a law of this kind, and will simply place the matter before you on its merits.

Fraternally yours,

THE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE,
C. Z. WISE, Secretary.

SCHOOL DEPARTMENT,
Stoneham, Mass., February 21, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: After reading the statement of the President in the Morning Herald I could not refrain from writing him, and have inclosed a copy of the letter.

As you doubtless know, there has been and still is a large amount of suffering in Massachusetts on account of inability to get any kind of fuel to properly warm our homes, and I can not conceive of a man in the position of the President being so poorly informed as to make such a statement as he is said to have made according to the Morning Herald.

I certainly hope that some steps can be taken to alleviate the extreme suffering and bring to the President's attention the true situation. Our local fuel administrator has said that there have been hundreds of people without coal in this town at various times. In a severe New England winter this state of affairs causes considerable suffering.

Thanking you for your courtesies in the past, I am,

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK W. PORTER,
Superintendent of Schools.

FEBRUARY 21, 1923.

His Excellency WARREN G. HARDING,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Boston Herald this morning stated that in your opinion there was no suffering in New England on account of lack of coal, and that if you had even a single case of suffering brought to your attention that you would act immediately.

May I say that in this town I have known of 20 or 30 cases at least within the last two weeks where there has been acute suffering on account of the fact that no fuel of any description could be obtained.

In the home of my assistant in the office, Miss Chase, who resides at 48 Gould Street, they were unable to obtain fuel of any description for over a week, and as a consequence she was out of the office sick with the grippe for two weeks.

Mr. Leon R. Horn, of 98 Franklin Street, has just left my office, and states that he has been able to secure absolutely no coal of any description for the last three weeks and has therefore been unable to heat his home. There is a sick baby in this house, and the doctor states that the sickness was due entirely to lack of heat in the home, and that unless coal can be secured the child will probably develop pneumonia and die.

These are only two typical cases of a number which I could cite and which I should be very glad to bring to your attention if I thought it would relieve the acute suffering from lack of fuel in this town.

There have been more teachers absent from their duty in the public schools during the month of January on account of grippe, caused by unheated homes, than were absent during the entire year of 1922.

Yours respectfully,

Superintendent of Schools.

BOSTON 1, February 23, 1923.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Boston papers credit President Harding with stating that in his opinion the coal shortage in New England is psychological rather than real. Anyone who makes such a statement must be very much misinformed as to the real situation, and it is a satisfaction to the citizens of Massachusetts to know that you and some other people in Washington know the real situation. * * *

My own situation is as follows: I live in a 12-room house, and under ordinary circumstances 11 of the rooms are heated. This requires the use of two furnaces. This winter, however, I have had the second furnace running only in the most extreme weather. I got along, fairly comfortable, until the 1st of February, at which time the question of getting coal became acute, and since then I have used only one furnace and have gradually reduced the number of rooms being heated. A week ago I had about four shovels full of coal left for the furnace and was unable to get any promise from my coal man as to when he could deliver any; that depended entirely upon when he received any. During this time we reduced the portion of the house heated from the furnace to one room. We have a gas log in the dining room, which keeps that room warm, and a fireplace in another room, which we can use, but none of the chambers are heated at all, and only sufficient heat is used to keep the water pipes from freezing. This morning my coal man thinks he may be able to get some coal to me in the course of three or four days. I suppose my coal shortage may be "psychological," but certainly it is mighty uncomfortable. I have been able to get along by using wood.

I happen to know that my experience is by no means an isolated one, and that there are plenty of other homes in my section that are inadequately heated.

It seems to me that under such circumstances reference to the coal shortage as "psychological" is rather out of place.

Again expressing my appreciation of your efforts in endeavoring to get coal into New England, I am,

Yours very truly, LOUIS C. SMITH.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., February 23, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR:

* * * * * * *

I've lived for 40 years in the sacred confines of the University City, and never have I seen or heard of such real suffering as we have had this year. Doctors are as busy as they were in the terrible epidemic of a few years ago. Postmaster Baker had to issue a statement a few days ago regarding the large number of clerks and carriers who were out sick. Here in our plant we get coal (?) by the half ton, and such coal. A neighbor a few doors from us has her bed in the kitchen, and when I questioned her about it, was informed that all the neighbors were living in one room. This morning a leading perfume manufacturer of Boston, who was ordering some labels printed, informed me that he "paid his milkman to get him some bags of coal, because he had a 4-months' old baby in the house and had to have the heat." South Boston school-teachers report a large number of pupils staying away from school, and investigation found that they spend their time along the tracks of the New Haven Road trying to pick up enough coal to make a bag, when the cop isn't looking, thus assimilating such an environment that will be conducive to law and order.

* * * * * * *

Pardon this long epistle, Senator, but the Washington coal expert got me going. Believe me, some people up here are pretty sore. The rent situation is bad enough, but when you have to hand out $18 for a ton of something that you must have to live, and then get handed a lot of trap rock and slate, people naturally get bitter.

* * * * * * *

Anyway, give my regards to the immortal coal expert. Too bad he wasn't up here for the last three weeks of bitter cold weather; streets covered with ice 2 feet thick; horses fagged out after a winter of terrible conditions; sickness everywhere; coalless coal sold by the basket—and they wonder why conditions breed socialists.

Very truly, D. A. BUCKLEY.

CHRIST CHURCH RECTORY,
Springfield, Mass., February 27, 1923.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I am a member of the Women's Club in Springfield and like all the other housekeepers in the city have suffered from the shortage of fuel this winter.

I do not think that our legislators in Washington have yet realized the privations and tragedies of the present situation. We women feel that it is entirely unnecessary and that it is a proper object for legislation. May we count upon you to do your part toward making recurrence of this present situation impossible? What we expect from our representatives is remedial action of a specific nature.

Respectfully yours,

MARION DUNCAN MCGANN
(Mrs. John N. McGann).

BROCKTON, MASS., February 26, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It is my desire and wish, as a tax-paying citizen of the city of Brockton, to send my protest to this Government at Washington, D. C., in regard to the way the working people are being treated in trying to get coal for household use. I have only three hods of coal in my cellar at the present time. Friday I went to many coal dealers and was told the same old story—"We can do nothing for you unless you buy soft coal." It is impossible to bake food in the oven of a household range which is not made to burn soft coal. There are people who are sick and suffering for the want of coal. It is my duty to enter a protest, and I believe that the most reliable way is to address this letter to you. I feel sure you will recognize this protest from one of the many who are unable to buy coal enough to keep one room warm. If you please put my name on your protest list and let others hear of it, you will do me a favor, for which I thank you very much.

Respectfully yours, LOUIS PELLEGRINI,
527 Crescent Street, Brockton, Mass.

KINGSTON, ONTARIO, February 28, 1923.

Senator WALSH of Massachusetts,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I notice by our paper that you have introduced into the House a resolution authorizing the investigation by the Bureau of Mines on the impurities of anthracite coal—I suppose, shipped to this country as well as your own.

On the 6th of September, 1922, we bought from Bailey & Parker, of Albany, N. Y., 5 cars of pea and chestnut coal, for which we paid $8.50 f. o. b. mines (215 tons). On arrival here we found it nothing but slate. We had paid the freight, and, of course, had to accept it.

We repeatedly wrote them, without ever an acknowledgment. The only thing I saw for us to do was to hand pick it all over and try and get rid of it, which we did, and found we had 56 tons of slate and stone and the balance so bad, when we sent it out, every person complained, and even went so far as to go to the police about it. It was almost a complete loss, as well as our freight, on which we had to pay $5.34 per ton. Can anything be done with such people as this? Kindly advise.

Yours truly, W. A. MITCHELL & CO.

BURNLESS COAL.

After a cursory—it needed to be little more than that—examination of the kind of coal that is being sold to unfortunate Massachusetts householders, Representative Bitzer, of Arlington, who was appointed recently by Attorney General Benton for the purpose, reports that the Commonwealth is flooded with so-called coal, mainly composed of slate and rock.

"They are going the limit," he says. "A great deal of the 'coal' which is being sold is known as 'washery.' 'Washery' is the material which comes from the screening of coal gravel and other refuse. At its best it is a very poor quality of fuel. Up to five years ago or so this stuff was never sold by the mine operators. During the war, however, large quantities of it was screened and the best part of it sold to the consumer. Now the Pennsylvanians are screening the former screenings and giving us that."

There is no news in this finding; everybody who burns coal realizes what he is "up against." But to have it brought out once more, and forcibly, by a State investigator may do some good. Incidentally, Mr. Bitzer absolves the retailers from guilt, and he is right. The swindlers are the big operators. If Senator WALSH'S bill to bring them to time shall pass, great will be the joy in the East. And why not?

[From the Boston American, March 1, 1923.]

COUNTERFEIT COAL—MINE OWNERS TO BLAME FOR BLACKENED ROCK WE GET AND SHOULD BE JAILED.

Mr. Jacob Bitzer is a special investigator for Attorney General Benton. The things that he is especially investigating are things that relate to our coal situation. He has already reached a very definite and positive conclusion concerning the quality of the coal which we have been receiving. Scarce as that coal is, as little of it as we get at any price, Mr. Bitzer says that a large part of what we do get would not burn in hell itself.

We quite agree with Mr. Bitzer. It is not coal at all. It is merely blackened by coal dust. It is nothing but stone and slag. For this particular outrage we do not believe that either the coal dealers or the railroads are responsible, although we do believe—in fact, we know—that the railroads are largely responsible for the scarcity of coal.

It is the mine owners who are guilty of shipping to us this miserable counterfeit for coal. They ought to be in jail, and a just government, a real government, would put them there. Men are in jail to-day for outrages one thousand times less than this. It is like a man who unlooses disease germs on a community. To deprive people of coal in the great cities of the North in the winter is exactly like spreading the germs of pneumonia among them.

[From the New York World, February 22, 1923.]

A PROBLEM FOR THE COAL COMMISSION.

Three union presidents, representing the entire anthracite field, have brought specific charges of profiteering in hard coal which deserve the immediate attention of the President's Coal Commission. Admitting that their figures are incomplete, because of the operators' policy of secrecy, the union heads allege that the average overcharge on a ton of anthracite amounts, according to the available data, to $3.61. Of this amount $1.26 is added at the mine, $1 in padded transportation costs, and $1.35 in extra distribution rates. In a year this system would cost the consumer $252,700,000 beyond a legitimate profit, most of which is paid by the householder, who burns the more expensive sizes.

Just how much truth there is in these assertions nobody can say. The Federal Trade Commission was enjoined by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against investigating the books of coal operators. The Coal Commission has not been enjoined, and perhaps it is in a position to find out. If so, it will hardly discover a more pressing question in the whole range of the industry than this of anthracite profits. Anthracite has been so long in the hands of a semitrust, has been so often mined, transported, and sold by the same company, and has paid of late years such enormous dividends that this union data may easily prove correct.

The need for a coal commission which will go fearlessly into a problem at once so controversial and so difficult technically was never more evident. This winter has again proved that the coal industry is not on a satisfactory basis. If the main trouble, or one of the main troubles, is a combination of operators engaged in manipulating wages in order to produce strikes and raise prices it is time the country realized it.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. The bill that was disposed of a minute ago by objection——

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. That is the regular order now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the roll be called.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	Lenroot	Sheppard

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NICHOLSON] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 4413, to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to take up a minute of the Senate's time; every moment is precious; but I must object to anything being considered, if I can prevent it, until this soldiers' bill is disposed of. No more important legislation——

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement.

Mr. ASHURST. I object, Mr. President. I do that because——

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order.

Mr. BROUSSARD presented memorials, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry members of the international institute committee of the Y. W. C. A., of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Keyes bill, providing asylum for Armenian refugees, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions of the Bridgeport League of Women Voters, of Bridgeport; the Fairfield County League of Women Voters, of Stamford; and the Woman's Civics Club of Redding, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring an amendment to the Constitution governing the passage of legislation regulating child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Upham, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution of the Central Cooperative Commission Association, of South St. Paul, Minn., favoring amendments to the packers and stockyards act bringing about better and closer supervision of all marketing agencies, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions of the Minnesota State Federation of National Farm Loan Associations, favoring repeal of the tax-free provision in existing law as applied to joint-stock land bank bonds, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution of the Progressive Republican Club of Minnesota, protesting against invasion of German territory by the French, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Caldwell (Idaho) Commercial Club, favoring passage of the so-called Gooding bill to stabilize the prices of wheat, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lawton, N. Dak., praying for the prompt passage of legislation fixing a minimum price on wheat, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation stabilizing the prices of farm products, especially wheat, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution of the Caldwell (Idaho) Commercial Club, favoring the passage of the so-called Gooding bill, to stabilize the prices of wheat, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
Office of the Secretary of State.

United States of America, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, F. E. Lucas, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled Joint Resolution No. 23, senate, of the Seventeenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original Senate Joint Resolution No. 6, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office and is a full, true, and correct transcript of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 27th day of February, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL.]

F. E. LUCAS,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS, Deputy.

Enrolled Joint Resolution No. 23, Senate, Seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

Senate joint resolution requesting the appointment of a commission to investigate the feasibility of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence tidewater project, and providing for the expenses thereof, and asking Congress to aid in the investigation of the project.

Whereas it is proposed to make such improvements in the St. Lawrence River as to make the Great Lakes accessible to ocean-going commerce; and as this improvement will, in effect, bring the State of Wyoming nearer to the world's markets, and because our producers and the consuming public have alike suffered enormous losses during the last year by reason of the high cost of transportation, there is an urgent need for such a project; and

Whereas a number of States have joined the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, having as its object the early undertaking of a completion of this project: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the State of Wyoming be properly associated in the above-named organization with the other States interested in pressing this undertaking to completion. Be it further

Resolved, That the representatives of this State in Congress of the United States be requested to facilitate in every possible way the prosecution of this undertaking.

S. SKOVGARD,
President of the Senate.
J. D. NOBLITT,
Speaker of the House.

Approved, 2.11 p. m., February 21, 1923.

WILLIAM B. ROSS, Governor.

Mr. WILLIS presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

EIGHTY-FIFTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
Regular Session, 1923.

A resolution (S. R. No. 44) extending to President Harding the commendation of the Ohio Senate for his courageous stand in favor of an international court of justice.

Whereas President Harding has shown his courage and statesmanship by recommending that the United States be represented on the international court of justice which is a continuance in permanent form of the old Hague tribunal; and

Whereas President Harding is entitled to great consideration because of the deliberation that he has displayed before giving his final approval to such step: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Ohio, That this body on behalf of the people of the State of Ohio hereby extend to President Harding its commendation for the courage and wisdom he has shown and its best wishes for the favorable consummation of his statesmanlike proposal; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk of the senate to the President of the United States and to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Joint Memorial No. 6.

Petition to Congress enacting such laws and measures as will provide for a "Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project."

Whereas the great resources of the State of Montana are to a large extent undeveloped, that said State is largely dependent upon transportation facilities for its development, as its natural resources, its mining, timber, oil, and farming industries are as yet in their infancy; and

Whereas in a large measure the price of the products of these industries is dependent upon foreign markets; and

Whereas the present rates for transportation of the products of these industries are too high to be in just proportion to the price received for such products, and due to such transportation facilities the production of these several industries have been curtailed; and

Whereas a similar problem directly confronts each State in the so-called Northwestern Group and likewise indirectly affects the entire country; and

Whereas the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project in its completion and operation will furnish to the people as well as the industries of the State of Montana and to all States in the so-called Northwestern Group a cheaper method of transportation of these products to terminal points and foreign markets: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring herein), That we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and respectfully urge that Congress take immediate action toward the passage of such a law or laws which will make possible the early completion and effective operation of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to our Representatives in the United States Congress.

Speaker of the House.
NELSON STORY, Jr.,

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. GOODING) presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF IDAHO,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, F. A. Jeter, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial No. 1 with the original thereof adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the seventeenth legislative assembly of the State of Idaho and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Idaho February 23, 1923, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Idaho. Done at the capitol at Boise, Idaho, this 24th day of February, A. D. 1923.

LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF IDAHO,
Seventeenth Session.

Senate Joint Memorial No. 1.

A joint memorial to the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the prosperity of the people of the United States and the permanence of our institutions rests in the final analysis with those who till the soil; and

Whereas no permanent relief can come to the farmer until he has a steady market which gives to him a living price, and this can best be brought about as provided in the Norris-Sinclair bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Senate of the State of Idaho, the House of Representatives concurring therein, do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to enact into law H. R. 12968 (S. 4050), known as Norris-Sinclair farmer aid bill, now pending in the United States Congress, and urge upon Congress the necessity of the immediate enactment of said law in order to save the people from the food monopoly, reduce the price to the consumer, and stabilize at a living price for the products of the farm; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Idaho is hereby instructed, without delay, to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies of the same be sent to our Senators and Representatives from this State.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 1st day of February, 1923.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial No. 1 originated in the senate during the seventeenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

A. M. BOYLEN, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. GOODING) presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF IDAHO,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, F. A. Jeter, secretary of state of the State of Idaho and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial No. 7 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Idaho and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Idaho February 23, 1923, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Idaho. Done at the capitol at Boise, Idaho, this 24th day of February, A. D. 1923.

[SEAL.] F. A. JETER,
Secretary of State.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House Joint Memorial No. 7.

A joint memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the House of Representatives and Senate of the State of Idaho, respectively represent that—

Whereas the basic industry of the State of Idaho is agriculture and the agricultural productions of the State are such as to require marketing at a long distance from the point of origin, and the finding of such markets requires railroad transportation of heavy tonnage; and

Whereas under the railroad rates as they exist to-day these agricultural products are being and can only be marketed at prices which will not yield the producer any net return, and in many instances at prices which result in a net loss to the producer; and

Whereas the method of increasing freight rates by horizontal percentages during the past few years has resulted in increasing the spread between long-established differentials between the producers of Idaho and similar producers of other localities more favorably located to such an extent as to preclude the marketing of Idaho products at a profit; and

Whereas the railway shopmen's strike of 1922 resulted in a crippling of the transportation conditions and failure of car and train service, causing inestimable damage; and

Whereas the burdens of strikes must fall upon the producer and result disastrously to the industrial conditions of the country; and

Whereas there appears to be no coordination between the Interstate Commerce Commission, the body which controls the revenues of the railways, and the Wage Board, the body which in a large measure controls the expenses of the railways; and

Whereas through such lack of coordination controversies have arisen between the management and employees of the railways, resulting in increased expenses and inefficient service detrimental to the shippers; and

Whereas under the existing excessive rates and recent inefficient service a spirit of discontent with and antagonism toward the transportation systems of the United States has been fostered until same is rapidly approaching radicalism: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Idaho, do most earnestly recommend that the Congress of the United States by appropriate legislation provide for proper coordination between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Wage Board; prohibit the increase or decrease of rates by horizontal percentages; prohibit the increase of rates in any commodity except on showing of the necessity therefor and the ability of such commodity to reasonably bear such increase; prohibit any violation of the provisions of the fourth section of the interstate commerce act; define the term "reasonably compensatory" as used in the fourth section of the interstate commerce act; require the carriers to provide equipment in kind and quantity to reasonably meet the requirements of the territory served; require the prompt return of empty equipment to owner; and require the carrier to assume responsibility for the prompt and equitable distribution of available equipment demanded as between shippers and localities; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be furnished to the Senate and to the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to each of the congressional delegations of the State of Idaho.

This memorial passed the house on the 13th day of February, 1923.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 19th day of February, 1923.

H. C. BALDRIDGE,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within House Joint Memorial No. 7 originated in the House of Representatives during the seventeenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DAVE BURRELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of the bill——

Mr. McCORMICK. A point of order. Are not petitions and memorials in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. McCORMICK. I offer a memorial for reference to the Committee on Immigration and incorporation in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication in the nature of a memorial of a committee representing the Assyrians of Chicago, Ill., was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, REPRESENTING THE ASSYRIANS OF CHICAGO, STATE OF ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 21, 1923.

To the honorable and highly esteemed body of Congress of the United States of America, peace and prosperity be multiplied:

We, the undersigned, representing the American Assyrians of Chicago, Ill., respectfully request your kind and patient hearing of our plea, as follows:

When Turkey entered the World War in the fall of 1914 against the Allies, the Sheikh-El-Islam, the head of the Mohammedan religion, proclaimed the Jehad (the holy war), which was meant to annihilate all the Christian people of the Near East. Then the Turks and the Kurds made no distinction between Armenians and Assyrians of Persia, Mesopotamia, and Turkey, but began their massacres, slaying, captivating thousands, and devastating the dwellings, both of Armenians and Assyrians alike.

Now, the loving arms of this, our well-beloved country, are being opened to welcome the long-oppressed Armenians into this land of liberty, for which we, as their Christian brothers and neighbors, who have suffered with them martydom, are more than glad, but wonder if the Congress will not kindly grant the same privilege to the little remnant of Assyrians left from the sword of Turks and Kurds, which are now scattered in Persia, Mesopotamia, and Russia as a people of no land. For two years hundreds of these unfortunate destitutes are at the borders of France, Italy, Japan, England, and Norway anxiously awaiting admission into this country.

We, as the citizens of the United States, and declarants as well, appeal to your tender sympathy and beg that you will allow our families and the near relatives to immigrate into this country, and that we may help and cheer them up to the extent of healing at least some of their heart bruises and help support them to become useful American citizens.

In this connection we wish to state that we can give the best of assurance that the relatives of these refugees will not let them become a public charge.

We trust as your just and noble kindness considers the Armenian plea that you will not overlook the homeless and stranded Assyrians.

Very respectfully yours,

JESSE M. YONAN, M. D.,
Former Chairman of Assyrian Delegation to the Peace Conference.
HAIDON ABLAHAT,
Minister of the Carter Memorial Assyrian Presbyterian Church.
JNO. A. DAVID, D. D. S.
ANDREW D. URSHAN,
One of the editors of the Christian Outlook, official organ of Pentecostal Assemblies of the World, Incorporated.
PAUL S. NEWEY,
Pastor of the Assyrian Evangelical Church.
JONATHAN S. COLIA,
Chairman of the Assyrian Chaldean National Unity of America.
REV. S. DERVIOL,
Priest of St. Ephriam Roman Catholic Church.
GEORGE AZOO,
Rector of Assyrian Nestorian Church.

HUNGARY AND THE WORLD WAR (S. DOC NO. 346).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present, by request, the petition of Jacob Toecla and others, entitled "A plea for justice for Hungary and for peace for Europe." I have had no opportunity to read it. I am given this memorandum as being a sort of index of the contents of the petition, which I will read into the RECORD.

SUMMARY OF INCLOSED STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF HUNGARY.

(1) Hungary was not responsible for the World War.

(2) The responsibility for the World War rests upon the shoulders of various groups of international financiers.

(3) The territorial mutilation and economic destruction of Hungary was done in the furtherance of a scheme of a few groups of international financiers to obtain absolute control of the international commerce and international finance of Europe and Asia, if not also of that of the United States of America.

(4) There can not be and there will not be peace in Europe until Hungary will be restored to her former territorial and economic rights.

(5) If the American people and Christian civilization will do their duty toward Hungary she will obtain justice and Europe will have peace.

Mr. President, I do not ask to have this petition printed in the RECORD, because of its great length. I believe it to be an important document, and I do ask to have it printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to call attention to the fact——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to have my request put to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question? Who are the signers of the petition?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Citizens of this country.

Mr. LODGE. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOSEPH WILLIAM HANLEY.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4457) for the relief of Joseph William Hanley, reported it adversely and submitted a report (No. 1261) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 3, 1923, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 574. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," as amended;

S. 1076. An act establishing standard grades of naval stores, preventing deception in transactions in naval stores, regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes;

S. 2703. An act to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates;

S. 3123. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended;

S. 3892. An act authorizing the State of California to bring suit against the United States to determine title to certain lands in Siskiyou County, Calif.;

S. 4146. An act permitting the State of Wyoming to reconvey certain lands to the United States and select other lands in lieu thereof and providing for the patenting of certain lands to Natrona County, Wyo., for public park purposes;

S. 4211. An act authorizing preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Intracoastal Waterway in Louisiana and Texas;

S. 4469. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge or bridges and trestles over the navigable channels of the mouth of the Mobile River in the State of Alabama;

S. 4536. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Peedee River in South Carolina;

S. 4548. An act declaring Bear Creek in Humphreys, Leflore, and Sunflower Counties, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream;

S. 4552. An act to incorporate the Belleau Wood Memorial Association; and

S. J. Res. 240. Joint resolution authorizing the erection, on public grounds, of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington.

COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report Senate Resolution 469 favorably without amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, and I want to make a statement of the facts before it is acted on.

This is the Nicholson resolution, which as a joint resolution passed this body by unanimous consent a few days ago. It went to the House of Representatives and was favorably reported by two committees of the House, the Committee on Mines and Mining and the Committee on Accounts. It went to the floor of the House, and was defeated by the objection of Mr. BLANTON, of Texas. The resolution has been reintroduced as a Senate resolution, instead of a joint resolution, in exactly the same form, except that the cooperation of the House in the matter has been eliminated. It has again gone to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and has again been favorably reported. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ODDIE. I should like to state that I am in hearty accord with this resolution. The Committee on Mines and Mining believes thoroughly in the resolution, and realizes the importance and necessity for it in the present condition of the silver and gold mining industry. I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a Senate commission is hereby created, to be known as the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress on January 1, 1924, upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the continuing decrease in the production of gold and silver.

2. The causes of the depressed condition of the gold and silver industry in the United States.

3. The production, reduction, refining, transportation, marketing, sale, and uses of gold and silver in the United States and elsewhere.

4. The effect of the decreased production of gold and silver upon commerce, industry, exchange, and prices.

The said commission is further authorized—

1. To confer with citizens, associations, or corporations of foreign countries with a view to the stabilization of wider use of silver in exchange.

2. To propose, either formally or informally, to the President of the United States, or the heads of the proper departments, plans for negotiations with foreign governments to the same end.

The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission or any subcommittee of its members is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, or adjournments of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in the continental United States, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per folio to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said commission, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditures shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In connection with the resolution, I submit some further facts in relation to the gold and silver mining industry, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SILVER IN A WORLD BATTLE TO PREVENT DEBASEMENT.

Silver, that precious metal, basis of coins the world over for centuries, is fighting a battle for existence. The American market is oversupplied. Europe is either casting it aside or, what is worse, debasing it, and four London brokers are absolutely fixing its world value based on the demand in China and India.

American mining industries, its greatest producers, declare that the law of supply has been ignored in the price fixing and, alarmed at the approaching termination of the Pittman Act, providing for purchase of the metal by the Government to maintain the Treasury's balance, have appealed to Congress for legislation to save the industry.

Even the American silver dollar, which has retained its purity, despite the upheaval in Europe, is still in danger, it is declared in this appeal, which points out the demoralizing effect which resulted several years ago when the price of bullion exceeded the value as a coin.

Revival of the old bimetallism controversy, once even a presidential issue, is not beyond the bounds of the present situation, according to some Members of Congress.

DEBASING SILVER COINAGE.

Already Sweden, Norway, and Denmark have abolished silver coin for all fractions of the krone, substituting an alloy of nickel and copper. Added to this is the alarming extent to which the debasement of silver has already reached. In England silver coinage has been debased from 925 to 500 fine; the Netherlands and Dutch Indies have debased their silver coin from 945 to 720 fine; Canada from 900 to 800 fine; Honduras from 900 to 500; San Salvador from 900 to 500; Singapore or Straits dollar from 900 to 600, first, then to 550; Mexico and Peru have both debased their currency to 500 fine.

The chaos in Europe has swept silver out of circulation in Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Jugoslavia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, and Turkey.

There is no shortage in the supply of silver. The nations of the world have just forsaken precious metals as a medium of exchange for the more stable medium—bartering of goods, manufactured and raw. Europe with its topsy-turvy exchanges has followed suit with Germany—buying from the United States and accepting credits in American money rather than suffer the great losses in currency of their own realms during its transmission.

The situation was brought before the American Mining Congress several weeks ago and a committee named to investigate is expected to urge upon Congress the passage of a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission, consisting of two Senators and two Representatives, to confer with two representatives of the industry and submit recommendations.

WORLD SUPPLY UNKNOWN.

There is not an unlimited supply of silver in the world ready for mining, the producers have pointed out to the Senate, who add, "that the current production of silver is not the measure of the supply and that fiscal legislation largely controls the demand."

The available world silver supply has never been estimated, but experience has shown that when it reaches a sufficiently high price—a value in bullion in excess of its value as coin—enormous quantities flow from hitherto unknown sources.

During the high prices of 1921 tens of millions of ounces of foreign coin were shipped to the refineries of the United States for smelting and refining. Then had it not been for the fact that the paper-note issue of India was convertible immediately into silver rupees the crisis confronted by England in 1917 and 1918 would not have occurred. There would not have arisen the necessity to furnish the enormous amount of bullion in the United States to meet that emergency nor to have enacted the Pittman Act as an enabling measure.

Release from the United States Treasury vaults of 209,000,000 ounces of silver, melted under the Pittman Act, as well as the dumping by European and Central and South American governments during the period of high prices, has not depleted the silver stock of the world. It has added to free stock.

DESTROYING VALUE OF SILVER.

Here is what has happened to destroy the value of silver:

Disintegration of the Latin union was responsible for conditions that led to the enactment of the Bland Act and the Sherman law, under which more than 400,000,000 ounces of silver were compulsorily purchased by the United States Government. The effect was to support the price in America.

The Sherman law was repealed in 1891. America, largest producer of silver, lost all influence in fixing the price of silver until war conditions disrupted the London market.

The enormous increase in export trade of China and India during the last 25 years, coupled with the fact that tradition made the use of silver necessary as a medium of exchange in these countries, resulted in the Far East becoming the world's most important market for the metal.

Cessation of legislative purchases by the United States was followed by an increased flow of silver to India until the market there was glutted, with the inevitable result that the exchange value of the rupee declined 50 per cent.

The government closed the Indian mints to free coinage and established the sterling value of the rupee. From that time on London has been able to fix the price of silver throughout the world.

A monsoon in India, a flood or famine in China, have greater effect on the price as fixed by London than the abandonment or discovery of a new mine in the United States.

MARKET RULED BY BROKERS.

Four silver brokerage houses in London fix the market. Representatives of these firms meet every business day. They hold the orders to sell bullion and also the orders to buy silver to meet the exchange balances drawn upon London accounts. The price is adjusted to meet the situation, advancing when the exchange demand exceeds the supply, declining when the reverse is the case. The price is thus fixed and the result cabled all over the world. A Butte miner sells a load of ore for a London price received by cable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am deeply interested in the resolution which has just been passed, providing for the appointment of a commission to make certain investigations in regard to the causes of the decrease in the production of gold and silver, the causes of the depression in the gold and silver industry of the United States, and particularly the effect of this decreased production upon the commerce, prices, and so forth, of the world.

Some months ago a number of western Senators met for the purpose of primarily considering what steps, if any, could be taken in order to meet the situation that would result from the expiration of the so-called "Pittman Act," and, if possible, to devise means to increase the use of silver for monetary purposes, or its use as a factor in the fiscal policy of the world. This committee was to report back to the body creating it. The committee appointed consisted of Senators PITTMAN, of Nevada, WALSH, of Montana, NICHOLSON, of Colorado, and myself. We have made some investigations, but no definite conclusions have been reached.

It is possible the views of the committee as to the methods to be adopted and the legislation to be secured were not, in all respects, in complete accord, but I feel confident that the committee appreciated that something should immediately be done to meet a situation which will soon be so acute as to call for relief. I was desirous of having a joint resolution passed authorizing the appointment by the President of a commission which would have authority not only to ascertain the facts concerning the production of gold and silver and the importance of the utilization of silver for monetary purposes but also authority to confer with other nations with a view to having an international policy adopted which would call for a greater use of silver for subsidiary coinage and as a basis for paper issues.

I have prepared a number of measures which, while doubtless imperfect and subject to criticism, would, in my judgment, be of benefit and secure at least some of the objects which those interested in this vital matter have in view. It has been apparent for some time that the measures which I prepared would not secure legislative approval. Without desiring to in any manner criticize the other branch of Congress, it is not improper to state that the resolution which was passed through the Senate a few days ago, and which contains the same provisions as the one just passed here—but requiring the investigation to be made by Members both of the House and the Senate—was not favorably received in the House. Its refusal to adopt the resolution necessitated the action just taken by the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

I very much regret that Congress has been unwilling to proceed further and to do more in dealing with the important matters to which I have briefly referred.

There are many persons who do not appreciate the disastrous consequences that will result not only to the United States but to the world if the production of silver and gold shall continue to diminish, and if provision is not made for the greater use of silver not only for subsidiary coinage but to strengthen the circulating notes and issues of the nations of the earth. I believe that an exhaustive investigation in regard to the matters referred to in the resolution just passed will awaken Congress and the financial interests of the world, as well as the people, to the insecure position of world finances and credit, and point the way for legislation and international agreements and cooperation that will not only be of benefit to the gold and silver industry of the world but of the highest importance to the trade and commerce of all countries.

Mr. President, the Commercial Club of Salt Lake City has given considerable attention to the silver question and has, through its secretary, advised me of certain recommendations submitted by one of the committees of that organization. These recommendations I regard as of very great value and they demonstrate that considerable thought has been given to this vital subject. I therefore ask that the letter be inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
COMMERCIAL CLUB AND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Salt Lake City, January 8, 1923.

Senator W. H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: When you were in Salt Lake City recently, if you remember, you appeared before the mining committee of this organization and discussed at length the "silver question." In your remarks you suggested that a very good purpose would be served if the committee would confer with the Utah chapter of the American Mining Congress in an effort to make certain recommendations to you and the Senate committee of which you are a member to consider the question of silver. Following your recommendations with reference to this subject a special committee was appointed known as the subcommittee on the "silver question," headed by H. A. Strauss as chairman.

Mr. Strauss addressed a communication to Mr. D. D. Muir, jr., vice president and director of the Utah chapter of the American Mining Congress, under date of December 18, and on December 26 Mr. Muir replied that President Jennings of the American Mining Congress had appointed a special committee from the congress to consider this question, and suggested that in view of the fact that the scope was national that local organizations refrain from taking any action in this matter.

The committee having in mind, however, your suggestion that yourself and the members of your committee would be glad to have any suggestions or plans for permanent stabilization of silver, accordingly drafted recommendations set forth in eight paragraphs, as follows:

1. That an international conference of monetary experts of all civilized nations, appointed by the respective governments, be called with the object of having international, or, rather, universal agreement established for a legal fiat valuation of gold and silver in a fixed ratio as near as possible to the bullion ratio obtaining at the time of the conference and forecast for, say, one year in advance.

2. That at this conference there be established not only this fixed relation of gold and silver for all nations of the world but also an annual reassembly of this international committee or conference, at which annual meeting the ratio of gold and silver will be readjusted to allow for any possible radical change in the bullion value of the two metals that may have occurred during the year or is forecast for the immediate future.

3. The stabilization of silver with respect to gold on this basis removes the fundamental objection that has always obtained against any fixed legal ratio or value between the two metals, as it allows for an annual readjustment of the ratio, dependent upon the actual bullion production ratio developed during the year.

4. A fixed ratio between gold and silver by legislative action is undoubtedly, as is well understood, a thoroughly satisfactory basis were it not for the fluctuations in production of the two metals that can not be allowed for in any ratio fixed by legislative action.

5. The plan herein proposed, however, makes this ratio practically a flexible one and should largely eliminate the fundamental objections that have always developed against the legislatively fixed ratio.

6. It would seem that stabilization of silver would be artificial and arbitrary, and, therefore, developing a condition tending to defeat the object to be attained if the silver value is fixed solely by legislative action without regard to fluctuations of bullion ratio between gold and silver. And it is further believed that with a more or less flexible ratio fixed by annual readjustments, the solution of the problem should be closely approximated.

7. In view of the fact that three nations, namely, the United States, Canada, and Mexico, produce 97 per cent of all the silver mined, the consent of these three nations to such a conference as above suggested should first be obtained, and it is quite likely that all other nations would then agree to cooperate.

8. There are probably many difficult problems in the internal machinery of each government to be considered in the working out of a plan such as that above outlined, but it is not the object of your committee to go further than to submit the only suggestion that it has been enabled to develop that differs from those thus far advanced by others.

The subcommittee's recommendations were approved Saturday, January 6, and directed to be forwarded to you. At the same time the committee would appreciate being advised from you, in view of the attitude of the American Mining Congress, if you wish the committee to proceed with its investigations and to make any recommendations to you that might be considered worth while. The committee would also appreciate being advised of your attitude with reference to the present legislation being considered for the permanent stabilization of silver and what the outlook is with reference to this legislation.

The committee wish me further to inform you that they are very anxious to cooperate and render any assistance possible.

Cordially yours,

J. H. RAYBURN, General Secretary.

STANDARD GRADES OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH. From the Committee on Agriculture I make a favorable report on House bill 14302 and shall ask for its immediate consideration. It is a bill to establish in this country by law the use of the standard grades in cotton.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to state that if the bill is to be debated I shall have to object, because there are reports of conference committees which must be acted on.

Mr. SMITH. The bill, if enacted into law, would not go into effect until the 1st of August, and it is to enforce American standards on American cotton. I have heard no objection to it, except that some parties interested in the raising of cotton have said they prefer more time to look into it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

Mr. WARREN. I still reserve the right to object——

Mr. SMITH. A request has been made that the bill be read. It is quite a long bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. DIAL. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. It is to fix the standards. We ought to have only one standard in the world. I hope Liverpool will adopt our standards and that the standards will be uniform.

Mr. SMITH. This bill is simply to enforce American standards in the sale of American cotton as in the case of the grain standard.

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not go into effect until the 1st of August.

Mr. SMITH. It simply proposes to fix the American standards on all cotton sold or shipped in interstate or foreign commerce. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, unless the bill can be disposed of without debate I shall demand the regular order.

The bill (H. R. 14302) to establish and promote the use of official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "United States cotton standards act."

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful (a) in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce made after this act shall become effective, or (b) in any publication of a price or quotation determined in or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, or (c) in any classification for the purposes of or in connection with a transaction or shipment in commerce after this act shall become effective, for any person to indicate for any cotton a grade or other class which is of or within the official cotton standards of the United States then in effect under this act by a name, description, or designation, or any system of names, description, or designation not used in said standards: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent a transaction otherwise lawful by actual sample or on the basis of a private type which is used in good faith and not in evasion of or substitution for said standards.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation of satisfactory evidence of competency, issue to any person a license to grade or otherwise classify cotton and to certificate the grade or other class thereof in accordance with the official cotton standards of the United States. Any such license may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied, after reasonable opportunity afforded to the licensee for a hearing, that such licensee is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly classified cotton improperly, or has violated any provision of this act or the regulations thereunder so far as the same may relate to him, or has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose. Pending investigation the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without a hearing.

SEC. 4. That any person who has custody of or a financial interest in any cotton may submit the same or samples thereof, drawn in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, to such officer or officers of the Department of Agriculture as may be designated for the purpose pursuant to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for a determination of the true classification of such cotton or samples, including the comparison thereof, if requested, with types or other samples submitted for the purpose. The final certificate of the Department of Agriculture showing such determination shall be binding on officers of the United States and shall be accepted in the courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the true classification or comparison of such cotton or samples when involved in any transaction or shipment in commerce. The Secretary of Agriculture shall fix rules and regulations for submitting samples of cotton for classification providing that all samples shall be numbered so that no one interested in the transaction involved shall be known by any classifier engaged in the classification of such cotton samples.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture may cause to be collected such charges as he may find to be reasonable for licenses issued to classifiers of cotton under section 3 and for determinations made under section 4 of this act, and the amounts so collected shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in paying expenses of the Department of Agriculture connected therewith.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish from time to time standards for the classification of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined for commercial purposes, which shall be known as the official cotton standards of the United States. Any such standard or change or replacement thereof shall become effective only on and after a date specified in the order of the Secretary of Agriculture establishing the same, which date shall be not less than one year after the date of such order: Provided, That the official cotton standards established, effective August 1, 1923, under the United States cotton futures act shall be at the same time the official cotton standards for the purpose of this act unless and until changed or replaced under this act. Whenever any standard or change or replacement thereof shall become effective under this act, it shall also, when so specified in the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, become effective for the purposes of the United States cotton futures act and supersede any inconsistent standard established under said act. Whenever the official cotton standards of the United States established under this act shall be represented by practical forms the Department of Agriculture shall furnish copies thereof, upon request, to any person, and the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be paid by the person making the request. The Secretary of Agriculture may cause such copies to be certified under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and may attach such conditions to the purchase and use thereof, including provision for the inspection, condemnation, and exchange thereof by duly authorized representatives of the Department of Agriculture, as he may find to be necessary to the proper application of the official cotton standards of the United States. Any moneys received from or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of such copies and condemned as unsuitable for such use or with the sale of such copies may be expended for the purchase of other cotton for such use.

SEC. 7. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause the inspection, including the sampling, of any cotton involved in any transaction or shipment in commerce, wherever such cotton may be found, or of any cotton with respect to which a determination of the true classification is requested under section 4 of this act.

SEC. 8. That it shall be unlawful for any person (a) with intent to deceive or defraud, to make, receive, use, or have in his possession any simulate or counterfeit practical form or copy of any standard or part thereof established under this act; or (b) without the written authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, to make, alter, tamper with, or in any respect change any practical form or copy of any standard established under this act; or (c) to display or use any such practical form or copy after the Secretary of Agriculture shall have caused it to be condemned.

SEC. 9. That (a) any person who shall knowingly violate any provision of sections 2 or 8 of this act, or (b) any person licensed under this act who, for the purposes of or in connection with any transaction or shipment in commerce, shall knowingly classify cotton improperly, or shall knowingly falsify or forge any certificates of classification, or shall accept money or other consideration, either directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty as such licensee, or (c) any person who shall knowingly influence improperly or attempt to influence improperly any person licensed under this act in the performance of his duties as such licensee relating to any transaction or shipment in commerce, or (d) any person who shall forcibly assault, resist, impede, or interfere with or influence improperly or attempt to influence improperly any person employed under this act in the performance of his duties, shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $1,000, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 10. That for the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be promulgated such regulations, may cause such investigations, tests, demonstrations, and publications to be made, including the investigation and determination of some practical method whereby repeated and unnecessary sampling and classification of cotton may be avoided, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person, as he shall find to be necessary.

SEC. 11. That wherever used in this act, (a) the word "person" imports the plural or the singular, as the case demands, and includes an individual, a partnership, a corporation, or two or more persons having a joint or common interest; (b) the word "commerce" means commerce between any State or the District of Columbia and any place outside thereof, or between points within the same State or the District of Columbia but through any place outside thereof, or within the District of Columbia; and (c) the word "cotton" means cotton of any variety produced within the continental United States, including linters. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any agent, officer, or other person acting for or employed by any person, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case be deemed also the act, omission, or failure of such person as well as that of such agent, officer, or other person.

SEC. 12. That there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, within the limits of such appropriations, to appoint, remove, and fix the compensations of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

SEC. 13. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 14. That this act shall become effective on and after August 1, 1923.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. LOTT.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate Resolution 468, providing for the appropriation of the sum of $650 for the expert employed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to John L. Lott the sum of $650 for services rendered the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the Senate during the Sixty-seventh Congress in an expert technical examination of H. R. 12, an act to codify and revise the laws of the United States, passed by the House of Representatives and referred to said committee.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 14408, the third deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
March 2, 1923.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 22, 36, 66, 72, and 76 to the bill (H. R. 14408) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes," and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 24, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

"UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

"For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection wtih questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes,' approved September 22, 1922, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, fiscal years 1923 and 1924, $400,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 40, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the word "expended" in the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: June 30, 1924.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 54, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert the sum: $100,000.

Mr. WARREN. It will be remembered that on yesterday the conference report was adopted by the Senate, but there were eight matters in apparent disagreement. As a matter of fact, they were all in agreement in the conference committee, but it seemed necessary to the House conferees to take back matters which seemed to be legislation. The consequence is that of the eight matters, five have been agreed to as they stood, and three have been sent back with amendments. Of those three, No. 24 was the one relating to the Coal Commission, the House proposition being simply to insert some language to fit the provisions of the original bill, and the amount of the appropriation carried in the deficiency bill was not changed.

The next matter was the proposition for the spreading by airplane of material to kill cotton-destroying insects. The amendment simply changes the date to make it apply to the year 1924.

The third amendment is the matter of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the additional judges provided for under the act passed last year. We had appropriated $300,000, and we were compelled to cut it down to $100,000. Those are the only changes. I therefore move that the Senate agree to the amendments made by the House to Senate amendments numbered 24, 40, and 54.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I understand that provision is made for the additional judges created by the act passed last September.

Mr. WARREN. This appropriation is simply for little matters of hiring a courtroom here and there, where it is necessary to provide for the courts and for their other extra expenses.

Mr. SHIELDS. One of the subjects of discussion when the judges' bill was before the Senate was in relation to a provision in it for holding a convention of the circuit judges of the United States and some of the district judges here in Washington and such other places where the Chief Justice might call them to meet. That was a matter of serious discussion, as well as the extra burden it would place upon the Chief Justice, and especially in view of the fact that he had presented a bill to abrogate practically all the obligatory jurisdiction of the court, because of the want of time to consider the business of the court.

I see that the Chief Justice appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the House in advocacy of the bill to abrogate the obligatory jurisdiction of the court, and in that hearing he spoke of the additional duties imposed upon him and the time that would be consumed, and said that he expected to rely upon the generosity of the Committee on Appropriations to give him an extra clerk to enable him to attend to the additional duties. Is an appropriation for that purpose contained in this bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is not specifically for any particular purpose except for rentals and other incidental expenses of the office occasioned by the law referred to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was struck by the unwisdom of the provision in the judges' bill imposing these additional duties on the Chief Justice when the docket of his court was already congested and he was unable to attend to his constitutional and proper duties. It was wrong for Congress to go to the extent of imposing additional duties upon him which were not strictly within the sphere of a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States or the Chief Justice.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think it only fair to say that the bill to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred was prepared by a committee of the Supreme Court—not by the Chief Justice.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is correct, so far as the statement of the distinguished Senator goes; but the Chief Justice was on that committee, and the Chief Justice presented the bill to the Senator and requested him to introduce it, and also presented a review of the bill, which he suggested might be used as a report of the Judiciary Committee favorably recommending the bill to the Senate to be passed, but which has never been adopted by the Judiciary Committee or even by the subcommittee of which the distinguished Senator is chairman. In fact, nothing has been done upon that bill in either House, it evidently not receiving a very favorable consideration from either House.

However, I wish to state in this connection, Mr. President, that I am in favor of doing something to give relief to the Supreme Court of the United States. The docket is a year or two behind; and at the next session something ought to be done. While I am not in favor of abrogating all the obligatory jurisdiction, yet some relief can be given. If we do grant some relief, I am also in favor of repealing the provisions of the judges' bill imposing upon the Chief Justice the duty of holding a convention of the circuit judges and overseeing—that is the word to use, overseeing—the United States district judges in the discharge of their duties. I think the office of United States district judge is a very high and honorable one and that a United States district judge ought to be as free and independent in thought and independent in the discharge of his duties as the Chief Justice of the United States, and I do not want anybody to oversee him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate will be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Let the report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to be recognized on the motion. I was trying to get recognition. It is a debatable proposition that was submitted to the Senate. It is a conference report.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that that part of it has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it was agreed to while I was clamoring for recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Nebraska wishes to debate the conference report, the Chair will withdraw his statement that the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. This is a final report, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. It is not entirely so. I had the floor to bring up our angle of it.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Senator then is making his report in two sections?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may have it any way he likes. I will wait to take it up at some other time if he wishes.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to discuss the conference report and ask a few questions about it. Is it out of order to do that? Will I offend anybody by asking about the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the conference report. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. The Presiding Officer and the chairman of the committee are not in accord as to what the motion is.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nebraska, I think, must have heard my explanation of it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Chair, as I understand it, has stated to the Senate that the question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question technically was on concurring in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate as stated in the message from the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to an agreement to the amendments of the House which the Senator from Wyoming asked to be agreed to, but the Chair stated the proposition, as I understood it, "The question is on the adoption of the conference report." On that I want to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first question was on concurring in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate. Without objection, the amendments were concurred in. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will state the inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the conference report had already been agreed to on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to yesterday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, the only proposition today is that of concurring in the amendments of the House. Is that correct?

Mr. WARREN. In the first place there were disagreements on eight items. Really, all were agreed to except to take them to the House and see if the House accepted those which would affect legislation. The matter came back with three amendments to our amendments. My motion was to concur in the three amendments of the House to our amendments. That motion was agreed to. I now move the adoption of the report, which closes the matter, and I think it important——

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the report was adopted yesterday.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; it was.

Mr. NORRIS. It is upon that question that I desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. My understanding is that the report was agreed to yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. That left eight items in dispute. The House has receded from five and has agreed to three with amendments. The chairman of the committee, who is also chairman of the conference, I understand wants the Senate to agree to the three amendments made by the House to the Senate amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been done.

Mr. CURTIS. Then if that is the case, the whole proceeding is ended.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, then the chairman of the committee did not properly state the question. He said, and the Chair has also stated, that the question before the Senate was on agreeing to the conference report. If there is no conference report, then the Senator from Wyoming was wrong and he misled the Chair.

Mr. WARREN. I want the Senator from Nebraska to have an opportunity to say whatever he has to say. I have tried to present the conference report in a proper way. I beg the pardon of the Chair and of the Senate and of the Senator from Nebraska if I have in any way reported it otherwise than according to the rules. Of course, I know the rules and how to present a conference report. But I want the Senator from Nebraska to have and to take his opportunity to make his speech to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator knows the rules and how to present a conference report and followed the rules in presenting the report, then the Chair was wrong and the Senator from Kansas was wrong and the Senator from Washington was wrong, and the question before the Senate is, Shall we agree to the conference report?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can take either horn of the dilemma.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not taking any horn of the dilemma. I want to discuss the conference report. The Chair put the question to the Senate. If there was not any conference report, then he had not anything to put and I have nothing to debate. The Senator from Wyoming himself stated that he wanted to have first the approval of the Senate on the amendments, to which I had no objection, and then he asked that the conference report be submitted. If the Senator was wrong and did not have any conference report, then I have nothing to say.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Wyoming is not responsible if other Senators may have been asleep when the business of the Senate was being transacted.

Mr. NORRIS. This Senator was not asleep. If that statement is correct, then the Senator was not only asleep but he was talking in his sleep. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nebraska was in just that condition.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is reports of committees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire whether or not, under the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming that the conference report was submitted for consideration and for adoption or rejection, debate upon that proposition is permissible, if there was only 1 item or 100 items. In my view it is permissible, and the Senator from Nebraska was entitled to the floor for discussion of the conference report or any item in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Chair stated that there is no conference report before the Senate. If there is, I would like to debate it. If there is not, I have nothing to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report was agreed to yesterday, and the question to-day was on concurring in the amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there was no conference this morning?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Technically there was not, though the action of the House on amendments submitted to the House by its conferees is often referred to as a conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

W. W. M'GRATH.

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
F. R. GOODING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. May we be advised by the Senator from Kansas what is the subject of the controversy?

Mr. CAPPER. This was a small appropriation for W. W. McGrath, which has been pending here for some six months. The Senate increased the amount from $180.70 to $459.50.

Mr. KING. It is simply a report upon a claim which was passed by the Senate?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; that is all.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Whenever that question is before the Senate I would like to have the Chair state it. If it is a debatable proposition, I want to be heard on the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Day before yesterday the Senate spent nearly all day, and a good share of the day before, on the deficiency appropriation bill. The Senate agreed to various amendments on the appropriation bill, among which were two which in a sense provided that in the repair of battleships and other things the money appropriated should not be used to pay for those repairs in private shops and private yards if the Government yards were equipped and able to do the work. We put the amendment on in two different places as a limitation to the appropriation that was made. That was done about 10 o'clock at night.

After about a day and a half of work and the adding of several very important amendments, among which were the two that I have mentioned, the bill was sent to conference. I want first to call attention as to just how those amendments got on the bill. Senators will remember that the first amendment, offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], was voted on without a roll call, and the amendment was overwhelmingly defeated. I was not able to get enough hands raised to secure a roll call. I was compelled, therefore, to resort to the proposition of offering another amendment. I offered the same amendment, except that it was a little stronger, because I took out of it the clause in regard to the cost so as to make it a proper amendment to be introduced and against which a point of order could not be made. I induced the Senate to give me a roll call on that by stating that I was going to talk if they did not, and rather than hear me talk they submitted to the inconvenience of having a roll call, and enough hands went up to get a roll call.

Now, mark you, a short time before practically the same amendment had been overwhelmingly defeated by the Senate, and I could not get enough hands up to get a roll call, but when the roll call came the amendment was adopted almost unanimously.

The amendment was offered again in another place in the bill and applying to another specific appropriation. As I remember it, there were only seven votes against the amendment when it was finally voted on when the roll was called. Everybody in the Senate, everybody in the Capitol, including every Member of the House of Representatives, knows that if the House of Representatives had been given an opportunity to vote on either one or both of the amendments, they would have been agreed to by a larger majority than the amendments received in the Senate.

Now, what happened? The conference committee on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate got together and the bill came back here the next morning with those amendments eliminated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator wants to be correct. It was not reported in the morning. It was reported quite late yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. I stand corrected. I am glad the Senator corrected me. It was reported the next day.

Mr. President, I know the condition that presents itself to the Senate at this time. The 4th of March is just ahead of us. I realize that the defeat of that bill would have been a serious proposition. Every other Senator, also, knew it. It would have been just as impossible to expect the Senate to defeat the measure because it did not contain those amendments as for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle. What I am calling attention to is that because of the short session of Congress, which we are trying to have abolished by a constitutional amendment, this body as well as the House of Representatives is absolutely held up; it is held up just as completely as if a man was held up in the dark by a thug, and is compelled to submit to the arbitrary control of three men who are Members of the other House and three men who are Members of the Senate, and who compose a conference committee. They are supreme. We may work all day and add amendments to a measure, but the conference committee at this stage of the legislative procedure can walk out into the hall, turn around and come back and report the bill just in the same shape it was when we began its consideration, and we shall accept it because we are afraid if we do not accept it the entire bill will be defeated, which nobody wishes to see happen. That is the condition.

I desire that the country shall know that the House of Representatives is impotent and that the Senate is impotent and that we are not legislating through the Senate and through the House of Representatives, but that we are now legislating through conference committees, who are as supreme and absolute as was ever any czar who ruled a monarchy anywhere on earth at any time. That is our legislative condition, and we are illustrating it every day. I speak of it not in criticism of Senators or of Members of the House of Representatives, but it is a condition that will exist so long as we permit it to do so unless Senators or Members of the House, one or the other, rise to the emergency and say we shall defeat all legislation and let it all fail rather than to endure that kind of a situation. That might arouse the people of the country and lead to a remedy for this difficulty.

I call attention to these two amendments which practically everybody desires and the adoption of which nobody can secure because it happens that out of a little over 500 legislators there are six men who chance to be conferees who do not want those two amendments. I do not criticize them for not wanting them. I frankly concede that they have a right to do that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator's statement is hardly fair.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not wish to make a statement that is not fair.

Mr. CURTIS. I happened to be one of the conferees on the measure to which reference has been made. I voted for the Senator's amendments in the Senate, both on the rising vote and on the call of the yeas and nays. I voted for his two amendments in conference also and held out just as long as we dared hold out, but in order to get the bill back to the Senate and get it through this body it became necessary for the Senate conferees to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not a particle of doubt that the Senator from Kansas is stating accurately what took place. I had just stated on the floor of the Senate before he rose that I was not criticizing the conferees, for they are men who have their ideas as to what character of legislation should be enacted, and because they do not agree with me or with a majority of the Senate is no reason why I should condemn them. It is the system, however, I am condemning. I know if I were a conferee I should endeavor to secure the legislation in which I believed. I am not finding fault with anybody, but I am merely stating why I thought it was proper to halt the proceedings to call attention to the system. I have not criticized the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] or the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and I do not intend to do so, because they do not agree with me on this proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Nebraska is not criticizing me, either, I hope.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not criticizing the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The fact that the Senator from Nebraska exonerated specifically the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Wyoming might leave the implication that he was criticizing me, for I was also one of the conferees; and I know he does not intend to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not intend to criticize the Senator from North Carolina at all.

Mr. WARREN. I want the Senator to admit—and I think he will cheerfully do so—that, so far as I am concerned, I supported his proposition and shall continue to do so. I presume his remarks are intended to apply more particularly to the House of Representatives, which has failed to adopt the proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. The House members of the committee of conference did not take the amendment back to the House, did they?

Mr. WARREN. No; but I am referring more particularly to the constitutional amendment which the Senator proposed and we all joined with him in that.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. So that the fault does not lie in the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not said that it did. Senators must not protest too much. I do not intend to criticize any of them, and I am not criticizing Members of the House of Representatives. It is the system of which I complain. When somebody is in control here he uses every ounce of power that he has; and he will do that, whether he be an infidel or a Christian. Anybody will do so. It is only human nature. So when we put the power of legislation into the hands of three men we must expect them to use it, and, of course, they will use it. We ought to have a fair opportunity when these conference reports come back from conference to the Senate or to the House to see that they are then properly considered. If conferees knew that there was going to be an opportunity for fair consideration on the floor of their respective bodies, they would give more heed to the wishes of the legislative assemblies which they are supposed to represent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THURSTON W. TRUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2984) for the relief of Thurston W. True, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses that the House recede from its amendment.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
SELDEN P. SPENCER,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

B. H. SNELL,
JOHN C. KLECZKA,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask for the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

BONUS TO EMPLOYEES OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 14435) making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. It is a bill of a privileged character, being an appropriation bill. It consists of only eight pages and carries an appropriation of some $37,000,000 to pay the so-called bonus to employees of the Government. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be read textually. We have not heard it read nor, so far as I know, even seen it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is perfectly proper to have the bill read, but, in order that it may be better understood, I desire to say that it conforms exactly to the law under which we have been operating for the past two years, with the exception that three or four amendments, made necessary because of a change in the situation, have been reported.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me ask a question before the Senator from Wyoming takes his seat, my attention having been diverted for a minute. Has the bill been reported by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; we had a full committee meeting to consider the bill, and have reported it back to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In the event the classification bill shall become a law is it the purpose to complete this bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, it is this: If the classification bill shall finally become a law, it will be necessary to provide somewhere between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000 at once to carry out the provisions of that bill. This bill proposes to appropriate what it is presumed will be the amount which will be necessary in the event the reclassification bill goes through, perhaps a little more and perhaps a little less, for, generally speaking, the increases provided in the reclassification bill amount practically to the bonus which has been paid for the last few years. This bill contains an amount sufficient to insure us up to the next meeting of Congress, used either for bonus or for classification.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask one other question. If the reclassification bill goes through the bonus provision will be repealed, will it not?

Mr. SMOOT. As to employees in the District of Columbia only.

Mr. McKELLAR. What effect will it have on the clerks of Senators? Will they still get the bonus or will their bonus not be provided for them?

Mr. WARREN. Under this bill they will get the bonus just the same as in the past, except, of course, that it will not apply to those clerks whose salary is in excess of $2,500. All those, however, who receive $2,500 or less will have the benefit of the bonus.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will apply to all those who receive $2,500 or less?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah desire that the bill be read in extenso?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 13, before the word "employees," to strike out the word "seventeen."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, to strike out "$2,832,449," and in lieu thereof to insert "$2,845,309."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have not the bill before us; indeed I have not as yet been able to obtain a copy of it, and the amendments as stated are hardly intelligible unless we know the text. I will ask the Secretary to read the text of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The first amendment striking out "seventeen" is made necessary because the number of the employees referred to in that item varies. I understand there are only about 5 now, but there may be more than 17, and, consequently, the word "seventeen" is stricken out.

Mr. KING. Seventeen what?

Mr. WARREN. It applies to clerks to Senators appointed under resolutions, the number increasing or decreasing from time to time, and it is designed to make the bonus of $240 apply to them. That is all.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amount for the Bureau of Mines it is proposed to strike out "$2,832,449," and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,845,309."

Mr. WARREN. That amendment has been made at the request of the Budget Bureau and in accordance with representations made by the Interior Department that the original amount was too small.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry about that. We passed an appropriation bill the other day dealing very generously with the Interior Department, which includes the Bureau of Mines. Then, as I recall, there were other items in one or two of the deficiency bills for the same purpose. Are we now making a further appropriation for the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. WARREN. In footing up all of the expenses, it was ascertained that it will require more than the original bill carried for the Bureau of Mines and one other branch of the Interior Department. The estimate has come down in the regular way as all the others have come.

Mr. KING. Of course, I have such confidence in the able Senator from Wyoming that I would rely upon his views with respect to the necessity of this appropriation, but I know how generous we have been to the Bureau of Mines. I feel that we have been too generous, and I should like to know what the proposed appropriation is for.

Mr. WARREN. Should the appropriation fail to be made, it would leave unprovided for, so far as the bonus is concerned, certain clerks and employees of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. KING. Is it for the payment of the bonus?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly. It is for that and for nothing else whatever.

Mr. KING. It is not for the purpose of increasing the number of employees?

Mr. WARREN. No; but merely to provide the bonus for employees receiving $2,500 a year or less; that is all.

Mr. KING. With the understanding that it covers only the question of the bonus, I have no objection.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing in the bill except what relates to the bonus so far as expenses or amounts are concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 24, to increase the total for the executive departments from $34,003,966 to $34,016,826.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the passage of the reclassification bill will add to or subtract from the amount appropriated by the general bonus bill which we must pass in the event the reclassification bill shall not become a law?

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. What I mean is this: Does the reclassification bill increase the amount which we would provide under the bonus?

Mr. WARREN. It can not control the classification law in any way except as it may take the place of the bonus, or where by resolution or other arrangement the bonus funds would be made to be used in place of the provisions of the reclassification bill. The pending bill, however, would give no authority to pay any clerks any more than what is provided in the reclassification bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in further answer to my colleague I want to state that if the reclassification bill becomes a law it will cost $2,500,000 over and above what the bonus will cost.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to know what the legislative situation is.

Mr. KING. We have a bill before us under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is considering an appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. By unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah in regard to my remark a few moments ago that the bill affects nothing but the bonus, that, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, that is true; but at the end of the bill there is a provision for the appointment of a joint committee of Members of the Senate and of the House to consider the matter of the compensation of the employees of Congress. I will ask the Secretary to read that provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 10. That a joint committee of Congress is hereby created, consisting of three Senators who are Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Vice President, and three Representatives elect to the Sixty-eighth Congress who are Members of the Sixty-seventh Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate and report to Congress on the first day of the next regular session what adjustments, if any, should be made in the compensation of the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including joint committees and joint commissions, the office of the Architect of the Capitol, the legislative drafting service, and the Capitol police.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4117) authorizing the closing of certain portions of Grant Road in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13430) to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14144) to limit and fix the time within which suits may be brought or rights asserted in court arising out of the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 302 of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 18, 1918, being chapter 20, volume 40, General Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5918) for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13775) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 422) permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. BLACK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 13004. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Kansas Electric Power Co., its successors and assigns, a certain tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth;

H. R. 13024. An act for the relief of August Nelson;

H. R. 13612. An act authorizing the issuance of patent to the legal representatives of Miles J. Davis, deceased;

H. R. 13774. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property;

H. R. 13775. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds;

H. R. 13810. An act to continue the improvement of the Mississippi River and for the control of its floods;

H. R. 13998. An act making section 1535c of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia applicable to the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14082. An act to authorize the Valley Transfer Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a line of railway in and upon the Fort Snelling Military Reservation, in the State of Minnesota;

H. R. 14087. An act for the creation of the American Battle Monuments Commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14135. An act to amend an act approved September 8, 1916, providing for holding sessions of the United States district court in the district of Maine, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14309. An act to amend section 206 of the transportation act, 1920;

H. R. 14324. An act to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended; and

H. J. Res. 256. Joint resolution proposing payment to certain employees of the United States.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is on the desk a concurrent resolution which involves no expenditure of money, and merely corrects an error made in the printing in the House of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the regular order. We have a number of bills on the calendar, and we have some rights in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read House Concurrent Resolution 87, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of H. R. 14408, an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, concurred in by the House, to correct the date "March 2, 1917" wherever it occurs to read "March 2, 1907."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

RIO GRANDE AND RED RIVER BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 12378, granting the consent of Congress to maintain a bridge across the Rio Grande River; also, with an amendment, Senate bill 4641, granting the consent of Congress to Harry F. Mitchell, of Fort Worth, Tex., for construction of a bridge across the Red River between Montague County, Tex., and Jefferson County, Okla. I ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of reports of committees, which is proceeding. The reports presented by the Senator from Texas will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I ask for their immediate consideration. One of the bills is a House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bills reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. I object.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask leave to withdraw both reports then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to withdrawing the reports? The Chair hears none, and they are withdrawn.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the following bills:

House bill 2347, for the relief of certain homestead entrymen;

House bill 13751, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Parish, La.;

House bill 8291, for the relief of Trygve Kristian Lode; and House bill 6196, for the relief of Robert E. Danforth.

I will state that Senators who are interested in these bills have asked me to request unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall object. I think we have a right to go to the calendar, and that the bills that have been reported heretofore have as much right to be considered and passed as the bills that are reported at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest to him that it would require unanimous consent to proceed now to the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask for order in the Chamber. We can not hear what is being said.

Mr. CUMMINS. We will reach the calendar when the morning business is closed.

Mr. KING. The morning business is not closed yet.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Iowa will permit the consideration of a bill in which I am particularly interested. It is a bill which has passed the House.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. CUMMINS. All these bills have passed the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills reported by the Senator from Utah will be placed on the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION ACT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably, with an amendment, House bill 14226, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916. I should have asked for its immediate consideration; it is a bill in which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is interested as deeply as myself; but in view of the position he has taken, I shall not do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator ask for the immediate consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. We will reach these bills on the calendar if we may be given a chance to get to the calendar; but if Senators continue to call up bills that are presented at this time, we never will get to the calendar. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Are there further reports of committees? If not, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4657) to furnish copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to all high schools; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4658) granting an increase of pension to Percy H. Allen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

SECTION 4 OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. GOODING) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 472), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to investigate and report to the Senate the following information relating to the administration of section 4 of the interstate commerce act:

(a) The number of applications in special cases for relief from the operation of such section, filed with the commission, granted by the commission, granted by the commission after investigation including hearing, denied by the commission, or denied by the commission after investigation including hearing, for each of the following periods: The period between the amendment of the interstate commerce act on June

29, 1906, and its amendment on June 18, 1910, the period between such amendment on June 18, 1910, and the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, and the period since the enactment of the transportation act, 1920;

(b) The number of such applications granted since the date of the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, in order to meet rail competition, and the number granted since such date in order to meet water competition.

(c) The number of such applications granted since the date of the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, in which proof was presented satisfactory to the commission that the rate applied for would be reasonably compensatory for service performed, and the number of such applications granted since such date in order to meet water competition in which proof was presented satisfactory to the commission that the water competition was actual and not merely potential;

(d) The names of the railroads that have made such applications, the purposes intended to be accomplished and actually accomplished, in the opinion of the commission, by the filing and granting of such applications, and the effect of such applications on other railroads;

(e) The localities that have been most interested in having the railroads make such applications, and what pressure such localities have brought upon the railroads and other localities in order to obtain the filing of such applications; and

(f) The number of cases of increases of rates previously reduced in order to meet competition from a water route, and the number of such cases in which there was presented proof satisfactory to the commission that such increase rested upon changed conditions other than the elimination of the water competition.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on March 2, 1923, the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

S. 462. An act for the relief of Max B. Baldenburg;

S. 2746. An act for the relief of William Howard May, ex-marshal of the Canal Zone; William K. Jackson, ex-district attorney of the Canal Zone; and John H. McLean, ex-paymaster of the Panama Canal, now deceased;

S. 4589. An act to authorize the county of Hennepin, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge and approaches thereto across the Minnesota River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation; and

S. J. Res. 270. Joint resolution concerning lands devised to the United States Government by the late Joseph Battell, of Middlebury, Vt.

AMENDMENT OF WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand that all debate has ceased, and that the Senate is ready to vote immediately upon House bill 14401 without any further debate, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not going to indulge in favoritism. I make the same objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

ARMENIA AND TURKEY.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read, and then I shall move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 470) was read, as follows:

Whereas the United States, on the 23d day of April, 1920, recognized Armenia as an independent State, and the Senate by resolution of May 14, 1920, extended congratulations to Armenia upon the attainment of her independence; and

Whereas the President of the United States, on November 20, 1920, pursuant to the stipulation of the treaty of Sevres, and at the instance of the powers signatory to said treaty, defined the southwestern boundaries of Armenia, and the President of the United States, on November 10, 1922, declared that "everything which may be done will be done to protect the Armenian people and reserve to them the rights which the Sevres treaty undertook to bestow"; and

Whereas Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and Turkey, on the 10th day of August, 1920, formally recognized Armenia as a free and independent State and solemnly pledged themselves to protect the national rights and liberties of the Armenian people; and

Whereas the people of the United States view with misgiving and disappointment the failure of the powers to protect the independence of Armenia, to bring to an end the reign of violence and terrorism to which the Armenians had been subjected at the hands of the Turks, and to remove impediments to the maintenance of an independent Armenian State and to the peaceable settlement of Armenians within the territories ascribed to said State in the treaty of Sevres and delimited by the President of the United States, in accordance with said treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States do not resume diplomatic relations with Turkey, or permit its nationals to advance any financial aid to Turkey, until the Turkish Government shall have withdrawn all its military forces and occupation from the territories allocated to Armenia in the treaty of Sevres and delimited by the President of the United States in conformity with said treaty, and shall have removed all impediments to the peaceable settlement of Armenians within said territory, and shall have consented to the setting up of an independent Armenian State therein free from any claim of sovereignty thereover by the Turkish Government.

Mr. KING. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I object.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that it go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

RESOLUTIONS OF IDAHO MINING ASSOCIATION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I submit resolutions adopted at the tenth annual convention of the Idaho Mining Association at Boise, Idaho, and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. Those resolutions have already been printed in the RECORD. The Senator does not want them printed again, does he?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; if they have already been printed in the RECORD, I withdraw the application.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is withdrawn.

WORK OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. At the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is detained by illness, I ask, in his name, that the statement I send to the desk regarding the work of the Judiciary Committee may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. If there are none, resolutions coming over from previous days are in order.

THE CALENDAR—PROPOSED UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be extended until 3 o'clock and that the time be devoted to the consideration of unobjected bills and resolutions on the calendar, commencing where we left off at the last call.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall object to that unless I can have the right to present a matter that is not on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that, or any other unobjected matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to have the assurance that at some time during the day or evening we will return to the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. CURTIS. It is my intention to ask, and I do ask as a part of the unanimous-consent agreement, if the unobjected bills are concluded before 3 o'clock, that the balance of the time be devoted to the bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, there are two District bills on the calendar that are of the utmost importance to every Member of the Senate, and that must be passed at a very early hour if they are to become laws, as the House has to concur in them.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw my request.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4413.

Mr. CUMMINS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no resolution coming over from a previous day. The morning business is closed.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a resolution lying upon the table.

Mr. CURTIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KING. That is the regular order, if the Senator will pardon me. I ask its consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. The regular order is the calendar up to 1 o'clock.

Mr. KING. It is on the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. KING. The morning hour has not yet expired, and under the morning-hour call I have asked for the consideration of a resolution which is lying upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have to make a motion to that effect.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offered the resolution and asked that it lie upon the table subject to my call, and I am calling it up now.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution is upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Resolutions upon the table must be taken up by motion.

Mr. KING. Then I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 454.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. LODGE. I think there may be some misunderstanding about this. This resolution comes over from a previous day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. It is on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware it is on the table, but I understood that it was the request of the Senator that it should be taken up when he called for it.

Mr. KING. I am calling it up now; that is, it is coming up from a previous day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution was ordered to lie on the table on February 26.

Mr. KING. Then I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 454) submitted by Mr. KING February 26, 1923, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate approves of the adherence by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, accepting the adjoining statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, excepting therefrom the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction; said adherence to be made upon the following conditions and understandings, to be made a part of the act of adherence:

(1) That such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the covenant of the League of Nations constituting part of the treaty of Versailles.

(2) That the United States shall be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other States members, respectively, of the council and assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings of either the council or the assembly for the election of judges or deputy judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice or for the filling of vacancies.

(3) That the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the court as determined and appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States.

(4) That the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice adjoined to the protocol shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

Mr. KING and Mr. HARRISON asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCORMICK. Just a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. A point of order. The roll call was begun.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. I make a point of order. The roll call had begun, and one name was called.

Mr. McCORMICK. Nobody answered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] responded.

Mr. MOSES. We will take the record at the desk on that.

Mr. McCORMICK. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. KING. A point of order. The yeas and nays were demanded, a sufficient number sustained the demand, the Chair ordered the Secretary to proceed with the calling of the roll, and the Senator from Arizona responded to his name.

Mr. MOSES. The record does not show that.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not know whether it does or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. I heard him answer; and half a dozen Senators around me heard his response.

Mr. MOSES. Let us see whether the record shows it. We can determine it by reference to the record.

Mr. KING. I insist that the calling of the roll be proceeded with.

Mr. ASHURST. I responded to my name.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McCORMICK. I withdraw the motion which I made in the confusion lest the issue before the Senate be misunderstood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on taking from the table the resolution offered by the Senator from Utah, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST (when his name was called). I have already answered, but I respond again "yea."

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Senate is in gross disorder. I call for a ruling on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point is well taken, and the Senate will be in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. There has been much disorder in the Chamber and the Secretary has not read the resolution—I do not know what it is about, and no one else knows, in my opinion.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary read the resolution by number and title. The roll call will proceed.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and in his absence, not being able to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He has not voted; and, not being able to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 49, as follows:

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. KING.

PAYMENTS TO NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE OFFICERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution perfecting the resolution which I heretofore offered, dealing with the question of an international court. I ask that it be printed in regular resolution form, and also printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 471) was ordered to be printed and lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the Government of the United States from the beginning of its establishment has been in favor of the settlement of international disputes by the peaceable methods of diplomatic negotiation and arbitration; and

Whereas the President of the United States in many cases has acted as arbitrator or umpire between nations with respect to international disputes submitted to him for decision; and

Whereas Congress in 1890 passed a concurrent resolution, "that the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite, from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any Government with which the United States has, or may have, diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two Governments, which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency, may be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means"; and

Whereas the United States in 1908 and 1909 entered into 19 general conventions of arbitration; and

Whereas the United States participated in the international peace conference at The Hague and at said conference took a leading part in support of the proposals for the establishment of a Permanent Court of International Justice, having authority to decide justiciable controversies between nations and to enter judgments accordingly; and

Whereas the government of the League of Nations provided that the council of the league should formulate and submit to the members of the league plans for the establishment of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which should be competent to hear and determine any disputes of an international character which the parties thereto should submit to it, and which also might give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the council or the assembly of the League of Nations; and

Whereas, pursuant to said provisions in the covenant of the League of Nations, the council of the league appointed an advisory committee of jurists, which sat at The Hague in the summer of 1920 and formulated a plan for the establishment of such Permanent Court of International Justice, which plan, with certain amendments, was thereafter incorporated in the statute constituting the Permanent Court of International Justice which was adopted by the assembly of the League of Nations on December 13, 1920; and

Whereas upon the 16th day of December, 1920, a protocol was prepared to which said statute was adjoined and which provided for the acceptance of said statute by the States signatory to said protocol: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate, two-thirds of the Senators concurring, advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to said protocol of December 16, 1920, accepting the adjoined statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, excepting therefrom the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction; such adherence to be upon the following conditions and understandings, which shall be made a part of the act of adherence:

(1) That such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the covenant of the League of Nations, constituting part 1 of the treaty of Versailles.

(2) That the United States shall be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other States' members, respectively, of the council and assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings of either the council or the assembly for the election of members of the Permanent Court of International Justice or for the filling of vacancies.

(3) That the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the court as determined and appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States.

(4) That the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice adjoined to the protocol shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

Mr. KING. I also take this opportunity to read a telegram just received by me, reading as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., March 3, 1923.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING, of Utah,
Washington, D. C.:

Michigan Council Prevention War, representing 20 large groups, urges record vote on international court.

GAIUS GLENN ATKINS.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14222, to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be extended to 3 o'clock, and I again renew my request that unobjected bills be considered, commencing where we left off, the call of the calendar to begin after the bill the Senator from Iowa has moved to have taken up is disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I want that request to include some other unobjected matters.

Mr. CURTIS. I will include all unobjected bills and resolutions.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let us have order. It is impossible on this side of the Chamber to hear the colloquy in the center aisle.

Mr. CUMMINS. If I understood the proposal of the Senator from Kansas correctly, I have no objection to it. As I understood it, it was that after the bill to which my motion was directed has been disposed of the calendar shall be taken up and called for unobjected bills.

Mr. CURTIS. Until 3 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I simply want to say for the information of the Senate, this being the last day of the session, that if House bill 14222 is taken up it will lead to a very considerable amount of discussion. It can not be passed very quickly. I am not going to object; I am willing to have it considered on its merits, of course, but if the Senate takes it up it will require a considerable amount of time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will state that before 1 o'clock the motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement requested by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Am I to understand that under the unanimous-consent agreement, first, the bill proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is to be disposed of, and then the calendar is to be taken up? Is that the understanding?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Secretary please read the unanimous-consent request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will state his unanimous-consent request again.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be extended until 3 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, again I bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that there are a large number of bills and resolutions which are not on the calendar, and some on the table, which have not been called. If those are to receive any consideration whatever the Senate must proceed in an orderly manner and under some arrangement. It is a physical impossibility to dispose of all the matters that are pending in the Senate. Personally, I think the bill which the Senator from Iowa has moved to consider should be disposed of. It is a very important measure. I believe that it can be disposed of under a unanimous-consent agreement. It must be realized by every Senator that if anyone chooses to take the responsibility for defeating this measure or any other of the measures now pending in the Senate, under the conditions under which we are transacting business here, he can probably accomplish his end.

I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we proceed under a unanimous-consent agreement until the hour of 3 o'clock, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, for the consideration of unobjected bills, including bills on the calendar and those on the table. At the expiration of that time I shall cooperate very cheerfully with the Senator from Iowa on his motion to bring before the Senate the bill he has moved to consider, and I shall cooperate with him to secure the final disposition of the measure.

Mr. CURTIS. As the hour of 1 o'clock has passed and the motion is pending, I add to the request that the motion shall be considered as pending at 3 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I heartily assent to that and I hope that the agreement may be entered into.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Otherwise the entire day will be wasted and no business will be transacted.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to say to the Senate that there are about 50 House bills on the calendar which ought to be disposed of, and I think most of them can be disposed of without objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. MCNARY. Wait a minute, Mr. President. I have not yet consented. I want to know if at the hour of 3 o'clock the motion of the Senator from Iowa will be pending?

Mr. CUMMINS. It will be pending at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MCNARY. Then, if the motion of the Senator from Iowa is agreed to by the Senate and debate may proceed the rest of the day, as has been threatened, what chance will we have to take up any other bill on the calendar?

Mr. CURTIS. Until 3 o'clock the calendar would be in order, and the motion of the Senator from Iowa would be pending at 3 o'clock. After the unobjected bills are disposed of, if that is before 3 o'clock—and they ought to be disposed of by 2 or half past 2—we would have the balance of the time on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. MCNARY. That does not bring any comfort to me at all because of the very threat that the bill of the Senator from Iowa will take the remainder of the session.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so.

Mr. MCNARY. I shall have no objection if there may be a limitation of debate on the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill has been passed by the House after a great deal of consideration——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (to Mr. CUMMINS). Move to take up the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have moved to take it up.

Mr. MCNARY. I do not think that I can give my consent to the request of the Senator from Kansas, because I know the bill of the Senator from Iowa is going to occupy a great deal of time.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the rule a motion to take up a bill on the calendar is not debatable before 1 o'clock. This motion was made before 1 o'clock. Is it debatable?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Iowa has moved to proceed to the consideration of the alien property bill, and that is the pending motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have moved to take it up.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order on the motion.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to make a suggestion to the Chair, it is now after the hour of 1 o'clock and the motion is pending, and consequently the limitation as to debate does not now apply, I submit. The motion is debatable now.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the question I propounded to the Chair, and the Senator from Ohio is answering it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a hiatus just before 1 o'clock and just after 1 o'clock, owing to the attempt to get a unanimous-consent agreement. The rule provides that all motions made before 2 o'clock, the Senate meeting at 12, which to-day is 1 o'clock, the Senate having met at 11, shall be proceeded with without debate.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the rule says 2 o'clock, but that means of course 1 o'clock to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has just so stated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest to the Chair that if the Senator's motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill was made before 1 o'clock it can not be debated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was made before 1 o'clock, and the Chair was about to rule that the motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, which is not debatable.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise to make a statement. On the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] it was suggested by him that the Senate should proceed to a matter of great importance. I do not wish by my vote on that motion to be considered as in any sense hostile to that proposal, but I did not believe anyone could seriously propose that the subject should be made the order of business at this time.

Mr. KING. I deny the position taken by the Senator if he attributes his last remark to me. I was serious, and I think it ought to be seriously considered. It is a very important and serious question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. WILLIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. SHIELDS. In regard to the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to take up his resolution in regard to the international court. I wish to say a word about my vote on that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order under the present motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to take up House bill 14222.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to be recognized to make a statement——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is to proceed with the roll call. Let the roll be called.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr.

FLETCHER] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted. At that time my pair had not voted and he has not yet appeared in the Chamber. I am unable to obtain a transfer, so I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). That Senator has not voted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 10, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire, in the briefest possible way, to state the general features of this bill. The Alien Property Custodian has in his hands at this time property of the estimated value of $350,000,000. This bill, if enacted into law, will enable him to return under the circumstances which I shall presently state about $45,000,000 of either the property or the money now in his hands. In the administration of the laws the properties seized by the Alien Property Custodian during the war have been denominated as trust estates. The Alien Property Custodian at this time has 30,000 of those separate and independent estates, so called. This bill provides for the return of such of those estates as are under $10,000 in value. I am sure Senators will find it interesting when I say that the average of the estates under $10,000 is $750. The Alien Property Custodian is now taking care of and administering as best he can at enormous expense 30,000 estates, 27,000 of which do not average more than $750. This bill, if it be enacted into law, will enable the Alien Property Custodian to return and close up 27,000 of those estates, and yet will take from the funds in his hands not more than $45,000,000 or $50,000,000. The general purpose of the bill is to return to their former owners estates of $10,000 and lesser amounts, where, of course, the estates are not of that value, and that no matter what the citizenship of the claimant or owner may be.

The bill has some other features which will be undoubtedly noted as the debate proceeds, but I do not intend now to take the time to go over the bill in detail, because I think nearly everybody is somewhat familiar with the subject. The main purpose of the bill, however, is to give back to the poor people, the owners of limited amounts of property, what the Alien Property Custodian now has, and which it is costing either the owner or the Government more to administer than the property is worth. It is proposed to give their property back and not to execute upon them the law of confiscation.

So far as I am concerned—I make no hesitation whatever about it—if I were able, I would not confiscate any of this property. I do not believe it is in consonance either with morals or with the law to do so. This bill, however, is founded upon the theory that there will be sufficient remaining in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, when all the property is turned back which can be turned back under the proposed law, to satisfy all the claims of American citizens who suffered injury at the hands of the German Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the bill make provision for compensating in cash for property which has been taken over and disposed of by the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. CUMMINS. That depends on the circumstances. If the property can be returned in kind as taken, it will be so returned; but if it has been converted into money, its value will be returned in money.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire further, does not the treaty between this Government and Germany provide that we may use this property for the satisfaction of American claims?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And in such case would the Senator from Iowa use the word "confiscation" if we did so use this property?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. In the first place, I may say that I can not believe that Germany had any legal or moral right three or four years after the war to pledge the property of her nationals to satisfy a debt due from her to American citizens; but that is merely my own personal opinion. We are retaining enough money or property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to satisfy, according to the experience of the past in regard to such claims, all these claims.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Iowa voted for the ratification of the treaty, did he not, which gave to this Government the right to use this property?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I did; but the fact that I voted for the treaty does not bind me to believe that Germany could, morally or legally, expropriate the property of her citizens three years after the war to pay claims against her.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me that is putting this Government in the position of confiscating any of this property which it may see fit to apply to the satisfaction of American claims. I really regret very much that the very able and distinguished Senator from Iowa should assume any such position as that. It seems to me that the Government of the United States is not dealing in this respect with the individual alien, but must do whatever it sees fit to do after negotiations or some dealing with the Government of Germany, if we are to get our money without taking the attitude of absolutely robbing the individual alien; and I do not like to see this Government of ours put in any such category as that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The view of the Senator from New Mexico evidently puts the Government of the United States precisely in the attitude of confiscating the property of aliens. Germany attempted, as I have stated, three or four years after the World War to say with regard to this property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, "We will take that property from the persons who own it and expropriate it and hand it over to the Government of the United States in order that there may be satisfied from its proceeds the claims which American citizens have established against the German Government." I do not believe that it had any right to do that, or that my vote for the German treaty is at all inconsistent with the position that I have now assumed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I must again regret that with some temerity I differ from the distinguished Senator from Iowa. It seems to me that under the Alien Property Custodian act we simply took over that property to be kept until after the war was over, and that we made no resolution concerning its disposition; but after the war was over then we entered into a treaty with the Government of Germany which did provide how that property might be disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Alien Property Custodian act distinctly stated that it should be disposed of as Congress thereafter might provide.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. And Congress has not provided for its disposition at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Government of the United States by treaty, which, at least, is of the same dignity as an act of Congress, made an arrangement as to what should be done with the property; and it does seem to me that our Government should act in an orderly way regarding it, and that it ought not to be subject to the imputation of confiscation.

Mr. CUMMINS. The only way in which Congress has ever acted upon the matter at all has been in the declaration of peace that preceded the treaty by some months, and that only by reciting certain provisions in the Versailles treaty. Our committee has acted upon the theory that we were not interfering with any of the property that would be needed to satisfy these claims. The whole theory of this bill is that there will be abundant property or money remaining in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian after the $45,000,000 that is estimated to be the amount that will be paid out under this bill has been paid out.

The committee, after very careful consideration, came to believe that the estimate made by the experts of the Alien Property Custodian's office were accurate, and that there would be vastly more in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian than would be necessary to pay all the claims which would be allowed by the mixed commission, which is now in operation.

Mr. President, it is pathetic when one understands the circumstances of a great many of these small property holders whose property was taken under the act. When it is remembered that there are a great many claims that amount to $10,000 or more or run well up to $10,000, and when it is remembered that the average of all the claims under $10,000 is only $750, it seems to me well-nigh a crime to deny those people, who, of course, are not people of large affairs, the ordinary civilized, humane way of dealing with such things. Mr. President, I shall not recount the instances that have come under my observation, but when we are appropriating money for want and suffering elsewhere in the world, I think it would be only just to consider the want and suffering entailed on some of these people who live in the United States because of the retention of this property by the Alien Property Custodian.

I do not intend to go into these instances, because I want to finish this bill just as soon as possible. I have stated the main purpose of the bill. There are some other provisions made in the bill which undoubtedly will be referred to as we go on; but I want the Senate to understand that in returning these trusts under $10,000 we would not impair the security of the American citizens against the German Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in his brief but comprehensive statement has presented reasons which to many will be convincing, if not conclusive, as justifying the pending measure. I shall support it and hope that it will receive the approval of the Senate. On its face the bill seems to be free from complications or any substantial or valid reason against its enactment. Briefly, the proposition is to return to German, Austrian, and Hungarian citizens property of the value of approximately $45,000,000 which is in the possession of the Alien Property Custodian. There is additional property owned by German citizens of the value of approximately $300,000,000 now in the custody of the same official. Objection is made by some to the restoration of any of the sequestered property, because there are claims pending by American citizens against the German Government growing out of wrongs and international transgressions by Germany during the World War.

Undoubtedly Germany, before the United States entered the war, as well as subsequently, disregarded accepted principles of international law and committed wrongs not only against our Government and its citizens but against other nations, belligerent and neutral, and their nationals. Germany may not escape her transgressions, and must meet the legitimate demands of American citizens. Germany must compensate for her ruthless destruction of American property and American lives upon the high seas. She must pay all valid claims which American citizens may have against her. For that purpose a Mixed Claims Commission has been set up, authorized to investigate and adjudicate the claims which American nationals may have against Germany. This commission is now engaged in this important undertaking. Undoubtedly many claims have been filed before the commission that are totally devoid of merit and which should promptly be disallowed by the commission. I have been somewhat astonished at the lack of conscience exhibited by some Americans and by the representatives of insurance companies and other American corporations as to the character of the claims presented for indemnification. Some of these claims are not founded upon justice or equity and reflect such a callous indifference to the right as to merit condemnation or such a sublime stupidity upon the part of those submitting them as to excite profound pity. However, it may be assumed—and properly so—that the commission will deal with them in a manner which will indicate to Germany and to the world that justice has not "fled to brutish beasts."

When the Kaiser's Government deliberately set out to destroy neutral shipping and to violate accepted canons of international law it must have understood that sooner or later amends would have to be made. But the misdeeds and international offenses of the central empire afford no justification for the infliction of wrongs upon the new governments which have arisen out of their ruins, or upon the nationals of those governments. The violation of a national or an individual right by a truculent and evil power furnishes no sufficient reason for the commission of acts of injustice against it or its people. Germany must be made to pay, as I have stated, whatever is fair and just, because of her transgressions against our Government and its citizens. Justice demands that it do this much. It would be an injustice and a cruel wrong to demand that she do more.

I am prompted to make these observations because, as I am advised, claims aggregating between $600,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 have been presented to the Mixed Claims Commission against Germany by American citizens and American corporations. I made some investigations in regard to these claims and have no hesitancy in saying that many of them are entirely destitute of merit, and those who submitted them must experience—if they have any sense of decency or justice—a feeling of humiliation akin to disgrace. I have tried to ascertain what would be the maximum amount that Germany would probably be called upon to pay. The view entertained by many who have made careful investigation in regard to this matter is that claims which will finally be allowed against Germany will not exceed $100,000,000. I am inclined to agree with that view. However, I am certain that the amount of property remaining in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, after restoring to the owners the various amounts provided for in this bill, will be more than sufficient to meet any possible American claims that Germany will be called upon to meet. It would seem, therefore, that no valid objection would lie against the passage of this bill.

The present situation in some parts of Germany is tragic in the extreme. Poverty and suffering, and, indeed, starvation, are not strangers to many parts of this once rich and prosperous country. Thirty thousand so-called "trusts" will receive money or other property under the provisions of this bill. How many persons are interested in these 30,000 "trusts" I am unable to state, but undoubtedly there are several times 30,000 individuals who will be directly benefited by the distribution of forty or fifty millions of property under the terms of the pending measure.

The average amount to be paid to each of the 30,000 "trusts" is, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, less than $700, but benefits that will be derived by the impoverished and suffering people of Germany from the receipt of the amount carried by this bill are incalculable.

Mr. President, my views with respect to the question of restoring to the nationals of Germany and Austria and Hungary the property which was sequestrated under the trading with the enemy act have been upon a number of occasions presented to the Senate. I have not looked with any degree of tolerance upon the proposition championed by men of influence and standing that the property of German and Austrian and Hungarian nationals which was found in the United States at the time we entered the war should be confiscated and applied to liquidate either the claims of the United States or its nationals against the German or Austrian or Hungarian Governments or the nationals of either of these Governments.

In the Sixty-sixth Congress I offered a bill which called for the restoration to the owners all property held by the Alien Property Custodian. The measure which I introduced provided a tribunal having judicial functions to ascertain the ownership of the property involved and to make proper adjudication as to the same. The proceedings authorized were in the nature of proceedings in rem, in order that the rights of the various claimants to the property might be adjudicated and proper satisfaction of judgment be entered.

No action was taken by the Senate upon this bill, though I urged its consideration. At the beginning of the Sixty-seventh Congress I offered the same bill and endeavored to secure action upon it. Several months ago it was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, as well as another bill which I offered containing provisions similar to those in the pending measure. Upon a number of occasions I have stated to the Senate that, in my opinion, this great Nation should not violate its traditional policy and confiscate the property of aliens that had been invested or acquired in the United States prior to the war.

Mr. President, I did not oppose the bill which authorized the sale by the Alien Property Custodian of property which he had seized. It was my understanding, however, that perishable property and property that would depreciate in value would be sold and the proceeds held, to be restored to the owners when the war was over. Under that statute property was sold which, in my opinion, should not have been disposed of. For instance, patents, trade-marks, and copyrights were sold by the Alien Property Custodian for insignificant prices. More than 4,500 patents and trade-marks were sold to the Chemical Foundation for the trifling sum of $250,000. It was not a sale but a fraudulent transaction. When my attention was called to the fact I presented it to the Senate and later demanded that the Attorney General of the United States bring suit to set aside the sale and have the property returned to the Alien Property Custodian, to be held until disposed of by Congress. Many months later action was taken by the Attorney General, the bill drawn, which is the basis of the suit, charges fraud and corruption upon the part of various persons, including some who were connected with the dye monopoly of the United States, which resulted in the sale.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, is it the impression of the Senator from Utah that the Chemical Foundation, which received these patents, can profit by them?

Mr. KING. Well——

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is laughing now. The law says they shall have 6 per cent on their investment, but they have the right, as an agency, to forbid people the right to manufacture under these patents.

Mr. KING. I will say to my friend that I am sure his question is asked in the utmost good faith——

Mr. CARAWAY. It is. My impression is that they are simply semipublic officials in the holding of this property, merely for the benefit as trustees of the whole American public, in order to prevent a monopoly. If somebody should acquire these patents, they would possibly have a monopoly, as Germany had before, but now anybody can make an application for a lease and manufacture these products under these copyrights and patents, as I understand it. If I am not right about it, I am laboring under a very serious misapprehension.

Mr. KING. I think the understanding of my able friend is substantially correct; that is to say, the corporation was so formed, the machinery was so constituted, as to give that impression; and if the corporation was properly controlled, and conducted by the proper persons, then perhaps it might be considered that such persons were holding the property for the benefit of the American people. But unfortunately the record shows that the dye monopoly of the United States furnished the money to search the records, was conspicuous in the organization of the Chemical Foundation, supplied a great part of the money for that purpose, and the patents and the corporation have been controlled by the monopoly since the organization of the corporation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. KING. I will ask my friend to let me complete this. That matter I discussed very fully when we were discussing the tariff bill, and I devoted considerable time to my views in respect to that transaction. Now I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I recall now that the Senator did discuss that, and I will not interrupt him further in that regard.

Mr. KING. Conceding, however, that that property was sold for the very best of purposes, it is not denied that it was sold for a wholly inadequate price.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Alien Property Custodian sold to the Navy Department range finders and sold to the military department gun sights of such tremendous importance that they revolutionized the use of field artillery. The people who owned those patents had a contract for the gun sights carrying a royalty of $75 on each sight. They were sold to the Navy and War Departments, as I understand it, for $1 each. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. I am not advised as to that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is my recollection. I know it was just an insignificant figure, but I think it was $1 each. After we got the gun sights we permitted the countries who were associated with us in the war to use them. If we had no right to sell them to the War Department, Mr. President, somebody would owe a tremendous royalty for their use, and one seems to me to be just like the other. If the Chemical Foundation is not being properly managed, the officers of that corporation ought to be prosecuted. But why destroy the framework which was intended to prevent monopolies and intended to build up in this country a great chemical and dye industry? Why not prosecute the officers if they are not doing their duty? I am not intimating that they are not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Government under its sovereign power had the right to take private property for Government purposes, even though the property belonged to aliens. During the war it could have taken property owned by the Senator from Arkansas and myself if it were needed for governmental purposes. The property of aliens was likewise subject to expropriation by the Government, of course due compensation being paid therefor. But I am criticizing not the taking of property for a public use but the fraudulent sale of property worth millions for a wholly inadequate price, and primarily to satisfy corporations and individuals who framed the scheme to deprive the German owners of this property without making payment therefor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask a question?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to get some information. If they should have been sold for their value and it had then determined to return the value of the property to Germany would they have gotten thirty or forty million dollars for the property?

Mr. KING. Is the Senator asking for my opinion?

Mr. CARAWAY. If it were sold for $250,000 and we returned the proceeds to the Germans, they would get only $250,000?

Mr. KING. Obviously.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Attorney General shall succeed in his suit and it is resold, the profit will inure to the former enemies of this country, will it not? The loss will be to the chemical industries of this counrty, and the profit will be with the people with whom we were engaged in war, if the Attorney General shall succeed in his suit.

Mr. KING. The Alien Property Custodian perhaps had the right to dispose of these patents. He had been authorized to take them into his possession, and later the law was amended authorizing the sale of sequestrated property. However, he was holding the property as trustee. In my opinion no property should have been sold that was not perishable or its situation such that it would change to the disadvantage of the owner of the property by the passage of time. But where he did sell it was his duty to perform the obligations of an honest and faithful trustee and sell the property for the highest possible price——

Mr. CARAWAY. May I again interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. Let me complete the thought. If he failed to do this he abused his trust. He committed a wrong against the United States, who was the responsible trustee, and he committed a wrong against the owner of the property, who had been deprived temporarily of possession because of the exigencies of war.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to a fact I fear he has forgotten, that when the recommendation to change the law so as to permit the trustee to sell instead of holding the actual physical property was made, accompanying the recommendation was a full statement showing that they purposed to sell these chemical patents to the Chemical Foundation for $250,000. The Congress was also informed that the gun sights and range finders were to be sacrificed, as I now remember, for $1 each; so that the Congress changed the law with the full knowledge that these properties were to be sold in the manner that they were transferred. I know the Senator will pardon me, but it occurs to me to be a little bit unfair to criticize the then Alien Property Custodian, who subsequently became the Attorney General, for doing the very thing that Congress was informed he would do if they should amend the law to permit it being done.

Mr. KING. I was not aware of the information which the Senator has stated, and this is the first time, as I recall, that it has been brought to my attention. In reply let me say that the facts already disclosed show that months before the plan was submitted to Congress for authority to sell this property certain persons interested in the establishment and maintenance of a dye monopoly in the United States hatched a scheme to rob the owners of their ownership therein and to secure control of the same. They conducted an extensive propaganda and actively lobbied in Washington to secure legislation authorizing the sale of this property. They were successful, and, as the facts subsequently showed, they did obtain the control of these patents and are still exercising such control. I did not know until the Senator mentioned it that the sale had been authorized for $250,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not mean to say that we authorized it, but, with the full knowledge that the Alien Property Custodian intended to do it, we amended the law so as to make it possible for him to do it.

Mr. KING. So far as I now recall, this is the first information that has come to me in regard to the sale of the property for $250,000. Indeed, I was not aware that the patents were to be sold, and did not know of their sale until some time after it had taken place, nor did I know—or at least if I did I have forgotten it—that it was intended to sell some of the sequestrated patents to the Navy Department for the sum of $1. Conceding that Congress was advised that the patents were to be disposed of for wholly inadequate sums, and with such knowledge authorized the Alien Property Custodian to make sales of the same, I must dissent from the action of Congress and express the view that it was not to its credit. In my view it would have been reprehensible for Congress, if it knew that property of the value of $50,000,000 which had been seized and taken away from its owners, who had placed the property in the United States lawfully and under the protection of law, was to be sold for $250,000 under some arrangement made with the custodian, and with such knowledge it passed a law authorizing the sale for that sum. Such act could not be justified, in my opinion, on the ground that it was or might be beneficial to our country or would promote an important industry. Such a course would be naked confiscation, and an act of Congress authorizing it could not transmute a wrong into a virtue.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is conscious of the fact that the Government could have seized the property and made no kind of restitution?

Mr. KING. No; I am not conscious of that fact. I am conscious of the fact that it could have done so by force, just as I am conscious of the fact that Germany seized Belgian property and French property, which it confiscated, and in so doing aroused the conscience of the civilized world against her. She violated international law and those rules of civilization which we believe should prevail in an enlightened age, not only in dealing with the allied nations but also with this Nation.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The treaty of Versailles would have made these properties subject to pay our nationals, would it not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Properties which we seized?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the Senator was in favor of ratifying that treaty, was he not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Therefore the Senator was willing to ratify a treaty that would have made this property absolutely ours and disregarded the rights of the original owners.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I am just asking a question.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator's question. I can not answer that categorically. I voted for the ratification of the Versailles treaty, though, as I said, there were provisions I did not like.

I believed that if the treaty were ratified Congress would restore sequestrated property to its owners. There was so much good in the treaty that I felt that it should be ratified, notwithstanding its serious defects and the compelling need of subsequent rectification in many particulars. I did not believe that the ratification of the treaty permitted the United States to adopt a policy of confiscation. I would not have voted then, nor will I vote now, for a naked, bald, confiscatory act that will subject the property of aliens who left it in our care and who invested in our country under treaty guaranties and the sanctions of international law, to the payment of claims of our Government or of American citizens against former belligerent nations because of their torts and international transgressions.

The Senator from Arkansas says, as I understand him, that the treaty authorized confiscation. Conceded. That does not compel us to confiscate property. We may be granted the privilege to do so. That does not compel us to accept the privilege. And it must not be forgotten that Germany signed the Versailles treaty practically at the point of a gun. If she was coerced into the adoption of a policy which provided for confiscation of privately owned property in contravention of international law and of the terms of a valid treaty, that of 1828, which protected the property of both German and American nationals, in the event of war between the two nations, from seizure and confiscation, then that fact may very properly be taken into account when the United States, more than four years after the war ended and the animosities and hatreds that then existed are presumed to have been mitigated, if not eradicated, is called upon to act, legislatively, with respect to such property and which is in its custody.

May I suggest, however, there is a moral question involved which must not be overlooked. The United States has led the world in its efforts to liberalize and make more humane international usages and to give sacredness and immunity to privately owned property during the days of war. I shall discuss that matter later in my remarks, but I would like to add at this point that even from a material point of view the American people are deeply interested in maintaining the doctrine that the property of nationals is immune from seizure and confiscation by their respective nations in times of war. We have billions invested in all parts of the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I will yield in a moment. More than a billion and a quarter have been invested by Americans in Mexico, and our holdings in Europe are increasing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not question what the Senator has said about private property and its confiscation in war, but I am wondering, in this particular case, just what Germany has done toward paying the families of those who were lost on the Lusitania and other nationals of the United States.

Mr. KING. Germany has done nothing by way of payment as yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think when we adopt these high principles, and I agree with the Senator about them entirely, that we ought to make them reciprocal. Germany has violated them, but now we are in a position to force her to make this doctrine reciprocal—this splendid doctrine which the Senator has announced and which I approve of most cordially. We have the opportunity now to make that doctrine reciprocal by forcing a just treatment of our own nationals. I have a little notion lurking away down in my own mind somewhere that we ought to give our own nationals some consideration in the settlement of these questions.

Mr. KING. My friend from Tennessee announced his adherence to high moral principles and then declared he would not apply them because some other nation did not live up to our idealism.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstands me. I said we were in a peculiar position whereby we could force Germany——

Mr. KING. Oh, I understood the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. Force Germany to carry out the same high ideals as to inviolability of personal property and the rights of nationals. It seems to me we ought to do it in the interest of our own nationals.

Mr. KING. I do not assent to all the Senator says. Of course, we must protect American citizens, and we will do so, and Germany will be compelled to make reparations for the wrongs which she has committed and which under the negotiated treaty with her she is obligated to pay. However, I would not willingly violate high principles of international law which we have preached to the world for more than 150 years in order to secure the immediate payment of a few million dollars to American citizens who are justly entitled to compensation from Germany. We can do justice and "carry on" the great moral principles that should guide international relations and at the same time require Germany to discharge her duties and obligations—obligations which under the same moral law as well as under treaties she must perform. But let me add by way of extenuation for Germany—and the Lord knows she needs some defense—that she has requested the establishment of an international commission in order to know what she owes to American citizens. The commmission has been appointed. It is now earnestly engaged in its important work with a former associate justice of our Supreme Court at the head of the commission.

Claims have been presented to the commission by American citizens, including the families of the victims of the Lusitania who went to a watery grave because Germany violated international law, and I have no doubt that judgment will be rendered by this commission against the German Government and that that judgment will be paid.

May I not suggest to the Senator a point which Mr. Wilson, whom we both followed, forcibly made? He differentiated between the German Government and the German people. May we not have our demands for reparation tempered by the thought that there are millions of people in Germany—men, women, and children—who did not indorse the sinking of the Lusitania, who opposed the violation of international law, and who morally may not be held for the transgressions of their government?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not desirous of punishing them at all, neither do I want the German Government to punish our nationals. The Senator knows, because he has had experience at the bar, that frequently one obtains a large judgment against a defendant who is unable to pay it, and while we win in judgment, we lose on execution of the judgment and fail to get the money.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment——

Mr. KING. No; I do not care to yield until I state my position.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. KING. I would not use as a club over the German Government to compel her to make reparation for wrongs done the threat to confiscate the property of a large number of poor and destitute German people. I would feel more inclined to pay American citizens from the Federal Treasury all valid claims than to confiscate the property of private individuals invested in our country in reliance upon treaties and our invitation and guaranty of protection. Moreover, payment can be obtained from Germany other than by the road of confiscation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that the same German Government the Senator speaks of cost this Nation of ours $42,000,000,000. I am not so very considerate of the claims of the German Government in the matter. I think we ought to look after our own affairs a little.

Mr. KING. The Senator misinterprets my statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield to me to make an answer to that suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. We are holding enough money in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to pay all claims that may be adjudged against the German Government by the Claims Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does that include the $240,000,000 or $250,000,000 for keeping our soldiers on the Rhine that the German Government agreed to pay? I doubt very much whether there is enough to cover that.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not a claim by American citizens against Germany.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but it is a claim by the American Government against the German Government that ought to be looked after if we are looking after the people's business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator misconceives my position, apparently. I am not so much concerned about the German Government as I have indicated. When we ascertain what Germany owes American nationals we will make Germany pay it, if we have to blockade her ports. There is no question about that. Germany can not escape the wrongs which the German Government committed against American citizens. She has to respond in damages and she will respond in damages, either voluntarily or involuntarily.

Mr. President, after this extended diversion resulting from the colloquies of Senators, I return to the consideration of the question before us along the line I had projected. I concede that in the circumstances now existing with respect to the property now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, questions of international importance and of legal significance have arisen and which must be considered when legislation is proposed which seeks to restore to former alien enemies property which was sequestrated by our Government. Before examining these questions, permit me to present some of the reasons which prompted the introduction of the bill which I offered and led me to advocate the return to the owners of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian.

The progress of nations has been closely identified with trade and commerce, and international trade and commerce require investments by nationals in other than their own countries. If investments are insecure, if they are subject to seizure and confiscation in the event of war, then there is reluctance upon the part of the owners of property to place it beyond the jurisdiction of their own government. In ancient as well as more modern times neither the property nor the lives of aliens were secure if war broke out between nations and such aliens and their property were found in an enemy country. Aliens were seized and imprisoned and often killed, and their property was promptly confiscated. Even in the days of the Roman Empire these barbarous rules and practices obtained. The nationals of a belligerent country when found in an enemy country were often sold into slavery and, as I have stated, their property was seized and confiscated.

Mr. Oppenheim, in his work on international law, states that in former times all private and public enemy property, whether movable or immovable, in enemy territory could be confiscated at the outbreak of war. The same was true of enemy debts. The author also states that—> through the influence of treaties and the growth of municipal laws an international usage and practice grew up that belligerents should neither confiscate private enemy property nor annul enemy debts in their territory.

He alludes to the fact that the old practice became obsolete, so that no case of confiscation occurred during the nineteenth century.

Mr. John Bassett Moore refers to the old rule and declares that—> it is true that in certain early writers who reiterated the stern rules of the law of Rome sweeping generalizations may be found in which the right is asserted on the part of enemies to seize all properties and confiscate all debts. The same writers upon the same authority assert the lawfulness of treating all subjects of the belligerents as enemies, and as such of killing them, including women and children. These generalizations, even at the time when they were written, neither expressed nor purported to express the actual practice of nations, and it is superfluous to declare that the law of the present day is not to be found in them, for with the change of the practice of nations growing out of the advancement in human thought the law also has changed.

Hall, in his treatise on International Law, states that—> upon the whole, although subject to the qualification made, with reference to territorial waters, the seizure by belligerents of property within its jurisdiction would be entirely opposed to the drift of modern opinion and practice. The contrary usage, so far as personal property is concerned, was, until lately, too partial in its application and has covered a larger field for too short a time to enable appropriation to be forbidden on the ground of custom as a matter of strict law and as it is sanctioned by the general legal rule of immunity it can be established by custom alone. For the present, therefore, it can not be said that a belligerent does a distinctly illegal act in confiscating such personal property of his enemies within his jurisdiction as is not secured upon the public faith; but the absence of any instance of confiscation in the more recent European wars, no less than the common interests of all nations and present feeling, warrant the confident hope that the dying right will never again be put in force, and that it will soon be wholly extinguished by disuse.

Even before the days of Grotius the harshness and injustice of the old usage became apparent. Venice and the cities of the Hanseatic League and other progressive and enlightened countries contended for a mitigation of the evils resulting from insecurity of person and property internationally and which interfered with trade and commerce and that international comity essential to world progress. National isolation, it was perceived, was not compatible with progress. Publicists and enlightened leaders arose who denounced old conditions and usages and the narrow nationalism and provincial jealousies which separated and divided the peoples of different countries and constituted obstacles to individual, national, and international progress. Christianity, with its softening and ennobling influences, its catholic teachings, and its spiritual concepts, profoundly influenced Europe, as well as other parts of the world, and developed new relationships between individuals as well as among nations. There grew up a sentiment hostile to slavery and based upon a recognition of the inviolability of life and the theory that all men were entitled to enjoy equal civil and political rights; and as this view expanded and became controlling in nations there developed the view of the sanctity of property.

As individual liberty increased, as a corollary, the right to acquire and to possess property followed. And municipal law developed for the protection of individuals and property rights, and in time the idea grew that these rights were not alone to be enjoyed in the land of one's birth but should be recognized and protected in all lands. Treaties were negotiated between nations which incorporated this idea, and provided reciprocal guaranties for the nationals of the signatory nations. These treaties oftentimes provided for the free transit of individuals within the contracting nations and the full protection of property possessed by them. Commerce thus became international and broke down the narrow views which separated peoples and often provoked wars.

Wheaton and Hall and Oppenheim and Latifi and Lawrence and Westlake, and other writers upon international law, discuss the changes in the usages and practices of nations and their reactions upon international law. However, it took centuries to establish as a principle of international law the immunity of privately owned property from seizure by belligerent nations.

Indeed, the progress of this enlightened policy was so slow that it had not obtained in practice among all nations when the American Colonies declared their independence. In 1785 a treaty was negotiated by John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson with Prussia, and it was there provided, at the suggestion of the American commissioners, that in the event of war between the contracting parties not only would the property of the nationals of the respective countries be immune from seizure but the nationals themselves should be allowed to continue in their respective employments without molestation.

It further provided that in the event alien nationals desired to depart from the belligerent country they should have the right so to do within a period of nine months from the beginning of war and withdraw all their goods and property. This enlightened policy has been followed by our Nation from the beginning. It has not only contended for the immunity of private property from seizure upon land but it has taken the lead among all nations in the effort to secure the application of the same principle to privately owned property at sea.

During the administration of President Monroe efforts were made to have exempted private property upon the seas from seizure and to have applied thereto the same principles which by common consent exempted private property on shore from the destruction or depredation of war. President Pierce expressed the desire of the United States to concur in any proposition to exempt private property upon the ocean from seizure by public armed cruisers as well as by privateers, and President McKinley urged an international agreement to regard all property at sea as exempt from capture or destruction by the forces of belligerent powers. Senators are familiar with the fact that our Government at The Hague conference sought an agreement providing for the inviolability of private property at sea.

Returning to the point I was making a few moments ago that the United States, even before it was a Nation, or, rather, during the period of the confederation, contended for this enlightened and liberal rule respecting the immunity of private property from seizure by belligerent nations; the treaty which was negotiated in 1785 between the United States and Prussia was renewed in subsequent treaties between the same nations in 1799 and 1828. The latter treaty, by the way, was in force when we entered the war with Germany, and it is perhaps pertinent to remark at this point that the treaty contained a provision to the effect that in the event of war no pretext could be urged that the treaty was dissolved or that the provisions respecting the immunity of property and the right of the nationals to withdraw, together with their property, should be annulled or suspended, "but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided and during which they are as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature or nations." Soon after the formation of this Republic our Nation had an opportunity to apply the beneficent principle of the inviolability of property of alien enemies for which it had contended.

During the Revolutionary War some of the Colonies had enacted laws under which the property of British subjects had been confiscated. The Jay treaty, which, as Senators will recall, was exceedingly unpopular and subjected Washington to cruel misrepresentations and virulent criticisms, provided for the compensation of those whose property had been so confiscated.

This treaty was considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Ware v. Hylton (3 Dallas, 199). Virginia passed a statute which aimed at the confiscation of the property of British subjects. Under the law, Hylton, who was indebted to a British subject, paid the amount of the indebtedness into the hands of a representative of the State. After the war suit was brought by the British subject to recover from the estate of Hylton the amount of the indebtedness. The defendant pleaded as a defense the act of the Commonwealth of Virginia, but the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Patterson, declared that, though the question was raised as to whether the confiscation of debts contracted by individuals of different nations in time of peace is authorized under the law of nations, "such a rule has been considered as a relic of barbarism."

He then proceeded:

> It is certainly a hard one and can not continue long among commercial nations; indeed, it ought not to have existed among any nations and perhaps is generally exploded at the present day in Europe. Here is the language of Vattell on this subject (B. 3, ch. 5, sec. 77): "But at present, in regard to the advantage and safety of commerce, all the sovereigns of Europe have departed from this rigor, and as this custom has been generally received, he who should act contrary to it would injure the public faith; for strangers trusted his subject only from a firm persuasion that the general custom would be observed. The State does not so much as touch the sum which it owes to the enemy. Everywhere in case of war, funds credited to the public are exempt from confiscation and seizure."

Mr. Justice Patterson proceeds:

> The gain is at most temporary and inconsiderable; whereas the injury is certain and incalculable and the ignominy great and lasting. History furnishes a remarkable instance in support and illustration of the foregoing remarks. For in the war that broke out between France and Spain in the year 1684, his Catholic majesty endeavored to seize the effects of the subjects of France in his kingdom, but the attempt proved abortive, for not one Spanish agent or factor violated his trust or betrayed his French principal or correspondent.

Mr. Justice Wilson, in the same case, said:

> When the United States declared their independence they were bound to receive the law of nations in its modern state of purity and refinement. By every nation, whatever is its form of government, the confiscation of debts has long been considered disreputable, and we know that not a single confiscation of that kind stained the coat of any of the European powers who were engaged in the war which our revolution produced.

Chief Justice Marshall, in the famous case of Brown v. United States (8 Cranch, 122), condemned the policy of confiscating property of an alien enemy, and declared that the mitigation of the rigid rule which had formerly prevailed was the result of a humane and wise policy of modern times. He further said:

> It is not believed that modern usage would sanction the seizure of the goods of an enemy on land which were acquired in peace in the course of trade.

In the case of the United States v. Percheman (7 Peters, 51), Chief Justice Marshall said:

> The modern usages of nations which have become law would be violated; that sense of justice and of right which is acknowledged and felt by the whole civilized world would be outraged if private property should be generally confiscated and private rights annulled.

I might add that so completely had the view of the security of property of aliens obtained in our country that the United States in the War of 1812 regularly paid to the citizens of Great Britain the interest due on its own outstanding bonds. If time permitted I could refer to various decisions of our courts, as well as statements by numerous text writers, to support the proposition that the confiscation of property of enemy aliens, though it may be considered as a naked and impolitic right, is condemned by the enlightened conscience and judgment of modern times; indeed, I think it may be said that it has ceased to be a right, if the question of right is to be determined by the rules, usages, and practices obtaining among and sanctioned by enlightened and civilized nations. If there is a settled rule of international law, it is that in this commercial age, where impediments to travel are negligible and where investments are so universally made by individuals beyond the limits of their own countries in reliance upon treaties and upon comity existing among nations, that belligerent nations are under obligation to protect the property of enemy aliens as if they were trustees, and may not confiscate it under any conditions.

Perhaps no more powerful argument has been made in behalf of the sacredness of enemy-owned property than that submitted by Alexander Hamilton. In referring to the tenth article of the Jay treaty he denounced the policy of seizing the property of individuals which, in an authorized intercourse in peace times, was confided to the faith of the belligerent nations. He further states that—> the right of holding or having property in a country always implies a duty on the part of its government to protect that property and to secure to the owner the full enjoyment of it. Whenever, therefore, the Government grants permission to foreigners to acquire property within its territory, or to bring and deposit it there, it tacitly promises protection and security.

> There is no parity between the case of the persons and goods of enemies found in our own country and that of the persons and goods of enemies found elsewhere. In the former there is a reliance upon our hospitality and justice; there is an express or implied safe conduct; the individuals and their property are in the custody of our faith; they have no power to resist our will; they can lawfully make no defense against our violence; they are deemed to owe a temporary allegiance, and for endeavoring resistance would be punished as criminals, a character inconsistent with that of an enemy. To make them a prey is, therefore, to infringe every rule of generosity and equity; it is to add cowardice to treachery. In the latter case there is no confidence whatever reposed in us; no claim upon our hospitality, justice, or good faith; there is the simple character of an enemy, with entire liberty to oppose force to force.
> Moreover, the property of the foreigners within our country may be regarded as having paid a valuable consideration for its protection and exemption from forfeiture; that which is brought in commonly enriches the revenue by a duty of entry. All that is within our territory, whether acquired there or brought there, is liable to contribution to the Treasury, in common with other similar property. Does there not result an obligation to protect that which contributes to the expense of its protection? Will justice sanction, upon the breaking out of a war, the confiscation of a property which during peace serves to augment the resources and nourish the prosperity of a State?
> The property of a foreigner placed in another country, by permission of its laws, may justly be regarded as a deposit, of which the society is the trustee. How can it be reconciled with the idea of a trust to take the property from its owner when he has personally given no cause for its deprivation?

Mr. President, I want to emphasize one or two points found in this incontrovertible argument made by Mr. Hamilton. May I add parenthetically that the greatness and the vision of Alexander Hamilton become more apparent as the years go by even to those who refuse to follow his political philosophy. He visualized a world not torn by strife and destructive commercial rivalries, but one in which the principles of justice, codified into sanctioned principles of international law, would bind nations, protect commerce, and establish what I will call, in the absence of a more fitting term, an international conscience. In the statement which I have put into the record he announces the view that there is a promise of security and protection to aliens who deposit their property in another country. This principle must be kept in view when we are considering the obligations of our country and the duties of Congress with respect to property so deposited in the United States by Germans, Austrians, Hungarians, and the nationals of other countries. Hamilton stresses the point that alien property within our country pays a valuable consideration for the protection and exemption from forfeiture afforded in guaranties; it pays taxes and in various ways enriches our country. He declares that such property is to be held by society as a trustee, and he propounds the inquiry, How can the idea that property may be taken from its owner, when he gives no cause for its deprivation, "be reconciled with the idea of a trust"?

The most recent book which I have examined upon international law is the product of an able American, Charles Cheney Hyde. It was published in 1922. I read a few sentences from the second volume, page 239:

It is believed that on principle the right of confiscation should be denied a belligerent when the property is privately owned and not in fact connected with a military operation or employed for a hostile purpose and provided seizure is not resisted. Under such circumstances the power of a belligerent to control or utilize it without interference should impose the duty, in case of appropriation, ultimately to compensate the owner. It is unlikely that the United States would at the present time pursue a different course.

Mr. Hyde evidently had in view, when he wrote this paragraph, the trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, under which the United States seized the property of alien enemies within the United States. He refers to this act in a note and also quotes a statement by Mr. Palmer, the first Alien Property Custodian, which was published in the Official Bulletin November 14, 1917, as follows:

The broad purpose of Congress as expressed in the trading with the enemy act is: First, to preserve enemy-owned property situated in the United States from loss; and, secondly, to prevent any use of it which may be hostile or detrimental to the United States. * * * the property of any person under legal disability is in every civilized country protected by the appointment of trustees or conservators whose duty it is to administer or care for the property while the disability exists. This is the duty of the Alien Property Custodian. He is charged by law with the duty of protecting the property of all owners who are under disability to act for themselves while a state of war continues. * * * Thus the probable waste and loss of a great deal of valuable property and property rights, which could not while the war continues be conserved by the enemy owner, is avoided, and a trustee appointed and paid by the United States is charged with the duty of protecting and caring for such property until the end of the war. This is his function. There is, of course, no thought of the confiscation or dissipation of the property thus held in trust.

Mr. President, American citizens, knowing of the provisions of the treaty of 1828 between the United States and Prussia, which had by various diplomatic notes and otherwise become a treaty between the United States and the German Empire, and knowing the enlightened principles of international law which protect privately owned property of aliens in other lands, made investments in Germany. They availed themselves of treaties and of German laws and obtained patents and copyrights in Germany and Austria-Hungary. And Germans and Austrians and Hungarians, recognizing the broad and enlightened views of this Republic upon the question of the property rights of aliens within the United States, and likewise familiar with the treaties which protected the property of the nationals of these respective nations, made large investments in all parts of our country.

It is well known that for a number of years prior to the war we sought European capital for developing the resources of the United States. Our consular agents in Germany published notices which encouraged investments in the United States, particularly for the development of industrial enterprises. A letter published in December, 1911, in Berlin, by the consul general of the United States states that:

The United States favor this exchange of economic activity and welcome the appearance of all legitimate foreign enterprises. With that purpose in view the American consular body have been instructed to accord every possible help and support to all such foreign manufacturers as may intend to establish branch factories in the United States—particularly in the fast-developing regions of the Mississippi Valley, which in order to strengthen their industrial progress give concessions in the shape of factory sites, land at reduced prices, reductions of taxes, etc.

Reference is made to the many towns—

The concluding sentence of the publication reads:

I therefore take the liberty of acquainting you with the facts that our consul general is prepared to lend every possible support to any that may be interested.

Following the revolution in Germany in 1848 there was a large migration from Germany to the United States, and during the eighties and nineties and, indeed, down to the time of the World War millions of Germans came to the United States, renounced their allegiance to the German Empire, and took upon themselves the obligations of American citizens. Their industry and thrift and fine abilities have made them important parts of our national life. They have demonstrated their devotion to our institutions and to the political principles upon which this Republic is founded. Many of their relatives who remained in Germany committed to their care various sums for investment in American enterprises. Hundreds of millions of capital came to the United States from Germany and was invested in railroads, factories, mines, and other industries important to the progress and development of our country. And it should also be said that the nationals of other European nations invested hundreds of millions of dollars in our country. We encouraged the coming of foreign capital in order to develop our inexhaustible resources.

For many years, particularly following the Civil War, we needed a portion of the capital which European nations had for investment. We profited, and the European investor profited, in these transactions. Our laws were just, and the foreign investor believed that the capital placed in the United States was secure and would, even if the shocks of war should shake the world, be immune from confiscation. It is not too much to say that our governmental policies inspired confidence in the perpetuity of our Government and its institutions, in the inviolability of life, and in the security of property.

Mr. President, these are some of the conditions under which the property seized by our Government came within the territory of the United States. When the United States entered the war in 1917 the question was soon presented, What disposition shall be made of the property of alien enemies found within the United States? Congress considered this matter and passed the trading with the enemy act. In the consideration of this measure in the House statements were made by Representatives clearly indicating that the property embraced within the act was not to be confiscated, but merely to be taken into possession by the Government and held until the termination of the war. Governor MONTAGUE, who had charge of the bill upon the floor of the House, said that the Government would act merely as a "bailee." When the suggestion was made as to the position that our Government would be in if it were to confiscate property, Governor MONTAGUE denied that there was any thought of confiscation or that the bill before the House would result in confiscation. One of the Representatives referred to the proclamation of the President in the preceding June, declaring that "private property should not be confiscated." The same Representative said that the property should be "held in escrow until the termination of the war, when it was to be returned to the legal owners," and stated that the "property was to be held by the Government only for the benefit of the owner." It was recognized by some of those who spoke upon the question that international law denied the right of the Government to take property during a state of belligerency, and it was declared that it was "neither right nor moral" to confiscate the property of persons who resided in an enemy country and had property in the United States. Congressman MOORE declared that if an American citizen were doing business in Germany before the war and at the present time had property there, we would—expect Germany to hold it so that the American citizen at the conclusion of the war could at least put in a plea and recover it.

Both the House and the Senate reports on the bill repudiate the idea of confiscation and express the thought that the property is to be held by the Government for the benefit of the owners until the termination of the war. There were many statements by public officials both before and after the enactment of this law which support the contention that it was the purpose of the Government merely to sequestrate the property and to return it to the owners at the termination of the war.

Under this act property of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars was seized by the Alien Property Custodian. A considerable portion belonged to women born in the United States but who had married alien enemies. Under subsequent amendments to the trading with the enemy act, provision was made for the restoration of these holdings.

The question, Mr. President, will necessarily arise in the minds of all, What, in view of these facts, should be done with the property still held by the Government? There are some who insist that it shall be devoted to the payment of the claims of our Government against Germany and Austria-Hungary or their nationals, and also to liquidate the claims of Americans against either of these Governments or their nationals. In other words, this proposition calls for the naked and absolute confiscation of the property now held by our Government under the treaty of Berlin. There are others who take the position that it should be retained by our Government until all claims of the United States and its nationals have been settled by Germany.

As I have heretofore stated, my position soon after the close of the war was that the property should be restored to its alien owners. I felt that under the terms of the treaty of 1828 between the United States and Germany and under the principles of international law the United States had no right to confiscate the property either to liquidate its own claims against Germany or to be applied in settlement of the claims of its nationals against the German Government or its nationals. May I again refer to Mr. Hyde, who wrote so recently that he had in mind the question he could see we would have to meet, resulting from the seizure of alien enemy property. On page 239 of his second volume he states:

> The question presents itself, however, whether acknowledgment of a legal duty to refrain from confiscation implies an obligation also not to retain at the close of the war private property or proceeds of the sale thereof, then held in custody, as a means of satisfying a claim of indemnity preferred against the opposing government. Certain objections against such action at once suggest themselves even if the procedure be not designed to constitute a form of reprisal. If the indemnity demanded is of a general character, in order, for example, merely to recompense the victor for the expenses of his campaign, though the enemy may have waged war with scrupulous regard for the law of nations, the obtaining of satisfaction from private property would be inconsistent with the duty to respect it. That obligation clearly implies that a belligerent can not lawfully, under such circumstances, pay its war bills out of such an asset.

The author then refers to the question of compensation by way of reparation for internationally illegal conduct on the part of the enemy, and he then declares that difficulties present themselves, if it is proposed to confiscate the privately owned property of enemy nationals to liquidate private claims for reparation. He refers to the fact that the utilization of enemy private property under these conditions would place the burden of reparation without discrimination on persons who may not, in fact, be responsible for the wrongs committed and upon some not resident within enemy territory. He then adds:

> It is not apparent how the enormity of the offense of the belligerent sovereign establishes a right to pursue such a course unless the bond between that sovereign and its nationals suffices in itself to charge them generally with responsibility for its acts, and that regardless of their residence, domicile, actual participation in the war, or any other consideration. * * * It is believed that the traditional prohibition of confiscation should not be relaxed, nor should the exigencies produced by a particular war be permitted to weaken respect for a principle of justice which might fairly be invoked in the course of subsequent conflicts.

Professor Hyde then alludes to the Versailles treaty of June 28, 1919, which permitted the utilization of the property of German nationals within the territory of any of the allied and associated powers for the purpose of satisfying war claims against the German Government. He states that this treaty provision was technically not confiscatory in character because of the undertaking by Germany to reimburse its nationals, but he adds:

> Inasmuch, however, as the actual value of that undertaking was necessarily slight by reason of the fiscal burden imposed upon the German territorial sovereign the agreement signified consent to what amounted to a practical confiscation of private property by its enemies.

Mr. President, this brings me to a point in the discussion which I am free to confess presents a most serious question. I have stated what I believe are the principles of international law governing the disposition of alien enemy property within our country. I have attempted to show that under international law as well as treaty provisions the property of alien enemies was immune from confiscation, and that it was our duty when the war ended to restore to German nationals, as well as to Austrian and Hungarian nationals, all property which had been seized by our Government. Let me add here that Germany did not attempt in any way to sequestrate the property of Americans within German territory until after we had seized the property of her nationals, and the facts are that Germany exercised but little control over American property within her territory and restored it to the American owners soon after the treaty of Versailles had been signed. There was considerable property owned by Americans in Germany, and, as stated, all has been restored except money which was on deposit in German banks, and negotiations are now pending to establish some fair basis, considering the depreciation of the mark, for the compensation of American depositors.

It has been contended by some that because Germany violated some of the provisions of the treaty of 1828 the treaty was ipso facto abrogated, or that if such abrogation did not result then the declaration of Congress recognizing a state of war between the two Nations annulled the treaty.

In my opinion such a position is untenable. The treaty itself, as I have shown, provided that neither the—> pretense that war dissolves treaties nor any other whatever shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the next preceding article, but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations.

The position is not supported by international law—that war abrogates all treaties. It only abrogates those provisions of treaties which are inconsistent with a state of war. The articles of the treaty of 1828 which were not to be annulled or suspended were those dealing with the property of Americans found in Germany and of Germans found in America in the event of war between the two nations. So, I repeat, the treaty, by its very terms, was a solemn agreement upon the part of the United States and Germany that neither would confiscate the property of their respective nationals if war should break out between them.

I submit, therefore, Mr. President, that unless the treaty of Versailles and the Knox resolution and the Berlin treaty abrogate the treaty of 1828 and make inapplicable the accepted principles of international law governing the property of alien enemies found within belligerent nations, then we are not justified in withholding any of the property seized by the Alien Property Custodian and should promptly restore it to those from whom it was taken. I concede that the treaty of Versailles, followed by the Berlin treaty, raises issues that call for most serious consideration and present questions which compel a reexamination of what I have felt to be the moral and legal grounds calling for restitution of the property seized by our Government. Of course, if the treaty of 1828, and if accepted standards and principles of international law, which declare for the sacredness and immunity of privately owned property, are to apply and are to prevail over subsequent treaties, then it can be contended with good reason that the treaties of Versailles and Berlin do not modify the rule which I have discussed nor qualify the obligation resting upon our Nation to restore the sequestrated property.

The owners of property so seized may with propriety say, "We invested in the United States under the promise of protection, such promise being contained in the treaty of 1828, in the declarations of your courts, in the statements of your officials, in the policy of your Nation which declared that alien property should be protected and held sacred and secure from confiscation, in the most enlightened principles of international law, which the United States had no small part in having accepted; and we question the right and certainly deny the justice of any course which would destroy those guaranties and promises of protection and leave us to the mercy and to the arbitrary power of either of the contracting nations."

However, we should frankly examine the other side of this question; because, if it should be the right one, then our Government must take such steps as will prevent confusion or place it in a legally indefensible position. Doubtless when the treaty of Versailles was negotiated the allied nations took the position that Germany, which was a sovereign State, could in the exercise of its inherent and sovereign power expropriate all or any portion of the property of its nationals for the public good. It is well recognized that eminent domain is a right inherent in all sovereignties and therefore would exist without constitutional recognition, and its exercise by the Government does not involve the commission of a tort. The right of eminent domain antedates constitutions, which are only declaratory of previously existing universal law, and is not conferred but limited by them. The right can only be denied and restricted by fundamental law and is a right inherent in society.

Undoubtedly Germany had the right to expropriate for war purposes the property of its citizens within its territorial boundaries, and it is clear that it would have the same right to take their property and apply it for the payment of reparations or indemnities exacted by victorious nations. In other words, without limitation, in the fundamental law of the German Empire, the German Government had the right in making peace with the allied and associated powers to expropriate such part of the property of its citizens situate within the territorial boundaries of the nation as was necessary.

Another question may be raised with respect to property of German nationals which was situate within the United States and had been placed here under the provisions of the treaty of 1828 and the accepted principles of international law announced by the United States. I shall examine that question briefly in a few moments.

There was nothing in the constitution of the German Empire or in its laws that restricted the Government in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Indeed, article 153 of the German constitution of August 11, 1919, provides that, though the constitution guarantees the right of private property, expropriation may take place for the common good. This significant sentence appears in the article:

There shall be appropriate compensation unless otherwise provided by federal law. * * * Property rights impose certain duties. The use of property shall serve for the common good.

Article 7 of the same constitution declares that—

The Federal State has jurisdiction over matters concerning expropriation.

An examination of the decisions of the German courts will show that they recognized the right of expropriation by the Government. I think it may be asserted without fear of successful contradiction that Germany, both before, during, and after the war, asserted the right to take the property of her subjects under the law of eminent domain; and her highest judicial tribunals affirmed that right. This was true, both under the Empire and under the new Government organized since the war. In other words, Germany has assumed the same position with respect to taking the property of her citizens for governmental purposes that has been asserted by governments, even the most enlightened and those that have written constitutions. A provision of the constitution of the new German Government declares that—

Universally recognized rules of international law are accepted as a binding integral part of the law of the German Republic.

Senators are undoubtedly familiar with Pufendorf's views upon this question. He was one of the greatest German publicists and declared that—the sovereign power, they say, was erected for the common security, and that always will give a prince a sufficient right and title to make use of the goods and fortunes of his subjects whenever necessity requires.

In his same work, "De Jure Naturae et Gentium," he stated that the sovereign power may seize the property of private subjects—to answer the necessities of the state.

And he added that—

In the extremity of the state, moneys intrusted with the government are seized and private men's coffers are invaded.

Vattel, the noted Prussian writer on international law, in his work entitled "Droit des Gens," affirms the same doctrine, and more recent German law writers, without dissent, announce the same principles with respect to the right of eminent domain. A recent writer, Peterzelt, says the state is authorized to compel subjects to relinquish their property upon the theory of eminent domain founded by Grotius and extended by his followers:

Owing to its omnipotence, its plenary power, the state has the right to withdraw from its subjects every private right which they may have in regard to other private persons, and it may keep for itself or transfer it to other private persons.

The United States has often exercised the right of eminent domain and has taken property privately owned for public use. During the recent war the Government took ships and various kinds of property needed in the prosecution of the war and remitted the owners thereof to their remedy in court when an agreement could not be reached as to the value of the property taken.

It is recognized by our law writers, as well as by the courts of the United States, that all forms of choses in action and claims of American citizens against foreign governments are subject to the right of eminent domain. In the treaty which ended the Spanish-American War, there was a provision to the effect that the signatory powers should mutually relinquish all claims for indemnity not only of the Governments but of the citizens or subjects thereof against the other.

The United States in adjusting the claims of Spain exercised the right of eminent domain and took the claims, liquidated and unliquidated, of American citizens residing in Spanish territory against the Kingdom of Spain; and the latter was relieved of the obligation of compensating Americans for valid claims against the Spanish Government. More recently the representatives of the United States in settling mutual claims by France against the United States and claims of the latter against France recognized the right of the French Government to expropriate valid claims recognized by the United States of French citizens against our Government. In our military operations we had taken the property of French nationals and permitted various trespasses upon their property. Thousands of valid claims were presented by these French nationals against our Government, but we arranged with France that she should settle with her nationals and receive credit from the United States upon obligations due from the French Government to our Government. We conceded the right of France to expropriate valid claims of her nationals against our Government and we relied upon the honor of France to compensate her nationals for these claims.

An interesting case appears in volume 2, Court of Claims Reports, page 224. Meade, the plaintiff, who was an American citizen, had a valid claim against Spain, arising while he resided in that country. As I recall, there were other claims of a similar character. In the treaty entered into between the United States and Spain in 1819 the United States expropriated these claims which were in the form of choses in action and relieved the Spanish Government from any obligation for their payment. The court held that the Government may take private property by the terms of the treaty and release the choses in action of American citizens due from a foreign government. The court also held that a debt due an American citizen from a foreign government is property.

So, Mr. President, unless there are some conditions or circumstances which differentiate the case now before us from the broad principles of law with respect to the right of governments to expropriate the property of their citizens, there may be sound reasons justifying the Secretary of State in opposing, as his communications to Mr. WINSLOW, of the House, respecting this bill would indicate, the return to the nationals of Germany, Austria, and Hungary the greater part of the property now held by the Alien Property Custodian. It seems clear that if Germany had the right to expropriate property for war purposes that same right would exist when she was making peace with the victorious nations.

It may be urged that the right of expropriation is lost by Germany with respect to property, particularly real property, beyond her borders. I express no opinion with respect to her right to take real estate, under the power of eminent domain, which has been acquired by her nationals and is situate in other countries. I am inclined to think, however, that with respect to personal property, unless some treaty provides otherwise or certain national acts and usages create a situation which would give rise to the doctrine of equitable estoppel, the right to expropriate personal property of German nationals situate in other countries existed in Germany's behalf when the Versailles and Berlin treaties were signed.

The generally accepted rule is that personal property, in the absence of any law to the contrary, follows the person of the owner and has its situs at his domicile. That certainly is the rule under municipal law, and so far as I am advised the same holds true with respect to property held internationally. As I am advised, the greater part—indeed, substantially all—of the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian is within the category of personal property. Its situs, unless, as I have stated, some treaty provides otherwise, will be the domicile of the owner of the same. It follows, therefore, under the principle of law to which I have referred, that unless there is some exception in the case before us, growing out of treaties or some circumstances and conditions not, so far as I know, clearly or specifically defined, the personal property owned by alien enemies was subject to the right of eminent domain by the Government to which the owners of such property owed allegiance.

If these premises are correct, then when the Versailles treaty was ratified by the German Government it constituted a taking of the personal property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian which was owned by German nationals; or, if not an absolute expropriation of what might be called the corpus of the property, at least its use for an indefinite period. Technically speaking, however, the treaty was an asportation of the property, and such a taking as would amount to a conversion by the German Government which would entitle the owners thereof to compensation.

In the Versailles treaty Germany accepted responsibility for loss and damage caused by the war, and provided, in paragraph 4 of the annex to article 298, that all property of her nationals within the territory of the adverse belligerent nations, as well as the proceeds of their sale, may be charged with the payment of amounts due growing out of claims of the nationals of such adverse belligerents, provided that such claims resulted from acts committed by the German Government or its authorities after July 31, 1914, and before such belligerent entered into the war. The treaty also provided that Germany would compensate her nationals for the property sold or retained by the allied or associated powers. Our Government did not ratify this treaty, but it did enter into a treaty with the German Government, known as the treaty of Berlin, on the 25th day of August, 1921, and this treaty was duly ratified by both nations. The Berlin treaty adopts certain provisions of the Knox resolution, which, in effect, declares that the property of German and Austro-Hungarian nationals which, since April 6, 1917, came into the possession, or under the control, or has been the subject of a demand by the United States, shall be retained by our Government and that—no disposition thereof made, except as shall have been heretofore or specifically hereafter shall be provided by law, until such time as the Imperial German Government and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Governments, or their successors, shall have, respectively, made suitable provisions for the satisfaction of all claims against said Governments, respectively, of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States and who have suffered through the acts of such Governments or agents since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to their persons or property, directly or indirectly, etc.

Article 2 of the Berlin treaty stipulates that the rights and advantages provided in the Versailles treaty, as set forth in certain parts and sections of said Versailles treaty, for the benefit of the United States shall be enjoyed by it. In other words, the Berlin treaty adopts certain provisions of the Versailles treaty, and particularly the ones under which Germany and Austria-Hungary sought to expropriate the property of their nationals within the United States. It in effect declared that by the terms of the Versailles treaty it had acquired under the right of eminent domain the property of their nationals within the United States which had been sequestered by the United States, and that by the provisions of the Berlin treaty it left in the hands of the United States all of this property until it shall have made suitable provisions for the payment of all claims against it of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, owing permanent allegiance to the United States and who have suffered loss or damage or injury to their persons or property through the acts of the German Government or its agents.

Mr. President, it will be perceived that there are some important legal questions—and perhaps a foundation for some international complications—in the legislation before us, or at least in the proposition to restore all of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian to the German, Austrian, and Hungarian nationals who claim to be the owners of the same. Germany, a sovereign nation—and we dealt with her as a sovereign nation—declares in effect that the property of her nationals held by the United States has been expropriated by her and that she has undertaken to fully compensate her nationals for such property. Technically and legalistically, can the United States assume that her act of expropriation is invalid? May the United States thus impugn the solemn declarations of the nation with whom it entered into a solemn treaty; and may our Government ignore the provisions of the treaty and deal with the property as though both the legal and equitable titles were still with the German nationals?

Again, if that position shall be assumed by the United States and the property returned to the German nationals from whom it was taken, and the Mixed Claims Commission find that Germany is indebted to various American citizens in amounts aggregating tens of millions of dollars, and Germany is required by the United States to satisfy the judgments of such commission, what would be the situation if Germany should refuse payment upon the ground that she had by the treaty of Berlin placed in the hands of the United States property of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars which was to be held, if not for the purpose of being applied toward the liquidation of the claims of American citizens against Germany or her nationals, at least it was so to be held until such a time as the German Government—shall have made suitable provisions for the satisfaction of all claims of all persons whomsoever who owe permanent allegiance to the United States and who have suffered loss, damage, or injury by reason of the acts of the German Government since July 31, 1914—and the United States had without her authority dissipated such property by delivering it to various persons in Germany?

Assuming Germany had the right to expropriate the property in question, and actually did expropriate it, and contracted to leave it with the United States, either to pay the claims of American citizens or to be held as a pledge to guarantee such payments, then it would seem to follow that the United States should adhere to the terms of the treaty and hold the property until payment is made or suitable provisions made for the satisfaction of all claims of American citizens against the German Government.

Mr. President, these legal questions have occurred to me, and in the light of my imperfect discussion of them it may be charged that I am not logical in supporting this bill or in indicating that I have favored restoring to the German owners the property which was seized by our Government. I did not favor the provision of the Versailles treaty which attempted, if it did not actually accomplish, the expropriation by Germany of the property of her nationals which was held in the United States; and I did not believe that if the treaty were ratified our Government would insist upon the application of the sequestrated property to the liquidation of the claims of Americans against the German Government.

I opposed the Knox resolution and voted against it, and I also opposed and voted against the Berlin treaty. I saw the possible complications which would arise with reference to the sequestrated property if we ratified the Berlin treaty in the form submitted to the Senate. Accordingly, on the 18th of October, 1921, when the treaty was before the Senate, I offered an amendment to the effect that nothing within the treaty should be construed as indicating a purpose upon the part of the United States to confiscate the property of German nationals now held by the United States in order to compensate our Government or its nationals for claims which they have against Germany or her citizens. The amendment was rejected. I believed then that we should restore the property to its owners, and I appreciated the fact that if the Berlin treaty were ratified there would be obstacles of a very serious nature to such restoration. It may be that by ratifying the treaty we have approved of Germany's expropriation of this property, which Mr. Hyde in effect states is "confiscation," and that we have cut ourselves off from any avenue to reparation and indemnity for American nationals against Germany other than by resorting to the property held by the Alien Property Custodian, or holding it for an indefinite period as a sort of a bludgeon to compel Germany to satisfy the claims of American citizens.

Mr. President, it can be argued that under the treaty of 1828 and by reason of the general conduct and attitude of the United States with respect to foreign investments made in our country our Government is estopped to deny the ownership of this property and is under obligations to protect it and to return it to those who invested it with us. It is quite likely Germany would have the right to devise a just and uniform system of taxation which would impose tax burdens upon the owners of the property, but the power to reach the incomes derived from this property or the profits resulting from its use does not necessarily imply the power to expropriate. But I shall not pursue this thought further.

Mr. President, we are a creditor Nation having billions of dollars invested in other countries. We can not afford to adopt any policy that will subject our Government to the charge that it confiscated private property or was a party to a confiscatory policy. Our record in the past has been free from taint. It must remain untarnished in the future. Not only upon moral grounds are we interested in maintaining the doctrine of the immunity of privately owned property from seizure by belligerent nations, but in a material way we are profoundly interested in securing the universal acceptance of this policy. Our Government and American citizens have investments in other lands aggregating between fifteen and twenty billions of dollars, and as our wealth increases additional credits will be extended to nations and peoples in other countries. It is therefore not mere sentimentality or a quixotic spirit which animates the American people in their desire to have established throughout the world the law that property is secure and immune from confiscatory acts or policies.

Mr. President, our Government, notwithstanding the Berlin treaty, could find a way which would insure the payment of the claims of American citizens against Germany and her nationals without resort to the property which our Government now holds. I shall not detain the Senate longer to point out how, in my opinion, this could be done, but let me in conclusion express the hope that the present administration will immediately present this matter to the German Government, and agree with it upon a practical and reasonable plan that will afford adequate security to American citizens for their claims against Germany and at the same time do justice to German nationals whose property we have sequestrated and relieve the United States not only now but for all future time of any possible criticism for having confiscated or participated in the confiscation of the property of aliens which had been invested under the protection of treaties and the honor and good name of the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the bill is to be voted on, I believe, at 3 o'clock?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. There is no agreement of that kind.

Mr. HEFLIN. What was the agreement about 3 o'clock?

Mr. CUMMINS. There was no agreement.

Mr. HEFLIN. The bill is just up for consideration for those who want to discuss it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to discuss the pending bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. No. I did not intend to discuss this bill. I desired to read some comments on certain phases of the fight which I have made here from time to time against the drastic deflation policy conducted by the Federal Reserve Board, and also to make some remarks about a speech that I made on the floor of the Senate a few days ago when I was called to order by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Instead of speaking on these subjects now I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some statements and letters which I have received on these subjects, and also some newspaper clippings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask permission to have it printed in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News, February 5, 1923.]

SAYS HEFLIN IS LIABILITY TO DEMOCRATS.

"I have just returned from Washington and quite agree with what newspapers * * * are saying about Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama," said F. A. Durant. "To be perfectly frank about the matter, HEFLIN is * * * a liability to the Democratic Party."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in the first place, I understand there is no such man in Birmingham as the "Durant" here quoted. So the name employed is a fictitious or forged one. In reply to this underhanded attack upon me and my record I desire to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from the highest authority in the Democratic Party—the chairman of the Democratic National Committee—Judge Hull, and also some letters from officials of the Democratic national congressional committee and other prominent Democrats.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1923.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am surprised to learn that a newspaper in your State has given currency to the alleged remark of some individual derogatory to your official and political service as a United States Senator and conveying the veiled intimation that you are not as much of a party asset as some other Senators.

I assume that this report owes its origin to jealousy or personal pique on the part of some one. I say this because no Democrat in America was in greater demand as a speaker during the last campaign and, as far as I know, during former campaigns, than yourself. No speaker, to my knowledge, created a more profound and lasting impression in the minds of Democrats and other citizens whom he addressed than yourself during the last campaign. If you are not a most valuable asset, the party has no assets.

I know the intelligent, reading class of people in your State, as in other States, understand and know your worth, both to your party and your country, and appraise you accordingly.

Very sincerely, CORDELL HULL,
Chairman Democratic National Committee.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., November 10, 1923.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Just a line to express my appreciation to you for the most excellent service you have rendered the Democratic Party during the recent campaign.

Everywhere you have spoken splendid reports have come to me, and I know that your efforts in behalf of the party have been largely responsible for the splendid results achieved.

I am sure you will be interested in learning that I had many requests for your services from many sections of the United States, places which on account of the limited time you could not reach, which only goes to show how the leading Democrats view you as a public servant.

Again thanking you and with best wishes, I am,

Cordially and sincerely,

JIM MCCLINTIC,
Chairman Speakers' Bureau.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., November 10, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The result of the election was wonderful; however, not more than we had anticipated.

We want to take this opportunity to thank you for the valuable service which you have rendered to the country and to the party during your service in the House, Senate, and on the stump. During this campaign we * * * had more calls for you to make speeches than for any other one connected with our party. Had all the requests for your time been granted you would have been compelled to make at least a dozen speeches a day.

We must keep our organization in good shape and be ready to meet the enemy two years from now, when I believe the people will return our party to power.

Hoping you the best of success, good luck, good health, and that you will be able to render the party as much valuable help in the future as you have in the past, I am, with kindest regards and best wishes,

Sincerely, A. B. ROUSE, Chairman.

DEMOCRATIC STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Kenton, Ohio, February 8, 1923.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have been reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and I want to congratulate you for the great fight you have made against the interests that now control our Government and which have gone so far as to even want to deny the right of free speech in the greatest legislative body in the world. Your fight does great credit to your fighting qualities as a Democrat, and I assure you your friends are all with you and applaud your speech and your actions.

Go to it, and show up this conspiracy between Wall Street and the special interests who are using the Harding administration to further their own interests, and in doing it, as usual, they are making the people pay the bill. * * *

I want to thank you for the vigorous fight that you have put up, and assure you that I only speak the voice of thousands of Democrats who are with you. * * *

With every good wish, I am,

Yours truly, W. W. DURBIN,
Chairman Democratic State Executive Committee.

LEESBURG, VA., February 13, 1923.

Senator J. THOS. HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I am inclosing to you herein an editorial which I recently wrote for my paper touching the action of the Senate when you recently had the floor. I believe that you have been the means of furnishing the best ammunition for the next campaign that has yet been furnished.

Very truly yours,

WILBUR C. HALL,
Attorney and Counselor at Law.

[From The Loudoun Times, Leesburg, Va.]

The legislation emanating from the Senate clearly warranted the conclusion of Senator HEFLIN that big business was in the control of the Government, and Wall Street is big business.

DEAR SIR: I would thank you for a copy of your speech on the Federal Reserve Board in answer to Senator GLASS. I understand that Senator GLASS has never undertaken to controvert the facts on which you based your criticism.

We in Virginia are very loyal to Senator GLASS, but we feel—most of us—that he is on the wrong side of this question; that you are right.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL B. WOODS.

GREENVILLE, TEX.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just read with pleasure that wonderful speech of yours that I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 16, 1922, and I wish to congratulate you for the mighty fight that you are making for "the man with the hoe." It takes a good spirit and true southern patriot to voice the sentiments contained in this great speech. This is sufficient to enshrine you in the hearts of the common people. If you could find time to make a few speeches in the most important political centers of this Nation it would have a great effect in stimulating the move to place the Democrats back in power and to elect a Democratic President; and I see no reason now why you should not head the Democratic host as its standard bearer in 1924. Why should not a southern man now be elected President? They are the friends of the common people everywhere, and there is now a universal move among the common people to go back to the administration after the manner of Hon. Woodrow Wilson. May you live long and may God bless you in your efforts.

I was admitted to practice law at Blountsville, Ala., while Judge Wyatt, of Guntersville, Ala., was the circuit judge, but I have been in Texas 35 years.

Your friend truly, B. Q. EVANS.

AUSTIN, TEX., May 1, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: You certainly did show deflation up in wonderful shape, and if this information that you gave was generally understood by the people they would not only lose respect for the members of that board but I believe they would literally rise up and demand that they be run out of public office forever. I was utterly astounded at some of the statements made in your speech, especially in regard to the bank building in New York City and the amount of money this bank used to accommodate other New York banks, and the small amount in comparison that was used in the Dallas district.

I am sure, however, that no unbiased mind could see anything else in your speech except the desire to see the institution function as it was intended to do and did do at the beginning.

Your friend, NEEDHAM AVERY.

[Letter of D. C. Earnest—Oil leases—of Dallas, Tex., of September 28, 1922, to the Times-Herald.]

The TIMES-HERALD:

For many months on many occasions the Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN, United States Senator from Alabama, has severely denounced the acts of Ex-Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board. The newspapers in the main have either ignored the Senator's criticisms or they have attempted to ridicule him without specifically answering his charges. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 19, pages 13966 to 13971, Senator HEFLIN makes some charges which are not to be ignored; if the Senator's statements are true, it is the duty of an honest press to publish same; on the other hand, if the charges are not true the Senator should be denounced; and as the papers have not mentioned these astounding charges I am forced to believe that they are true, as otherwise the Senator's enemies, who are the friends of ex-Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, would take much pleasure in disproving the Senator's charges. On page 13967 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 19 Senator HEFLIN uses the following language:

"I said that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, one of the 12 reserve banks, paid more money in yearly salaries to its officials than the Government paid to the President and his Cabinet, the Vice President and all the Senators, to the Speaker of the House and all the Members of the House, to the Federal Trade Commission, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the War Finance Corporation, to all the circuit judges of the United States, to the General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy, * * * One banking institution, with the sanction of Governor Harding, took money, 90 per cent of which should have gone in a franchise tax to the Government, and permitted it to be devoted to the payment of the salaries of 2,500 or 3,000 officials, clerks, and agents, who did less business this year than a big national bank right by it with 200 officials. * * * Governor Harding has permitted the officials of four banking institutions—4 out of the 12—to set aside $49,000,000, and a little more, nearly $50,000,000, for the erection of four bank buildings, and that is nearly five times as much as the average annual expenditure for the past 20 years on all appropriations made by Congress for all public buildings, post offices, Federal courthouses and customhouses in all 48 States of the Union. Can any newspaper justify its conduct in failing to give that important news to the public?"

Further on in his speech Senator HEFLIN explains what would have become of the $49,000,000 if it had not been seized and set aside for bank palaces; 90 per cent of it, or more than $40,000,000, would have gone into the United States Treasury to help pay the public debt. The Senator continues, as follows:

"He (Governor Harding) was the first man who wrote to them (the heads of reserve banks) and told them how to beat the Government out of franchise taxes. How did he do it? He said, 'Put some money under the head of charge-offs, put some under depreciation, some under value for construction of buildings.' So they adopted eagerly the suggestion of this smooth artist, W. P. G. Harding, and the Government is getting no money at all from that source. The franchise tax is defeated, going into a fund that is being gobbled up somehow by these officials, and some of these officials are standing on tiptoe asking the President to reappoint this man. Mr. President, Governor Strong, of New York, was drawing a salary of $30,000, and Governor Harding permitted him to have an increase in salary of $20,000, making it $50,000. * * * Governor Harding permitted the officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their own salaries $15,000,000 between 1918 and the end of the fiscal year 1922."

When some unknown soap-box orator makes serious charges against any branch of the Government it is not necessary for the press to dignify same by the slightest notice, but when a Senator of the United States makes charges which, if true, shake the confidence of the people in the honesty of their officials, the charges should have the widest possible publicity. If the charges are not true, the Senator who makes them should be denounced and driven from office. If the charges are true—and there must be some warrant for them or they would be denied by other Members of the Senate—it is the duty of the administration at Washington to put the 12 Federal reserve banks on an honest business basis.

If even one-half that Senator HEFLIN says is true concerning the administration of the Federal reserve banks, it would be worse than infamous to reappoint W. P. G. Harding.

Yours very truly,

D. C. EARNEST,
1001 Kirby Building, Dallas, Tex.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Presume you have a very heavy correspondence, and at the outset I wish to say that I do not expect a reply. Use your tune, as you have been fighting the greatest trust of them all, the Federal Reserve Board. But I thought perhaps you might be interested to know that even in this faraway Republican stronghold that we are watching the noble fight the Democrats, and especially men from the South, are making against hopeless odds.

Yours very truly, ALBERT C. MURPHY.

DAVIS, LYON & BRADFORD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Sioux Falls, S. Dak., November 14, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am under the very greatest obligations to you for sending me copies of your speeches with reference to the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding as governor of the Federal Reserve Board. Your attitude upon this matter has certainly been in the interests of the agricultural, industrial, and business interests of the United States. The drastic deflation and withdrawal of credits by the Federal Reserve Board in 1920 was the greatest financial crime ever committed against the people of the United States and places the so-called crime of '73 in the kindergarten class by comparison. It more than doubles the burden of the public and private indebtedness of the United States, which was largely contracted upon the basis of war prices. * * * I am in hopes that your exposure has made it impossible for President Harding to reappoint, or at any rate obtain the confirmation of Governor Harding's reappointment. * * *

Yours very truly, W. H. LYON.

B. J. CAMPBELL & CO.,
INVESTMENT BANKERS,
Memphis, Tenn., April 20, 1922.

Senator THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Will you do me the kindness to send me all the data you can in regard to the workings of the Federal reserve banking system? The writer was a strong advocate of this system, and in this connection permit me to state that he was for several years ahead in thought of a system of this kind, having organized, or rather fathered, two large banks with 300 banks as stockholders in a central bank.

I mention this simply to show you that I was very much interested in the organization of the present system, and still believe it a good system if managed along proper lines, but a very nefarious one if manipulated in the interests of any clique of bankers, which I am very much afraid has been done by the governing board at Washington.

I refer more especially to preferential loans and rates which were given certain sections during the late deflation period.

The policy that has been pursued has almost, if not entirely, ruined the South and West, which are, as you know, the producing sections of this country. Many, many good men and firms in this section were forced to dispose of their securities in order to maintain their credit, and a perfect stream of the best securities, including Liberty bonds, of this country have flown to New York and other money centers of the East (the banks in this section would not loan on Liberty bonds but forced the holders to sell them), and now that they have gotten these securities, the policy of inflation is being pursued in order for these pirates to unload and fleece the lambs again.

I tell you, Senator, the policy which has been pursued by the governing board of the Federal reserve banking system is damnable, and were it in my power I would like to see the South and West get together and make some of these captains of finance beg for a sandwich.

It was my idea when this system was organized that each Federal reserve district should be placed on the same plane and that the purpose of the system was to divorce the banking business from the control of Wall Street; but it seems now as though this street (called crooked) has placed their manacles again upon the whole country.

I have written you rather at length, but wanted to give you my ideas in the hope that you might do something to help the situation in the South and West.

Yours very truly,

B. J. CAMPBELL.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: Have you a few extra copies of your speech of the 9th of February that you can spare us? What will the Government charge us by the hundred for this address? * * *

We have been ruined. We have pastures containing almost townships that have not had a gate closed in two years. The owners are practically bankrupted, and they can not secure credit to buy the stock to start out again. We are convinced that this deflation is the greatest crime that ever was committed in America. * * * More power to your elbow.

W. H. GREEN, Secretary.

MY DEAR SENATOR: May I ask you for a couple of copies of your speech on the betrayal of the people by the heads of the Federal reserve banking system, delivered in reply to Senator GLASS? I expect to take the lecture platform in a couple of weeks and your speech is "good stuff" to quote from. EDGEFIELD, S. C., March 4, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Allow me to congratulate you on your speech in reply to Senator GLASS in re the Federal Reserve Board. I read it with great pleasure and edification. It was so full of hard argument and meat and figures, and withal so eloquent. Their deflation policy and ruinous system has well-nigh put we folks of the South out of business. Lots of farmers in Edgefield County are practically ruined, and are "at sea" what to do this year. It is inconceivable how a southern Senator could sustain Mr. Harding and those acting in concert with him. Keep at them with your sledge-hammer blows; good results are bound to follow. We have memorial services each year in May in memory of our Confederate dead. Would you entertain a proposition to come and address us on that occasion? We would be mighty glad to have you. Senator Watson, of Georgia, will tell you who I am.

Yours very truly,

S. MCG. SIMKINS,

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., March 4, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have been very much interested in your splendid work in the interest of the South and West during this hell through which we are passing. The agricultural bloc, of which you are an active member, is also doing a great work, and is big with possibilities to advance the farming interests of the Nation.

Have just read in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your very strong speech in reply to Senator GLASS. It is one of the best ever delivered on the subject. The picture is not overdrawn, and I wish every voter could read it. With all that has been spoken and written, I doubt if even many Members of the House and Senate have a just conception of the horrible conditions existing in the South and West.

I personally know of several similar instances to the one you mention, of the young man who had lost all, and was forced to abandon the farm—doubtless there are hundreds of thousands of such pathetic cases all over the land.

I was 7 years of age in 1865. Saw General Sherman burn Columbia, and lived with my widowed mother through the dark days of reconstruction. I have lived through every panic since the Civil War, and all combined did not equal what is now termed deflation. It has done more to encourage socialism, Bolshevism, and every other kind of "ism," than the combined depressions since the discovery of America.

The Federal Reserve Board has placed the South and West exactly where Joseph placed Egypt 4,000 years since. He first took their money; second, their cattle; and finally, their land, until all belonged to Pharaoh, and the farmers all became tenants of the king. History has repeated itself, and we have been enslaved by the money powers.

There is no use in trying to conceal the truth. Unless there is inflation to enable the farmers to secure better prices for their products, these mortgages can never be paid, and the lands of the South and West will within the next 10 years pass into the hands of capitalists.

Yours very sincerely,

A. K. SMOKE.

On June 22, 1922, Senator HEFLIN stated on the floor of the Senate the following:

"I propose to have the country know while I am here just what transpires and something concerning the motives back of the thing. This is a Government of the people. What I ask is a matter of simple justice to myself. I am involved, assailed by a speech full of inaccurate and incorrect figures and statements."

Whereupon Senator GLASS made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I deny absolutely that there is a single inaccuracy in the speech to which the Senator refers."

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., September 21, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: On September 5 I wrote to Senator GLASS, of my State, calling his attention to certain flagrant discrepancies between statements which had been made by him on the floor of the Senate in regard to the operations and administration of the Federal reserve system and the official records as printed by the Federal Reserve Board itself. I also called his attention to the overwhelming refutation of his statements which had been made by yourself in your speeches in the Senate, and I expressed the hope that he would be willing to give some explanation of the contradictory statements which I took pains to point out to him with some care in my letter. On September 11 Senator GLASS, through his secretary, in a brief communication acknowledged my letter but omitted to explain or answer my questions. * * * I thereupon wrote Senator GLASS again on September 12, pointing out that he himself had challenged anyone to deny or controvert his statements, and as they had been overwhelmingly refuted on the floor of the Senate he now owed it to himself and to his constituents to withdraw the misleading assertions which he had made on a vital issue and scattered abroad. * * * Another week has passed and my second letter is still unanswered. I am therefore handing you with this copies of my letter to Senator GLASS of September 5 and also my letter to him of September 12, and you have my permission to make any use of them or of the facts which they contain that you may see fit in the brave and courageous fight which you are making to eliminate destructive and unpardonable abuses and preserve the system.

With high regard,

Sincerely yours, L. C. YOUNGER.

[Excerpts from copy of a letter written by Hon. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., to Hon. CARTER GLASS.]

RICHMOND, VA., September 12, 1922.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: I have your letter of the 11th instant, through your secretary, in reply to mine of the 5th, and while I am not surprised that you should decline to dispute or deny the official figures and facts which were submitted to you in my letter, which were a direct contradiction of statements made by you on the floor of the Senate, I must admit that I am disappointed at your omission to acknowledge your mistakes and make public correction after they have been pointed out to you and proven.

I am all the more amazed at your unwillingness to explain or retract erroneous statements, in view of the declaration which you made on page 13 of your January speech, in which, after saying:

"I pointedly deny that there was deflation of either regional reserve bank credits or any diminution of Federal reserve currency during the period of the appalling drop in prices of agricultural products"— you openly said:

"I hope Senators will take particular note of that declaration and convict me here if they can of any inaccuracy that appertains to it. Rhetoric, whether the motive of it be harmless or vile, is one thing. A cold, indisputable fact is something different."

I have shown you, and Senator HEFLIN has shown you in your own presence in the Senate, and others have shown you that the official records disprove your statements and have convicted you of "inaccuracy." Either the statements which you have made are untrue or else the official records are untrue, and I, one of your constituents, having always held you in high regard, ask you to tell me whether or not the official figures, which appear to controvert your statements, are true or untrue; and if untrue, where?

If the official figures which have been quoted to you are correct, you have made statements which can not be sustained, and they should therefore be explained or withdrawn. * * *

Respectfully,

L. C. YOUNGER.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., April 22, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: Indications which are coming to me from various parts of the country convince me that your splendid and courageous efforts in behalf of a wiser and fairer administration of our Federal reserve system are bearing fruit.

I am taking the liberty of handing you, with this, a copy of a letter which I addressed under date of April 12, 1922, to Mr. George J. Seay, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank, of Richmond, in which I have criticized him severely for sending out, without correction, Senator GLASS's speech for the Federal reserve system with its glaring inaccuracies which you so overwhelmingly answered in your masterly speech on February 9. I feel a deep interest in this whole subject and have tried to keep up with the discussion, but thus far I have never heard of Senator GLASS attempting to challenge or refute a single one of your telling statements in your February 9 speech, although two and a half months have elapsed since you delivered it. As a matter of fact, I regard your speech as conclusive and absolutely unanswerable. If there had been any vulnerable points in your armor, Senator GLASS would certainly have found them and made the most of them.

Sincerely yours,

L. C. YOUNGER,
District Manager.

P. S.—I handed one of our prominent business men a copy of your speech in answer to Senator GLASS. After reading it, he returned it to me with the remark, "That is the strongest speech I ever read."

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read with a great deal of interest your speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I want to congratulate you on the brave fight you are making, and the people are with you. I also want to congratulate you on the resolution which you offered on September 12.

Anything I can do for you please advise me. I am at your command. You are on the winning side.

Sincerely yours, L. C. YOUNGER,
District Manager.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., August 1, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: Let me congratulate you upon the splendid fight which you have been waging in behalf of a decent administration of our Federal reserve system. You have brought many serious accusations and charges against the management of the reserve system, and especially against W. P. G. Harding, its governor, and as far as I can see you have completely proven your case.

If W. P. G. Harding had done nothing else than cause the 12 Federal reserve banks under his supervision and influence to disseminate and scatter broadcast more than 140,000 copies of a document—Senator GLASS's speech—containing numerous untrue and misleading statements, well calculated to deceive the uninformed as to the real truth regarding the mismanagement of the reserve system, he is deserving of prompt removal by the President. * * *

Keep up your fight, Senator. I take comfort in the classic thought that "error ceases to be dangerous when truth is free to combat it."

Sincerely yours, L. C. YOUNGER.

[Excerpt from copy of a letter written by Hon. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., to Hon. Warren G. Harding.]

JULY 29, 1922.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT:

* * * * * * *

I will be pleased to bring to your attention charges which have been made and which I believe have been proved against Governor Harding and his administration which, in my opinion, would justify such action on your part. In this connection I especially commend to your consideration his indictment by Senator HEFLIN. The Senator has, I think, completely proved his charges in regard to the systematic and deliberate manner in which the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have well-nigh bankrupted this country.

I have lived through many panics in the last 40 years, but the crisis of the past two years, in my opinion, has by far been the most costly and the most destructive that I have ever experienced.

I respectfully urge and call upon you to rid the Federal reserve system of men whose incompetence and mismanagement have brought such ruin upon us.

Respectfully yours, L. C. YOUNGER.

THE PROVIDENT LIFE & TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., August 18, 1922.

Hon. J. T. HEFLIN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: Let me offer you my profound congratulations upon the results of your brave and splendid efforts on the floor of the Senate in behalf of an honest and efficient administration of our great reserve system. I have just read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your speech of August 3, and as far as I can recall it is the ablest and most unanswerable speech that I have ever read from any United States Senator. The South is proud of you, and the rest of the country should be also, and will be if they are not already.

Reports indicate that W. P. G. Harding is definitely eliminated from the system.

Sincerely yours, L. C. YOUNGER,
District Manager.

[From letter of Mr. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., to Mr. George J. Seay, governor Federal reserve board, of Richmond, Va., dated April 12, 1922, published in Manufacturers' Record of May 11, 1922.]

You knew that the reserve board's own official records show that for the first "12 months of falling prices," or, say, from the end of May, 1920, to the end of May, 1921, instead of being an increase of "nearly $1,000,000,000," there was an actual contraction in "nearly $1,000,000,000"—the precise contraction for that period being $942,981,000—and the contraction in the extended period of falling prices from May 28, 1920, to January 25, 1922, was $2,005,149,000.

In view of such established facts, it is very easy to see why you feel yourself unable to conduct further a correspondence in which you are butting your head against granite facts which so overwhelmingly contradict and destroy your claims and pretensions.

Your course impresses me as being all the more inexcusable in view of the convincing and irrefutable facts bearing upon this subject which were so brilliantly presented on the floor of the Senate by Senator HEFLIN in his speech of February 9, 1922, in answer to Senator GLASS, which I do not doubt you have read, but a copy of which, as a precaution, I beg leave to hand you with this, and commend it to your serious study.

[From the Manufacturers' Record of May 18, 1922.]

Senator HEFLIN's speech has not been answered by Senator GLASS. Senator GLASS made some glaring mistakes which Senator HEFLIN pointed out with great clearness, and Senator GLASS has not replied to Senator HEFLIN's charges.

[Letter from Mr. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., to Mr. George J. Seay, published in the Manufacturers' Record May 11, 1922.]

I pointed out to him that, according to my information, it is the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond and other reserve banks which are distributing Senator GLASS's speech and not the Senator himself. Senator GLASS, I confidently believe, was misled and deceived by unworthy informants, but the reserve banks which are disseminating the speech, with its glaring inconsistencies and misstatements, were not deceived. They knew in sending out those speeches that they were sending out data calculated to deceive its recipients unless they should chance to be better informed. From what I know of Senator GLASS, if Senator HEFLIN's answer had been in any way vulnerable or incorrect, Senator GLASS would have instantly replied to him; but up to this time, so I am informed, he has never attempted to answer Senator HEFLIN's statements in criticism of his speech.

The editor of the Manufacturers' Record, following a somewhat similar line of thought, some weeks ago wrote to the governor of the Federal reserve banks of Atlanta and New York, pointing out the blunder of sending out in their territory Senator GLASS's speech, which, in one respect at least, was absolutely misleading, and every Federal reserve bank officer who sent it out knew it was misleading * * * and he therefore intended to deceive the public, or else he was so entirely ignorant of the facts that he was not fit to hold so responsible an office.

[Letter from Mr. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., to Mr. George J. Seay, governor Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., dated April 12, 1922, published in Manufacturers' Record of May 11, 1922.]

I will inform you very frankly that I have not the slightest idea that Senator GLASS would have ever made that speech if he had been correctly informed before doing so, and I have not heard of Senator GLASS sending out a single copy of that speech, the fallacies of which were so soon exposed. But I have heard of your sending it out, knowing, as you did, that the statements that you were deliberately propagating were incorrect, misleading, and untrue, and you were guilty of this act while asking the confidence of the public as "governor" of a Federal reserve bank.

[From the Manufacturers' Record, June 15, 1922.]

BANKERS SHOULD TAKE WARNING.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN, writing under date of June 8 to the Manufacturers' Record, says:

"I just write to express my hearty approval of your splendid editorial on Governor Harding and his murderous deflation policy. I am going to use it in a speech in the Senate. In this important matter you are fighting a great battle in the interest of honest banking and the whole American people. As a Senator from the South, one of the sections that has suffered so dreadfully under that deflation policy, I want to express to you my appreciation and gratitude for the fight that you have made and are still making."

Writing on the same subject, Mr. L. C. Younger, of Richmond, Va., district manager of the Provident Life & Trust Co., of Philadelphia, says:

"I have read with interest your editorial of June 8 on 'Nation-wide Propaganda to Secure Renomination of Governor Harding.' This covers the ground thoroughly and embodies my views—in fact, I believe 75 per cent of the business men's views in this section. There are only a few bankers that I meet with who are upholding the policy of the Federal Reserve Board, and this has been done for a reason. These bankers work hand and glove with the Wall Street gamblers at the expense of the merchant, manufacturer, and business man of this section, and they will find out that a few large cities like New York, Chicago, and Boston, can not control the finances of this country.

[From the Manufacturers' Record of June 15, 1922.]

The Senate has passed a resolution requesting the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta to furnish full information relative to the distribution of the Glass speech by it in the State of Alabama, with the alleged intention of intimidating Senator HEFLIN or of bringing upon his head political reprisals as a penalty for his incisive attacks on the drastic deflation policy pursued by the Federal Reserve Board.

[From letter of Mr. H. A. Moehlenpah, former member of Reserve Board, to President Harding, dated August 8, 1922.]

I have been a country banker for 25 years.

I am free to state that the board, under the direction of Governor Harding, never had an appreciation of the farmer problem or the needs of the great West.

Governor Harding is an autocrat. He is a city banker. His sympathy has not been with the great producing class. I do not hesitate to make this bold statement.

Knowing the sentiment of the country banker—and there are 20,000 of them in this country—and being directly in touch with many of the great farmer organizations, I feel that you would render this country, your administration, and the Federal Reserve Board a real service by appointing some man who would have a more sympathetic attitude toward the great West and the agricultural interests.

[From Manufacturers' Record, September 21, 1922.]

Senators, if they wish, may leave the Senate Chamber and the news writers may retire when Senator HEFLIN week after week rises and tells again his story of W. P. G. Harding and the wrecking of national prosperity. But Mr. HEFLIN happens to be backed by a great wall of truth. His charges are not denied; his integrity is not impeached. They may laugh at him; they may ridicule him; they may say they are tired of him, but they are not half so tired of him as the people of the United States are tired of W. P. G. Harding; and when the voting comes it may astound learned Senators to discover that the great masses are just as determined to have honesty and efficiency in the administration of national credit now and are just as opposed to tyranny and financial dictatorship as they were in the time of Andrew Jackson.

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.]

Senator HEFLIN, long a Member of the lower House of Congress, has attacked the attitude of the present Federal Reserve Board continuously, and, with the exception of aid given him from time to time by a few Senators, including the late Senator Watson, of Georgia, has made the fight on the floor of the Senate almost by himself. Not that he would not be supported in a case of confirmation of a member of the Federal Reserve Board by nearly all of the Democrats and quite a few Republicans, but the Federal reserve fight has been Mr. HEFLIN'S great individual battle.

Senator HEFLIN, soon after being named Senator to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Bankhead, began his work and has continued it ever since. The result is that President Harding will not reappoint W. P. G. Harding as a member of this board.

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.]

CHRONICLE'S POSITION ON RESERVE BOARD SUSTAINED BY PRESIDENT.

The President said to Congress in his most recent address:

"Your measures of relief and reduction of the Federal reserve discount rate undoubtedly saved the country from widespread disaster."

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, March 9, 1923.]

SENATOR HEFLIN'S WORK AGAINST DEFLATION.

There is no man in the United States Congress who did such valiant work in the dethroning of Governor W. "Poison Gas" Harding as Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN, of Alabama. Senator HEFLIN is the man who grouped about him that strong array of Senators known as the "agricultural bloc," which effectually defeated the plans of those who wished to retain Governor Harding as the head of the Federal Reserve Board. There was strong pressure brought to bear on the President to rename Harding, but, thanks to the good work of Senator HEFLIN, it was an acknowledged secret that the Senate would have rejected the nomination.

Senator HEFLIN is an able public officer from a great State.

The Chronicle takes the liberty of quoting from a recent personal letter to the editor from Hon. John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, and himself the most vigorous opponent of the Federal Reserve Board's policies for many months, which we are quite sure Mr. Williams will not object to, since it pays the tribute Mr. HEFLIN so well deserves:

"The Chronicle itself is entitled to tremendous credit for arousing the people and for bringing about the remedy for evils which were so ruinous. The Augusta Chronicle and the Manufacturers' Record have won for themselves laurels which can not fade by their persistent and courageous efforts to arouse the people and secure relief.

"Among others who have done particularly valiant service in this connection is Hon J. THOMAS HEFLIN, United States Senator from Alabama. His efforts have been unremitting, and he is particularly entitled to the country's thanks for his splendid and effective work. Senator HEFLIN'S work in this connection is now being appreciated by the best men in both political parties, who are more solicitous for the welfare of the country at large than they are for special interests or for speculative bandits in high places."

[From the Herald, Gainesville, Ga., January 26, 1922.]

THE CRIME OF THE AGE.

In a speech recently delivered in the United States Senate, Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, in defending the agricultural bloc, said in part:

"A great deal has been said recently about an agricultural bloc in the Senate. I am one of the first men to suggest this cooperation between the Democrats of the South and the Republicans of the West. I suggested it for the purpose of securing much-needed legislation. The South and the West were afflicted alike. Agriculture was stricken down in both sections by the deadly deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. We could not obtain money to carry on our business.

"We complained that this board's policy was injuriously affecting these two sections, but the President did not seem to understand or to be moved by our pleas, so we could not get relief through the Federal Reserve Board, which controlled the money supply and credit of the country. Agriculture, I repeat, under the withering, blighting, deadly touch of the Federal Reserve Board, was stricken down and almost destroyed.

"Now, Mr. President, Wall Street is interested in killing any legislation that will make money matters easy in any section of the country, because Wall Street wants to return to the time, and it is just about here, when it can control the money supply and credits of 100,000,000 people."

We quote from two Senators only—one from Alabama and one from Georgia.

What Senators HEFLIN and WATSON have had to say relative to the drastic deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board is but the voicing by two representatives in the highest legislative body in the world of the common expression and resentful feeling of millions and millions of people who have suffered severely from such a ruinous policy.

Their indictments and similar indictments from pen and lips of thousands of others are enough to cause the millions, apart from the few financial centers, to scorn the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board, assuming that only the judgment of the members of the board was at fault.

THE HUNTSVILLE TELEGRAM AND SENATOR TOM HEFLIN.

The Huntsville (Ala.) Telegram, a one-gallus newspaper, published in one of the greatest States in Dixieland, editorially attacks Senator THOMAS HEFLIN, one of the finest characters in the public life of America.

For more than a year Senator HEFLIN has called the country's attention to the ruinous policy of the Federal Reserve Board. He has pulverized W. P. G. Harding and his Wall Street satellites.

Senator HEFLIN is doing fine work in exposing W. P. G. Harding and his board. His work is producing fine results.

[From the New York Tribune January 31, 1923.]

HEFLIN BILL IS PASSED.

WASHINGTON, January 30.—Without a record vote the Senate to-day passed a bill of Senator HEFLIN, Democrat, Alabama, repealing an amendment to the Federal reserve act which authorized the imposition of a "progressive" rate of interest upon excessive loans. Mr. HEFLIN said the provision was not now being invoked by the Federal Reserve Board, but expressed the fear that it might be used unfairly in the future.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I come in contact with leading business men all through the South and they indorse your course without qualification. Some of the bankers have heretofore been reticent for fear of retaliation if they should tell what they really think, but they are now beginning to come out openly in applauding your course.

I can not commend too heartily, Senator, the work you are so courageously doing, for it is of incalculable value to the South and the entire country and is becoming daily more appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

L. C. YOUNGER,

RICHMOND, VA., September 5, 1922.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: * * * I thank you for sending me a copy of your speech of January last on the reserve system, which speech had been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I, therefore, had already had the privilege of reading it. I also read with close attention Senator HEFLIN'S reply of February 9 last to your speech made a few weeks before, and I must say, frankly, that Senator HEFLIN's reply seemed to me to be such an overwhelming refutation of numerous important but incorrect statements made by you that I have been watching the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ever since to see whether you would be able to answer effectively Senator HEFLIN's complete contradictions of your figures and claims; but up to this time, as far as I have been able to see or learn, you have never even attempted to reply to the official facts and figures which Senator HEFLIN presented to disprove the statements made by you to the Senate.

Respectfully, L. C. YOUNGER.

[From the Prattville (Ala.) Progress.]

At least 90 per cent of the farmers most heartily indorse Senator HEFLIN and his position on the question of deflation. About all Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, has done for the past two years is to ride around in Pullmans and openly declare that the country was fast returning to normal conditions, while he was secretly refusing credit to farmers with the proper collateral.

It is easy enough to sit in the city office and write about these things, but if the editor of the Birmingham Evening News had been on the farm and had been a cosufferer in the drop of cotton, he would be ready to throw up his hat and defend Senator HEFLIN for his courage in criticizing those in high places who fell short of their duties and responsibilities imposed on them. If we wish to protect this Republic and have its citizens love the flag, we must have more representatives of the people with courage enough to criticize those who would force the people to pay the highest rate of interest in their greatest financial trials. What the South and the entire country needs to-day is more money and a low rate of interest to develop them. Senator HEFLIN will not be frightened by a few criticisms no matter from what source they were inspired.

[From the Southern Labor Review, Birmingham, Ala., November 8, 1922.]

SENATOR HEFLIN.

Senator HEFLIN was in his usual form last Friday night when he spoke at the Jefferson Theater, and his hearers were enthusiastic in their approval of his exposures of the corruption, rottenness, and crimes against the people of the management of the Federal reserve system.

The speaker was frequently interrupted by applause as he showed the disastrous effects upon farmers and business interests of the criminal deflation of credits by the Federal reserve system.

This murderous deflation enabled the Wall Street bankers and speculators to steal $103,000,000 from the farmers of Alabama in one year.

He charged that W. P. G. Harding was hand and glove with the robbers of the people, and that just as soon as they got power to put a progressive interest rate on loans the Federal Reserve Board immediately began their ruinous policy of deflation against the South and West.

The audience expressed unmistakable approval of the expressions of the entire address, and especially his statement that while he was in Washington struggling against the robbers of his people he ought to have had the support and cooperation of every decent paper in Alabama.

The contempt of the audience for those papers that have attempted to ridicule and belittle, misrepresent and thwart Senator HEFLIN in his efforts to protect the people of Alabama and other Southern and Western States from the financial pirates was expressed by loud and prolonged applause of the speaker when he denounced the misrepresentation and abuse by those from whom he should have received full support.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Post, January 6, 1923.]

HEFLIN BLOCKS GOVERNOR HARDING—APPOINTMENT OF RESERVE HEAD DEFEATED BY ALABAMIAN.

(By Robert Talley, Post staff correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, December 6.—Legislative experts delving into the long fight waged by Senator HEFLIN against reappointment of Governor Harding of the Federal Reserve Board pronounce it one of the most unusual victories in the history of the United States Senate.

Single handed and alone HEFLIN waged his battle against Governor Harding. His daily two-fisted attacks printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD began to arouse such public interest that a defense of Governor Harding and the reserve board policy was made by Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia.

As HEFLIN's single-handed fight waged on, something happened. Newspaper men began to receive telegrams from their clients saying they wanted HEFLIN's speeches "covered."

[From the Opelika Daily News, March 1, 1923.]

Almost day by day Coué information is reaching the people, proving that one of the very best things ever happening for the good of the country was Senator TOM HEFLIN's successful contest ending in the dumping from the position of head of the Federal reserve banks of W. P. G. Harding. HEFLIN stopped Harding's proposed expenditure of millions for new buildings for some of the big branch banks—the one at New York, for instance—that was to cost more than did all the public buildings on Capitol Hill at Washington. He exposed and has forever stopped the big branch banks from charging and collecting as much as 80 per cent interest from small country banks, and he finally succeeded in forcing the President to drop Harding from his high position as the head and dictator of our great Federal banking system. The numerous newspapers that devoted space to deriding and discrediting Senator HEFLIN all during the memorable contest he waged against the extravagance and iniquities of the board members gave the people very little of the evidence Mr. HEFLIN submitted to the Senate and tried to discredit each and every authority he named.

Now that the Senator has won his fight comes Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers Record, and makes public evidence he holds proving that the heretofore secret records of the board show that Senator HEFLIN only knew and proved a part, and that not the worst part, of the underhanded acts of the board members (not all of them, but the advisory council of the class A directors) when deflation was first planned. Now that Mr. Edmonds has made public a long-concealed stenographic report of the secret meeting held May 18, 1920, showing that but 100 copies of this report were printed (for "insiders" only) and that then the type was destroyed and every member present bound not to divulge the proceedings, we expect (?) to see those always fair (?) newspapers do Senator HEFLIN tardy justice; hope at least that they will go so far as to admit that he was trying to do a public service while exposing W. P. G. Harding and the "inner circles" of the ruling powers of the Federal Reserve Board.

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Journal.]

From Washington comes news regarding Alabama's junior Senator that will be read with interest by his many friends and supporters throughout the State.

When the United States Commissioners of Agriculture were in session recently in the city of Washington, Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, in discussing the problem of agriculture, had a deal to say about the evil effects of deflation on the farmers and business generally in the West and South. In that connection he complimented Alabama's junior Senator, Senator HEFLIN, and said:

"Senator HEFLIN led the fight in exposing the evil workings of deflation and condemning Governor W. P. G. Harding for his part in it, and I want to say that if he should never do another important thing in his public career his great service in this matter entitles him to a high and prominent place in the history of our country."

The sentiment was heartily applauded by the convention of agricultural commissioners. And why should it not? Senator HEFLIN's fight for the farmer has been long, fearless, and determined.

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Journal, November 24, 1922.]

Senator HEFLIN and Mr. Williams are both friends of the Federal reserve system and are fighting, just as the Journal fought, to keep it from falling into the hands of Wall Street.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I desire to print in the RECORD some statements contained in the following letters:

JULY 8, 1922.

Hon. HENRY C. WALLACE,
Secretary, Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As the executive head of the Agricultural Department, and coming as you do from the great agricultural West, you have it in your power to do a great service now to all the farmers of the United States and to the populations dependent upon the agricultural industry in the farming sections of the country by entering your protest and using your influence against the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding as governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

As you doubtless know, the big speculators and financiers of Wall Street, who made billions of dollars out of the distress and suffering of the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the agricultural sections, are trying to induce the President to reappoint Governor Harding. Wherever they can do so they are having him indorsed by business men's clubs and bankers' conventions. The Manufacturers' Record tells us that some friend of the Federal Reserve Board governor is usually on hand at such meetings to push along the propaganda. It behooves every friend of the farmer and every American citizen who believes in fairness and in honesty in the administration of the Federal reserve banking system to urge the President not to reappoint the man whose conduct during the dreadful drive of drastic deflation brought so much human suffering, business disaster, and financial ruin to thousands and hundreds of thousands of people in the United States.

Please remind the President that the progressive interest rate, ranging from 7 to 8½ per cent, was not invoked anywhere except in the agricultural South and West. The cotton producer, the grain grower, the cattleman, had it applied to them through the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy so rapidly and ruthlessly that it literally destroyed their business. No progressive interest rate was applied to New York, Boston, or Philadelphia, or at any other place except in the farming sections of the country. New York, Boston, and Philadelphia got all the money they wanted at a flat rate of interest of 6 per cent or less.

When the work of deflation was begun the farmers and cattlemen felt its evil effects so keenly that they first insisted upon their right to have the currency and credits necessary to carry on their business in such a way as to yield them a living profit. They realized that our banking institutions, established by law, were created for the purpose of serving the business needs of the people; that they were intended to encourage and help and not to punish and plunder business enterprises and industry in the American people. But their demand was ignored, and the work of deflation went on. Then they begged and pleaded with the Federal Reserve Board governor and his associates to permit them to have the currency and credit aid necessary to enable them to hold their products off the market until they could obtain a price that would at least cover the cost of production, and again the deflation governor of the Federal Reserve Board denied their request. Then in their great distress, desperation, and deep humiliation they begged that their plow mules and horses, their mother herds, their homes and farms be spared to them, but the cold and cruel deflation governor of the Federal Reserve Board turned a deaf ear, while the destructive work of deflation went mercilessly on.

Under the cruel and criminal policy of deflation, farm products were sacrificed, farmers lost their farms, home owners became tenants, once prosperous farmers became paupers, and men successful in other lines of business were hard pressed to obtain money enough to prevent the sale of their property for taxes. The honest business man and banker, and the millions of farmers who suffered from deflation, do not want W. P. G. Harding reappointed governor of the Federal Reserve Board, but the big speculators and financiers of Wall Street, who made hundreds of millions, and even billions of dollars, out of the deflation policy are using every influence that they can control to induce the President to reappoint him.

In the name of the robbed, outraged, and distressed farmers, and their wives and children, and in the name of the plundered people in the farming sections of our country, I appeal to you to call upon the President and beg him not to place W. P. G. Harding again at the head of our great Federal reserve banking system.

With best wishes, I am yours sincerely,

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

JULY 15, 1922.

The Hon. WARREN G. HARDING,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It has been suggested about the Capitol frequently here of late that you are being urged by certain speculative and banking interests to reappoint W. P. G. Harding governor of the Federal Reserve Board. As a friend of the Federal reserve banking system and as a Senator from one of the great Southern States whose people suffered dreadfully under the ruinous deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding, and as a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, speaking in part for the farmers of the whole country, I most respectfully and earnestly urge you not to reappoint him.

Since some of the Senators first talked to you about our desire and effort to place a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board—one who understood and would represent the agricultural interests—I have not believed that you intended to reappoint Governor Harding. I would end this letter here but for the rumors of a persistent and insistent propaganda that is being carried on in his behalf by those who profited so much financially through the partiality and favoritism shown them by Governor Harding during the distressing time of drastic and destructive deflation. In indorsing him they are showing their appreciation and gratitude for rich favors received at his hands in the recent past, and expressing the hope and expectation, in the event of his reappointment, of having such favors come from him again in the future.

I feel that I owe it to you to frankly state that when we first submitted the proposal to have a farmer appointed to the first vacancy that occurred on the Federal Reserve Board I, as well as others, had two things in mind—first, to get a farmer on the board; and, second, to get W. P. G. Harding off the board. If the amendment as first drafted had been adopted, the appointment of a farmer and the prevention of the reappointment of Governor Harding would have been accomplished. I respectfully submit that it was your attitude and assurances, as represented to me and others on the matter of appointing a farmer and against reappointing Governor Harding that caused us to agree to the change in the language of the amendment as suggested by you. It was because of your assuring statement made to certain Senators about this matter that caused me to submit to the change and that caused me to say in this letter that I had not believed since that time that you intended to reappoint Governor Harding. In view of what you said then and in view of what Republican Members of Congress have told me of their conversations with you upon the subject since then, I am holding to the belief that you will not reappoint to the important position of Federal Reserve Board governor the man that the average banker and business man and the whole mass of our farming population regard as unsafe and unfit to continue at the head of our great Federal reserve banking system.

Deflation as conducted by Governor Harding was a crime against legitimate business and a crime against the country. This deflation was commenced in May, 1920. It stifled and stagnated our commerce and swooped down upon agriculture like a besom of destruction and forced the farmers of the South and West to sacrifice in a few months the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime. It paralyzed industry, closed factories, and drove out of employment 7,000,000 American wage earners. It denied currency and credits to the cattlemen of the country, struck down the cattle industry, and sacrificed nearly half of the mother herd, thus endangering the future meat supply of the United States. People who had been induced to buy Liberty bonds to help win the war were denied loans at the banks and forced to sell to the bond sharks of Wall Street at a figure far below the price paid the Government for them.

Governor Harding permitted prohibitive interest rates to be charged the man engaged in legitimate business in the agricultural sections, who had to have loans or extensions or suffer financial ruin. These interest rates ranged from 7 to 8½ per cent. I repeat, loans could not be had on cattle and agricultural products, and the demand for immediate collection, quick liquidation of debts, contracted when money sufficient to meet the needs of business was in circulation, was heard on every hand, while property values were being destroyed by the hundreds of millions of dollars. Some of our best men, driven to desperation by that drastic deflation, broke under the strain and killed themselves. A deflation resolution, couched in language calculated to conceal its real purpose, passed the Senate in May, 1920, and in a few days thereafter Governor Harding, then armed and equipped with the progressive interest rate, commenced the cruel work of drastic deflation.

When Governor Harding was asking Congress, in April, 1920, to amend the Federal reserve act so as to allow the Federal Reserve Board to employ the progressive interest rate in granting loans or discounts, Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, and others who opposed it, expressed doubt as to the advisability of granting such authority, and stated that if the progressive interest rate were applied to loans or discounts in the agricultural sections it would prevent the farmers from having the money needed to handle their crops at the harvest time. Governor Harding told Senator SMITH that he intended to apply the progressive interest rate, not to the agricultural sections at all but to certain big cities to keep them from getting money for speculation that was needed in the agricultural sections for crop-handling purposes. It was through these representations of Governor Harding that he secured from Congress permission to apply the progressive interest rate in making loans or discounts. Senators accepted in good faith his statement that he wanted that authority for the purpose of applying the progressive interest rate to certain big cities, so as to supply the farming sections with the money needed for the safe and orderly marketing of the crops. But when Governor Harding and his board had obtained authority in April, 1920, to apply the progressive interest rate, they did what they said they would not do, and proceeded to apply it, not to the big cities seeking money for speculative purposes but they applied it only to the agricultural sections of the South and West, and business distress and financial disaster followed in the wake of its terrible application.

The progressive interest rate, ranging from 7 to 15, and 20 to 30, and 60 per cent, and higher, was applied, and applied only, in the agricultural sections of the South and West. The progressive interest rate was never applied to New York, Philadelphia, or Boston. Speculative and financial interests there got all the money they wanted at about 6 per cent. The fact is the progressive interest rate that Governor Harding said he wanted to use only in the big cities was applied to agricultural loans and discounts at the Federal Reserve Banks of Atlanta, Dallas, St. Louis, and Kansas City, the four Federal reserve banks located in the agricultural sections and intended to take care of the business of agriculture in the South and West. In view of what transpired in obtaining from Congress authority to apply the progressive interest rate, and in view of the fact that that rate was applied in the agricultural sections where it was specifically stated it would not be applied, is there any escape from the conclusion and conviction that the authority to apply the progressive interest rate was obtained from some of the Members of Congress, at least, through deliberate deception and misrepresentation?

I am persuaded to believe that if you knew how the average business man and banker thinks and feels about Governor Harding, and if you knew how the farmers and cattlemen of the country detest and distrust him you would not seriously consider reappointing him. I am informed that some of the officials of the Federal reserve banks—men appointed by Governor Harding to the lucrative positions they now hold—are using their power and influence on bankers and business men dependent upon the regional reserve banks under their control for accommodations in currency and credits to indorse Governor Harding for reappointment. What a dangerous and terrible intimidating power to be used to humiliate and coerce the very men who have been grossly mistreated and greatly injured financially by Governor Harding and his deflation policy; men who are being told and induced to believe that Governor Harding will be reappointed and who fear if they do not indorse him, after being called upon to do so, that he will punish them in many ways if he is reappointed.

I have received, and other Senators have received, letters from bankers telling us of outrageous instances in connection with Governor Harding's deflation policy, of how high interest rates were applied, loans called, and business destroyed, and at the same time asking us not to use their names and stating that if we did so they would surely be punished and their business made to suffer. This revelation of itself discloses a feeling of distrust, dread, and fear on the part of many honest bankers toward Governor Harding. You have, no doubt, received requests for his reappointment that were obtained in that very way. What a shocking and gruesome spectacle. Men coerced and intimidated into indorsing the man that they oppose, fear, and distrust. A Republican Senator told me the other day that bankers in his State, who had been induced in convention to indorse Governor Harding for reappointment, had since that time written letters to him expressing the wish and the hope that he would not be reappointed. Is it right and is it safe to thus permit the power of the office of the Federal Reserve Board governor to reach out through men that he has appointed to office in the Federal reserve banks and coerce honest but mistreated and hard-pressed bankers into indorsing him for reappointment, when, if let alone and permitted to express their honest convictions, in the absence of the intimidating power now being used, they would—four-fifths of them, and maybe more—demand that he be not reappointed?

The lawyers, doctors, preachers, and teachers who know the distress and suffering through tremendous financial losses caused by the deflation conducted by Governor Harding are against his reappointment. At the judgment bar of the average honest business man and banker, of the farmers and wage earners of the country, Governor Harding stands condemned, distrusted, and repudiated. Deflation as conducted by him destroyed property values by the billions. It took prosperity and contentment from millions of people and left distress and want in their stead. It greatly enriched a few thousand people at the expense of more than three-fourths of the population of the whole United States. I believe that you will agree with me that to reappoint him is to stand sponsor for his conduct, is to condone and indorse what he has done. What he has done, in conjunction with those who inspired, ordered, and stood back of deflation, caused more discontent, more despondency, more mental agony, more business distress and financial disaster than was ever inflicted before upon the people of the United States.

Readjustment in our economic affairs could have been effected with but little, or a minimum, of business disturbance and business distress through the plan suggested by Hon. John Skelton Williams, then Comptroller of the Currency; Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record; ex-Governor Stokes of New Jersey; and Col. George W. Armstrong, of Fort Worth, Tex., author of the book dealing with deflation, called "The Crime of '20." Thousands of business men, bankers, and farmers made suggestions, but to no avail. Drastic deflation had been ordered by Wall Street, and the work of destruction went on. It was cruel, criminal, inexcusable, and indefensible, and he who conducted it, with those responsible for it, should be condemned and repudiated and not indorsed and rewarded.

In closing this lengthy letter I wish to call to your attention a very appropriate quotation from Mr. Lincoln:

"Any movement to artificially deflate before the debt can be paid, to change the medium of circulation upon which the debt was contracted, would be a crime. I warn the American people not to permit a repetition of the crimes of history. Following great periods of inflation, if drastic artificial deflation is attempted, disastrous results must follow. I warn them not to permit the money powers to take advantage of the condition of the people. I warn them not to permit high and usurious interest rates, contraction of the currency, or any change in the circulating medium that will affect the debt contracted until it has been discharged."

In the hope of seeing confidence restored in the Federal Reserve Board, and in the interest of a fair, honest, and efficient administration of our Federal reserve banking system, and in the name of millions of American people who have suffered dreadfully and suffered unnecessarily from the drastic deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding, I beg you not to reappoint him.

With best wishes, I am, yours sincerely,

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

SEPTEMBER 4, 1922.

Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, Jr.,
Jasper, Ala.

DEAR JOHN: Seeing from the press reports that you in all probability will be made chairman of the Democratic State convention, and having voted for you by mail as one of the delegates from the State at large, I desire to bring to your attention, and through you to the attention of the convention, some matters of grave importance to the people of our State.

It has been suggested to me that certain interests would have an effort made at the convention to commend and indorse Governor Harding and the Republican deflation policy conducted under his direction in 1920, and feeling that such a proceeding would not only be inappropriate and unwise but distinctly wrong, unfair, and unjust to the great rank and file of the Democratic Party in the State, as well as other people who were pillaged and plundered by that policy, I ask your consideration of a few suggestions that I wish to make upon the subject.

Having been elected to the Senate to succeed your able and honored father at the very time when deflation, drastic and destructive, was being carried out to the injury and ruin of the business of tens of thousands of people in Alabama, I set myself to the task of doing what I could to find some measure of relief for them, and to discovering, if I could, the cause of the business distress and financial disaster that I saw sweeping our State like some mighty besom of destruction. I could not believe that our great Federal reserve banking system had been found impotent and unable to take care of the business needs of our people, and I inquired of John Skelton Williams, a Virginia Democrat, then Comptroller of the Currency of the United States and a member of the Federal Reserve Board, as to the cause of business depression and paralysis, and he told me that it was not the fault of the Federal reserve system but the failure to permit it to function as it had functioned and was then able to function. He said that instead of withdrawing from the channels of business $2,000,000,000 in currency and credits, as was done, the Federal reserve system could have, without touching its gold reserves, granted currency and credit aid to the extent of $2,000,000,000 and more. I then got the Federal Reserve Board's annual report to see what Governor Harding had said on the subject before he changed front and commenced to court favor with Republican leaders, and I found in his report words that corroborated the statement made to me by Mr. Williams. Here is what he said:

"The Federal Reserve system has met the requirements of war and readjustment by expanding without, however, encroaching upon its legal reserves; it is capable, if need be, of expanding still further without having recourse to the emergency provisions of the act and very much further by availing itself of those provisions."

When I read that statement, I was convinced that John Skelton Williams was right when he said that the failure to supply the currency and credit aid necessary to prevent wholesale ruin to business in 1920 was not the fault of the Federal reserve banking system but the fault of those who refused to let that system function as it was capable of functioning.

Then I commenced to inquire why it was that financial aid was being withheld from the people who needed it to prevent the ruin of their business, when it was admitted that the Federal reserve banking system was amply able to meet every financial requirement made upon it by the needs of the people. I found that the Republican Congress had deliberately planned and ordered deflation when it passed the progressive interest rate amendment and a Republican Senate passed a deflation resolution, and the Republican National Convention declared for deflation in its party platform of 1920. While financial aid was being withheld from the people of Alabama, and other Southern and Western States, the financiers and speculators of Wall Street were making millions and hundreds of millions of dollars out of the forced sales of Liberty bonds and the forced sale of cotton and grain. The people of Alabama who had bought Liberty bonds from a sense of patriotic duty and were told that they were as good as gold, and would always be worth one hundred cents on the dollar, were, under the deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding, denied loans on them at the banks. That action forced the bonds upon the market and Wall Street financiers bought them at $80 and $85 on the $100, so they made, through deflation, millions of dollars on the forced sales of bonds. Then when Governor Harding refused to permit any more loans to be made on cotton, that one act cost the farmers of Alabama alone, on one cotton crop, $103,000,000, and it cost the cotton-growing States on the cotton crop of the same year, 1920, more than a billion and a half dollars.

I submit that if the Federal reserve banking system was able, as I contend it was, and as Governor Harding said it was, to extend further currency and credit aid, "if necessary," that it was certainly his duty to see to it that such aid was granted, not only for the purpose of preventing the ruin of the business of millions of our people but to prevent the wholesale sacrifice of property and the loss of billions of dollars.

I next discovered that the Wall Street Republican deflation policy, conducted by Governor Harding, was charging a much higher interest rate in Alabama and other Southern and Western States than it was charging in New York and other Eastern and Northern States. I found that the high and usurious progressive interest rate was applied to loans and discounts in Alabama and other Southern and Western States, but was not applied at all to loans and discounts in any Eastern or Northern State. The interest rates charged on loans and discounts in Alabama and other Southern and Western States reached 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, and as high as 87½ per cent. One bank in Alabama was charged 87½ per cent. During the same period New York and other Eastern and Northern States were getting all the money they wanted at 6 per cent. As I have said, the Wall Street Republican deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding never applied the progressive interest rate to any of the Eastern and Northern States. The high progressive interest rate was applied to Alabama and other cotton and grain growing States at the crop-moving time when we needed a reasonable interest rate and liberal currency and credit aid more than at any other season.

Senator SMITH, Democrat, of South Carolina, in opposing the passage of the progressive interest rate amendment told Governor Harding that if the rate were applied to loans and discounts in the agricultural South and West that it would destroy business in those sections and cause great suffering and tremendous financial losses. He says that Governor Harding told him that he wanted it so that he could apply it to New York City and certain other eastern cities to keep them from draining out of the South and West for speculative purposes the money needed there for handling the crop. After the progressive interest rate amendment was adopted Governor Harding did with it exactly what he told Senator SMITH he would not do, and applied it only to loans and discounts in the South and West. He never applied it at all to New York City or to any other city in the East or North.

Governor Wellborn, of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, on August 31, 1920, requested Governor Harding and the Federal Reserve Board to grant the Atlanta bank permission to abolish the progressive interest rate, and Governor Wellborn says they declined to do it.

Why did Governor Harding tell Senator SMITH and other Senators from the South that he did not intend to apply the progressive interest rate to loans and discounts in the South and West, and then apply it to those sections and nowhere else? Then why did he refuse to permit the Reserve Bank of Atlanta, the one that serves Alabama, to abolish the progressive interest rate when the governor of that bank asked to be permitted to do so? Why did he persist in having the progressive interest rate of 20, 30, 40, 60, and 80 per cent and higher to be charged to loans in Alabama when he was permitting loans to be made in New York City at 6 per cent? The high rates that he permitted to be charged in Alabama were intended to prevent loans and thus deny to the cotton producer money with which to hold his cotton off the market until he could sell it for a price that would at least cover the cost of production, and the low interest rate charged in New York City enabled the speculator to get all the money he needed to beat down the price of cotton.

The New York Commercial on September 16, 1920, said: "Governor Harding frowned upon the proposal that additional credits be provided as a means of holding cotton, etc., in order to insure better prices." On September 17, 1920, the New York Commercial said: "Many traders were inclined to sell the market after overnight consideration of the refusal of the Federal Reserve Board to help the cotton planters, as it is believed that this decision will effectually kill most of the holding movement because of the difficulty of financing the proposition."

While Governor Harding was denying loans to the cotton producers and leaving them at the mercy of bear speculators he permitted one big speculative institution in New York City to borrow more money from the Federal reserve banks than all of the 12 regional reserve banks were loaning on agricultural and live-stock paper to all of the 9,000 member banks in the whole United States. So Governor Harding refused to permit loans on cotton to enable the farmer to hold it until he could get a price that would prevent a loss on his cotton crop, and at the same time furnished all the money the New York speculators wanted to beat down the price of cotton. Under the deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding the cotton farmers of the South lost hundreds of millions of dollars, and the speculators of Wall Street increased their fortunes that much by his collusion and kindly aid. The world supply of cotton was so small and the demand so great in 1920 that 40 cents for cotton that year was accepted as an assured fact. The cotton farmer based his calculations upon that price, the merchant sold goods upon it, and the bankers loaned money upon the same basis. When cotton was $200 a bale the farmer went in debt without any notice being given to him that the debt-paying power of a bale of cotton would be reduced to $50 a bale. That is what happened.

The debt remained the same, but instead of a bale of cotton paying a $200 debt it took four bales to pay it. Plow mules, for which Alabama farmers had paid $250 and $300, sold for $40 and $50 under the deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding. It will take from 5 to 10 years for our people to pay the debts left upon them by the deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding, and through which Wall Street made many hundreds of millions of dollars.

Lincoln said truly: "Any movement to artificially deflate before the debt can be paid, to change the medium of circulation upon which the debt was contracted, would be a crime."

Continuing, he said: "I warn the American people not to permit a repetition of the crimes of history. Following great periods of inflation, if drastic artificial deflation is attempted, disastrous results must follow. I warn them not to permit the money powers to take advantage of the condition of the people. I warn them not to permit high and usurious interest rates, contraction of the currency, or any change in the circulating medium that will affect the debt contracted until it has been discharged."

In Circular No. 98, 1920, from the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, there is the following statement:

"The rise in rates has checked borrowing or expansion as it was intended to do."

The deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding did exactly what Lincoln said should not be done, and if done, would produce distress and heavy losses amongst the people and would constitute a crime against them. Governor Harding permitted the people of Alabama and in other States South and West under one currency and credits plan to commit themselves to business plans and obligations of various kinds in the early part of the year 1920. He permitted the farmer to make his crop arrangements on a large scale, to purchase fertilizer, agricultural implements, and plow mules at $250 and $300 a piece, and other supplies, all on credit. He permitted the merchant to order from the wholesaler and manufacturer an abundant supply of goods, and the banks in the agricultural sections to loan money for the year's business. Then after the farmer had planted his crop, and gone in debt, and our people in other business were all tied up so that they could not change their plans and save themselves, the cruel Wall Street Republican deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding was thrust upon us. It came suddenly and, like a thief in the night, without warning. The currency and credit plan under which all those debts were contracted was suddenly changed and the calling of loans and the forcing of collections were ordered under a different and harder currency and credit plan. Under the currency and credit plan of deflation, property values were forced down at a rapid and ruinous rate and the debt-paying power of our people was destroyed.

The deflation policy conducted by Governor Harding robbed the people of Alabama and other Southern States and contributed to the fortunes of speculators and financiers of Wall Street. It found prosperity and contentment in hundreds of thousands of homes in Alabama and left financial distress, discontent, and debts in their stead. Thousands and tens of thousands of farmers in our State had their business destroyed and their life plans broken up by that deflation policy. They not only lost their labor and investments in 1920 but lost their homes and farms. If the general of an invading army had come into our State and robbed and plundered our people as did Governor Harding through destructive deflation, would anybody in the confines of Alabama be so dull and dead to the proprieties of common decency and honor as to even suggest that the general be commended for his cruel and criminal conduct? I am sure that a large majority of the delegates to the State convention feel as I do, and as a vast majority of the people do, upon this subject, and I do not believe that any delegate could have been elected if he had stated to the Democrats at home that he was in favor of condoning or indorsing in any way Governor Harding's part in the crime of deflation.

I trust that no delegate will be found who will subject the representatives of Democracy there assembled and at home to the humiliating insult that would be offered in an attempt to secure the passage of a resolution approving deflation. The truth is the Federal reserve banking system under Governor Harding's direction was perverted from the ends of its institution, maladministered, and used to strike down and destroy where it was intended to serve and save. The convention should do as the Democratic convention of Nebraska did on the 15th of August, denounce and condemn the Republican deflation policy of 1920 and pledge itself to do everything in its power to keep our great Federal reserve banking system true to the purpose for which it was created.

That great banking system is capable of supplying the currency and credit needs of all the people all the time, and I repeat that its failure to do that in 1920 was not the fault of the system but the fault of those who manipulated the system so as to rob the many for the benefit of the few. That act deserves to be condemned and made odious in the eyes of every honest man and woman in the State and in the country.

With best wishes, I am, yours sincerely,

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

OCTOBER 4, 1922.

The PRESIDENT AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: The kind of deflation that sorely afflicted the people of the United States under the direction of Governor Harding in 1920 was unnecessary, inexcusable, and indefensible.

In support of my statement I call to your attention, and through you to the attention of the bankers there in convention assembled, Governor Harding's own words upon the subject. In his annual report of 1920, as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, he said, among other things:

"The Federal reserve system has met the requirements of war and readjustment by expanding without, however, encroaching upon its legal reserves; it is capable, if need be, of expanding still further without having recourse to the emergency provisions of the act, and very much further by availing itself of those provisions."

Can any man of intelligence and integrity read Governor Harding's statement and then justify him in conducting a deflation policy that produced financial distress and business disaster to millions of our people?

The Federal reserve banking system was created for the purpose not only of preventing panics but for the purpose of preventing any serious financial disturbance anywhere in the country. From the time of its creation up to the early summer of 1920 the Federal reserve banking system supplied all the currency and credit aid needed. It financed the great World War, and met every business demand made upon it here at home during and after the war, and, as Governor Harding said, all this was accomplished without ever touching "its legal reserves."

In that statement Governor Harding admits that the Federal reserve system was able to prevent the very thing that occurred with his approval and under his direction. It is no small offense to take away from a single individual his means of livelihood, but when whole communities, States and sections, by the millions are deprived of their means of support and robbed of the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime, it becomes a national question, a national calamity, and a grave national crime.

Economic and financial readjustment could have been brought about in a sane and orderly way without serious injury to anyone. I have criticized and condemned Governor Harding and the board, and the Congress in collusion with them, for not laying down and carrying out such a policy. The deflation policy planned by Wall Street and conducted by Governor Harding was radical, drastic, and destructive. It choked and stifled legitimate business everywhere and robbed millions for the benefit of a few. Such a policy, I repeat, was unnecessary, inexcusable, and indefensible. In support of that statement I will quote Governor Harding's own words. In his annual report for the Federal Reserve Board in 1920, from which I have already quoted, he said:

"Too rapid or too drastic deflation would defeat the very purpose of a well-regulated credit system by the needless unsettlement of mind it would produce and the disastrous reaction that such unsettlement of mind would have upon productive industry.

"Radical and drastic deflation is not, therefore, in contemplation."

Continuing, he said:

"The credit situation in the United States is at bottom sound and safe. Our economic and financial position is essentially strong.

"The process of adjusting the volume of credit to normal basis should be effected in an orderly manner."

In the first place, Governor Harding admitted that the Federal reserve banking system was able to prevent any kind of serious financial disturbance to business in the United States. In the second place, he admitted that there was no necessity for "precipitate action" or "extreme measures." In the third place, he admitted that "drastic deflation would defeat the very purpose of a well-regulated credit system." In the fourth place, he admitted that there was no excuse for any action that would seriously disturb or injuriously affect even the "mood and temper of the business community." And, in the fifth place, he tells us that it would be wrong to take a radical or drastic step in this matter because our credit situation was sound and our economic and financial position was essentially strong.

Can any citizen of intelligence and honesty read Governor Harding's statements here quoted and then justify him in conducting a deflation policy that paralyzed business, closed industries, drove millions of wage earners from employment, caused thousands to kill themselves, and destroyed property values by the billions? I have heard the rumor that Governor Harding and his deflation friends have been active for weeks trying to select delegates to the American Bankers' Association who would favor the passage of a resolution indorsing him for reappointment as governor of the Federal Reserve Board. If they should try to do such a thing, I trust that you, as the honored head of a great American institution, will use your great influence to prevent such action. In the first place, the President is not going to reappoint him, and, in the second place, he could not be confirmed if reappointed. I am doing my best to hold the Federal reserve banking system true to the purposes for which it was created. I can think of nothing that would so injure the great banking fraternity of America with the masses of the people as a deliberate indorsement by your convention of the deflation conduct of W. P. G. Harding.

With best wishes, I am, yours sincerely,

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

P. S.—I beg to call to your attention the following statements from eminent authorities on the subject of deflation:

HON. REGINALD M'KENNA, CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Hon. Reginald McKenna, of England, formerly chancellor of the exchequer, now president of the London Joint City and Midland Bank, the largest bank in the world:

"I think I have said enough to show that an attempt at monetary deflation of this kind can only end in the strangulation of business and widespread unemployment. * * *

"The consequences of a continuous fall in prices entailed by dear money and restriction of credit, and accentuated by heavy taxation, must be complete stagnation of business." * * *

GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF FRANCE.

The governor of the Bank of France is quoted as follows from his annual report:

"We have welcomed, whether by means of rediscount or by direct discount, all paper whose creation responded to the legitimate needs of commerce and production. By this liberal policy, to which we have remained and always will remain faithful, we expect to support with all our power the activities of widely varying business enterprises which in France are needed to lessen the violence of the crisis."

PROF. GUSTAV CASSEL, OF THE UNIVERSITY OF STOCKHOLM.

Prof. Gustav Cassel, an economist of international reputation, in his recent report submitted to the League of Nations:

"The downward movement of prices has not, as is sometimes assumed, been merely a spontaneous result of forces beyond our control. It is essentially the result of a policy deliberately framed with a view to bringing down prices and giving a higher value to the monetary unit.

"The world's work has been brought to a standstill to a degree that we have never witnessed before, and unemployment has risen to alarming figures, particularly in countries where the policy of deflation has been applied most severely."

Resolution by Mr. HEFLIN.

Whereas history discloses the fact that the serious financial disturbances and panics which have come upon the people of the United States in the past were produced by Republican mismanagement and policies; and

Whereas it is a recognized duty of the United States Government to provide a banking and currency system that will at all times provide a circulating medium and credit facilities sufficient to meet the financial needs of the people; and

Whereas the Democratic Party, under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson, provided such facilities when it created the great Federal reserve banking system; and

Whereas when the Democrats were in complete control of the Government that great banking system not only supplied abundant currency and credits to all the people but literally financed the great World War; and

Whereas the fact that this great banking system did meet the currency and credit requirements of every kind of business when the Democrats were in complete control, and at the same time furnished the finances necessary to win the World War, is positive proof that it was capable of meeting the business needs of our people here at home in time of peace; and

Whereas its failure to serve the financial needs of our people in 1920, after President Wilson had been stricken down with a serious illness, was in no way the fault of the Federal reserve system but was the result of administrative plans and policies, inspired by selfish financial interests and inaugurated at the instance of Republican leaders in a Republican Congress; and

Whereas in proof of this contention we cite the oppressive and usurious progressive interest-rate amendment passed by a Republican Congress in April, 1920, and later unmercifully applied to loans and discounts in the South and West, while it was not applied at all in the East and North; and

Whereas a Republican Senate passed a resolution in May, 1920, which Senator OWEN, Democrat, of Oklahoma, and one of the authors of the Federal reserve banking act, characterized as "An invitation to the Federal Reserve Board to declare a policy of deflation"; and

Whereas the platform of the Republican Party adopted in its national convention at Chicago in June, 1920, declared in favor of a policy of deflation; and

Whereas the Democratic Party in its national platform adopted at San Francisco in July, 1920, warned the country against permitting this great banking system to get under the control "of partisan enemies who struggled against its adoption and vainly attempted to retain in the hands of speculative bankers a monopoly of the currency credits of the Nation," and declared "there are well-defined indications of an assault upon the vital principles of the system in the event of Republican success"; and

Whereas the Republican deflation policy of 1920 destroyed property values by the billions, producing business distress and financial disaster amongst millions of people in the South and West, and without excuse or justification destroyed the debt-paying power of our people; and

Whereas that drastic, destructive, deflation policy robbed the many for the benefit of the few and left debts and discontent where prosperity and contentment had been: Therefore be it

Resolved, That "we denounce the unnecessarily drastic deflation of currency and credits at the expense of agriculture, labor, and legitimate business in 1920 as a perversion and misuse of the powers of the Federal reserve system, and pledge ourselves to the cause of making this great system serve faithfully the purpose for which it was created."

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I have noted with very deep interest and approval your splendid and courageous fight against the drastic deflation policies of the Federal Reserve Board and the active and pernicious publicity campaigns being conducted by Governor Harding and other members of the board. I note also that you will continue to bring these vitally important matters to the attention of the Senate and the country through repeated discussions and publications of same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

You are leading a splendid fight in behalf of the people and can not be commended too highly for the strong and patriotic course you are pursuing.

Sincerely, J. S. WANNAMAKER, President.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I have noted with much interest the passage of your senatorial resolution calling for a report from the regional reserve banks as to sending out the Glass speech, the questionnaires concerning same, and expense of distribution. I also note the reply of Governor Harding, in which he assumes, with Federal Reserve Board, responsibility for the whole matter.

I wish to congratulate you most fully for your courageous stand in this whole controversy and forcing an admittance of responsibility by proper parties.

Trusting you will continue to press forward your fight, in the interest of the people and your own behalf, I beg to remain, with highest personal regards,

Sincerely, J. S. WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I have to-day read your very strong and forceful remarks as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 25th instant. I want to commend you for the courageous stand you are taking in behalf of the millions of suffering people as the result of the drastic and totally uncalled for deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. You are pursuing the proper course in giving such widespread publicity to your discussions through the medium of the RECORD.

Yours very truly,

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to say just a word of commendation on your recent speech against the methods of those in control of the Federal reserve system. While the papers carried brief references to the address at the time of its delivery in February, it was not until I had read the full text which you sent me that I realized what a splendid presentation you had made of the matter. It is incomprehensible to me how, in the face of the array of facts which have been given to the President and Congress, these people are retained in office. They seem to be dominated absolutely by the group of powerful eastern financiers whom the system was designed to dislodge from the control of the country's finances.

Very truly yours,

W. M. STEELE, Secretary.

Mr. President, in this day of unscrupulous scheming of greed and graft on the part of certain arrogant and hard-boiled money-loving individuals it is refreshing and fortunate to be able to point to a great American who, when it took courage of a high order to speak the truth and the whole truth, defied the powers that be and responded to the dictates of his own conscience and to the call of duty to his country, and dared to denounce the maladministration of the Federal reserve banking system and condemn deflation as a crime when he knew that he would incur the ill will and hate of the powerful money lords of America and bring down upon his head the wrath of all their satellites, who accumulated millions on the forced sales of Liberty bonds, cotton, grain, and cattle.

He knew the deflation that wrought so much business ruin amongst the people of the United States was wrong, was criminal, and he dared to say so. He pointed out to those who were directing the destructive processes of deflation that the Federal reserve banking system was amply able to supply all the currency and credit aid needed without, in the least, endangering the stability of the system. In other words, he showed that there was no excuse for the failure to permit the Federal reserve banking system to furnish all the money and all the credits needed to take care of all the business of the American people.

He gave to me and to the public information as to the financial condition and strength of the Federal reserve system that we could get from no other source. Faithful, able, and fearless he stood four square to all the mean and villainous attacks that were made upon him by the subsidized press and the other agents of greed and crime. He had served on the Federal Reserve Board with Governor Harding. He had had the opportunity to closely observe him and to form an intelligent opinion as to the real purpose of his mind and heart, and when he criticized and condemned him the country listened because everyone knew that he who thus spoke in condemnation of a public official with whom he was intimately acquainted had good cause for doing so. The man who rendered this great service was John Skelton Williams, of Virginia.

The Congress and the country owe him a great debt of gratitude for the constant, intelligent, and fearless manner in which he has furnished the inside information so necessary in placing the guilt where it belongs in the great crime of deflation.

Mr. President, I desire to print in the RECORD a few of the much-appreciated messages that I received from him during my long fight here on deflation:

RICHMOND TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., May 3, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I read with a great deal of interest your excellent speech concerning the Federal reserve system in Monday's RECORD, and I am glad that you are keeping up your pounding. It is having its effect far and wide.

I have before me a letter from Mr. Moehlenpac, of Wisconsin, a former member of the Reserve Board, who, writing under date of April 18, says:

"The feeling is very general that the Federal reserve system has been commercialized and that the big bankers control it."

Sincerely yours,

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

RICHMOND, VA., August 9, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I have just read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday your terrific indictment of the Federal Reserve Board governor. It is masterly, logical, and convincing, and it seems to me is an irresistible appeal which should, and I believe will, be effective with the President.

It seems to me that you have covered the subject with extraordinary ability and completeness, and I congratulate you most heartily. I only wish that I could have been present to hear you.

In reading it I was reminded of the best efforts of Demosthenes against the Macedonian tyrant.

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

RICHMOND, VA., September 21, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just received this morning the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday containing your terrific arraignment of W. P. G. Harding. It ought to be sent to the people. It is a masterly presentation of the case and is enough to move hearts of stone. I assume that you have sent a copy of it to the President without taking the chance of his seeing it in the RECORD. If not, I urge you to do so promptly.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

RICHMOND TRUST CO.,
Richmond, Va., May 29, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I congratulate you upon the passage by the House of the amendment to the Federal reserve act increasing the board membership to eight and reducing the amount of money which Federal reserve banks can expend for their banking palaces from $25,000,000 or more per bank to $250,000.

You and those who stood with you in this fight, especially Senators HARRIS and OVERMAN, are entitled to congratulations.

If the membership of the Federal Reserve Board had been eight two years ago instead of seven, it would have been impossible for four men to run amuck and precipitate an economic cyclone which has cost the country billions of dollars and left in its wake thousands of suicides and countless numbers of ruined men and destitute families.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

MY DEAR SENATOR: For some time I have been reading with a great deal of interest your speeches in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding the Federal reserve bank and its extravagance. A few days ago I note you made a speech in which you bring out the cost of the Capitol and other Federal buildings there at Washington, showing they only cost $19,000,000, while the new Federal bank building in Wall Street is to cost twenty-six million. * * * I wish we had more men like you in the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

C. C. DILL,

DEAR SIR: These lines might not mean much to you, but I can not help but express my appreciation for the great effort you are putting forth in the interest of the farmers and the country at large.

I am watching with keen interest the doings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I just wish that your speeches might be more widely distributed, and that we had more men of your type in Congress that would work in the interest of the people. It is a real blessing to these United States to have at least a few men in Congress who have enough backbone to stand by their convictions regardless of the dictations of the money power.

Such diligent fighting as yours can not help but be effectual to wrest the Federal reserve bank from the disastrous control of Wall Street.

May your efforts be successful, and may you be spared for many years to continue your fight for the people.

Sincerely, one of the deflated farmers,

CARL J. OLMANSON,

MY DEAR SENATOR: Please accept my thanks for your kindness in sending me the report on "Stabilizing prices of farm products."

To my mind, the merciless contraction of the currency and deflation of credits by the Federal Reserve Board is the most cold-blooded, cruel, heartless, and atrocious economic crime ever committed against a civilized people since history began.

Again thanking you, I am, very truly yours,

W. C. JONES,
Ex-Congressman.

THE MECHANICS NATIONAL BANK,
Trenton, N. J.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have in my possession Senate Resolution 335, introduced by you. You are doing splendid work and every sincere banker should appreciate it. May I ask you—

1. Why the progressive rate act should ever have been passed?

2. Is there any reason why the Federal reserve bank should be immune from the usury laws while the member banks are subject thereto?

3. Is there any reason why the Federal reserve bank should charge more than the legal rate allowed by the member banks in the States where they are located?

It seems to me that the act permitting usurious rates by the Federal reserve bank was most outrageous. I would characterize it in stronger terms were it not for my respect for Congress.

E. C. STOKES,

FIRST BANK & TRUST CO.,
Hendersonville, N. C., July 1, 1922.

Hon. J. THOS. HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are just in receipt of part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under your frank and wish to state from the standpoint of a country banker that you have our best wishes in the fight you are making against the administration of the Federal reserve system. At the time the Federal reserve officials were squandering millions on buildings and salaries and putting in force their deflation program many whites, and also colored tenants, were losing their personal property at distress sales, and in some instances good milch cows were sold as low as 85 cents each.

One of the Boston papers, commenting on the business sagacity of the First National Bank, of New York, commended them for purchasing large amounts of gilt-edge bonds in November and December, borrowing the money from the Federal reserve bank, and later on in January and February selling these bonds at a very handsome profit for the bank. All this occurred when the average farmer could not borrow fifty to a hundred dollars to buy a mule.

Again commending your stand, beg to remain,

Yours sincerely,

R. C. CLARKE, President.

DEAR SIR: I wish to congratulate you on your able and fearless exposure of the criminal deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The radical policy of this board has wellnigh bankrupted the Nation, and for such an unwarranted crime impeachment proceedings should be instituted and the perpetrators brought to justice. * * *

You have rendered a great service, not only to your own State but the entire Nation, in exposing this infamous system, and I fully realize that it requires some courage to do it. But you may feel assured that the Nation is with you in your courageous fight.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read your speech on deflation, which you kindly sent me. A week's confinement with a slight indisposition gives me ample time. I am now studying it. It is the real issue. All others are waste of time. If these hard times had to come anyhow, why should we turn out the Republicans within a year and a half after Harding is sworn in? Senator GLASS is the only man in public life who has given a plausible reason for Republican success this year. You have answered him fully, and I am proud of you for doing it. I own the largest Democratic paper in West Virginia. I have some strong writers on it and do some editorial work myself. The promise of "deflation" in Harding's platform caused my paper to say in July, 1920, that a party with deflation at its masthead "ought to carry the black flag for a banner and the skull and crossbones as an emblem." I have been paralleling that prediction and the recent and present industrial situation. I congratulate you heartily and thank you. I want 1,000 copies of your speech, with your frank, so that I can mail them to our newspapers and speakers. Please order them and have bill sent me for immediate payment.

Cordially yours,

W. E. CHILTON,
Ex-United States Senator.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I think this speech of yours ought to be generally circulated. It is chuck-full of good stuff on the issues upon which we must win in the doubtful States. The people in the oil, coal, and timber sections of States like West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois are thinking of hard times, unemployment, and high taxation. If the Democratic Party wins in this State next time, it must get the farmers, the laboring men, and the little trader and dealer. This class of people is thinking about the matter which you so forcibly present in your speech.

Please have the speeches sent to me at the above address.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. CHILTON,

MY DEAR SENATOR: I note that you have finally gotten the Senate to repeal a bill which was a part of the cruel deflation policy of the Government, for which I congratulate you.

I do not think that the country will think any the less of you but all the more that there was a Republican vote of censure passed against you.

Somebody—I do not know who it is—represents a lot of financial bandits in New York, and I know that you do not represent them. You are fighting the battles of the people with ability and courage, and you have a true friend out here in West Virginia who is watching your record and admiring your stand for the masses.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I thank you for sending me your speech on deflation, which I have read with pleasure and profit. My daily paper, the largest in West Virginia, has been hammering on this point, so that Senator GLASS's speech upset me. Your note is a most cheering one, and you are right and have stated the case clearly. This is the winning issue that the people can understand. * * * It is with great pleasure that I note your strong position in the Senate. You know that I am proud of you.

Sincerely, your friend,

If so, in the name of God, where are we drifting? * * *

[From Manufacturers' Record, November 9, 1922.]

Four days before the last Congress adjourned the President informed Senator MCLEAN, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, that he would send Mr. Harding's nomination to the Capitol if he were assured that it would be confirmed. An informal poll was conducted with the assistance of the Democrats and the President was advised not to send in the nomination at that time, because it was found that a large number of Senators favorable to the confirmation of Governor Harding were absent. This was linked with the fear that the receipt of the nomination would inspire Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, to enter upon an interminable speech attacking Governor Harding and the reserve board's deflation policy.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been reading with a great deal of pleasure your timely exposure of the action of the officers of the Federal Reserve Board, and I have also noticed the attack of the money sharks and the small fry that do their bidding upon you. This assures me you are on the right road to show up those responsible for this deflation of the common people. The masses are watching as never before the actions of those in trust, and those found lacking will be relegated to private life. But those who are striving like you are to place the responsibility where it belongs for these terrible times will be rewarded. Of this there is no doubt in my mind. You need not fear the Birmingham News. It does not carry the public opinion like a great many think. We are beginning to see through Victor Hanson, and we also can notice whom he serves best. Those who strive to serve the masses of the people are more or less buffeted and slandered in our great daily papers, which only proves they stand for special privileges. Press on, Senator; the money power is getting too arrogant.

With kind regards and good wishes, I am,

MY DEAR SENATOR: You can bet your last dollar that down deep in the hearts of thousands and thousands of your constituents is a genuine approval of your every attack on the cotton growers' enemies, and no greater enemy are the rascals on the New York Exchange than the heads of the Federal Reserve Board in 1920 and 1921. The plain people are solidly with you.

MY DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: For the best interest of our country, and especially the South, it behooves you to keep up your present tactics taken against W. P. G. Harding, governor of Federal Reserve Bank Board. In my judgment, he is responsible for the business calamity in the fall of 1920. He pumped all the money out of the country banks, which broke thousands of merchants.

Mr. Harding is carrying the bloodstain of hundreds of good men who are now in their graves due to the uncalled-for drastic deflation.

The Federal reserve bank is fine for what it was founded for, but give us honest men to control this worthy institution.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have kept up with you through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I think it proper to state that you have grown on me very largely and that I admire the positions you have taken on the several matters to which you have directed your attention since in the Senate. I was especially glad when you forced Senator GLASS to cover in your colloquy with him in re Federal reserve bank. I wish we had more Senators who would represent the interest of the people rather than special clients. I may add that I voice the sentiments of many others who feared that you might not measure up in the Senate to the exigencies of the times, but you have demonstrated beyond doubt that any apprehension along that line was wholly unfounded.

With best wishes, yours truly,

[Excerpt from Montgomery Journal editorial.]

Credit was so manipulated that it was denied the farmer and he was forced to sell, often below the cost of production. Credit was extended to the speculator and he was enabled to buy at the lower price. Again the speculator was enabled to command credit and export his holdings at a great advance. At the same time he was able to take an undue toll from the farmer and from the starving millions of Europe. This illustrates what happened to all farm products to a very great degree. * * * And that is why Senator HEFLIN has been making assaults upon the Federal Reserve Board, and it is why Wall Street and its newspapers have been assailing Alabama's junior Senator.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,

DEAR SENATOR: It is true that very few of the small banks in this State approve the action of the Federal Reserve Board in raising the rate of interest. They feel that W. P. G. Harding is the man who is guilty of having done this thing. They further feel that the raising of the rate of interest and the consequent restricting of credit was the cause of the calamitous and precipitous drop in the value of things which they had for sale and causing a strangulation of all markets.

I appreciate what you are undertaking to do. I think the Federal reserve law one of the greatest laws ever put upon the statute books, but I do not think for this reason we should indorse everything done by that board.

I hope that W. P. G. Harding will not be reappointed.

With every good wish, I am yours very truly,

C. B. VERNER, President.

DEAR SIR: I had the extreme good fortune to visit the Senate on several days when you made your masterful appeals against the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding as governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Being a native of Alabama, I realize that no one but an Alabamian would have the nerve to court disaster as you have in opposing the money interest. Yet, knowing also the hearts of Alabama people, I also realize, as you do, that the only man they want to represent them is a man of the character which you have. * * * Keep the Senate from confirming Harding's reappointment should it be made and you will have done as much in a short time as most Senators accomplish during their entire career. * * *

DEAR SENATOR: I am trying to express my gratitude to you for the great fight you have made in the Senate against that cold-blooded W. P. G. Harding, the man that has wrought so much havoc in the Southland. You have expressed it but mildly when you say that he caused suicides, death, bank failures. There are many men who have lost their homes on account of his deflation policy. Coffee County, Ala., alone will never be able to redeem the homes that were lost. Millions of dollars are owing to-day that would not have been if we had had a fair deal in the fall of 1920 by Mr. Harding. I hope you will succeed in defeating him.

PAGE & WILLIAMS,
Dothan, Ala., December 1, 1922.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR TOM: I "hand you a boquet," well deserved, "while you yet live." Your position against W. P. G. Harding in the Federal reserve deflation matter has pleased me more than anything that has ever happened in the Senate. There can be no excuse for his position in the matter. The misuse (I say it advisedly—the misuse) of the Nation's credit and withholding it to bring on a panic (when it was instituted to prohibit panics) can not be defended on any grounds. He can not plead ignorance of its consequences, because he must have known better. And if deliberate it deserves the strongest condemnation from the Senate.

Mark you, I am not a sorehead or general kicker by any means; but, in my judgment, this high-handed misuse of power, as it was wielded, should oust the "whole bunch" responsible for it.

I just wanted to say this to you and to commend you for taking the stand you have taken. You must have the right kind of grit in your craw, or that bunch would have scared you off or tried to bluff you out of the fight.

Let me add one thing more: It took common honesty, in behalf of the people generally, to have made the fight, and if you ever need me at any time to help "fight like the dickens" to keep you in the Senate I want you to call on me.

Sincerely your friend,

R. C. WILLIAMS.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I was glad, indeed, to note in yesterday's paper that "Poison Gas" Harding is not to be considered for reappointment on the Federal Reserve Board. You certainly won your spurs in this engagement, and when the appointment is made and another man is placed on the board

I believe that the credit will be given you by the press throughout the Nation. I believe that your acts will help strike fear to the hearts of any individual or group of individuals who attempt to sacrifice the interests of the producers of this country and offer them as meat for the moneyed interests. From all that I can hear, things are looking good for you in Alabama.

In this splendid achievement, which you have almost single handed accomplished against the powerful moneyed interests of the country and the unscrupulous Wall Street bandits, you have rendered the people of the entire country a service of incalculable benefit, and I predict that in due time the thanks and appreciation of our country will be made manifest. * * *

MY DEAR HEFLIN: * * * I am delighted with your work in the Senate and so glad that you did rout the said W. P. G. Harding. You are right. We farmers need a Federal farm loan law that will serve us without so much red tape and one that does not take so long to get the money. This Government can and should help the farmers. The farmers must have cheaper money. Farm lands are the best and safest security in this country and will always be worth more and more as the years go by. I would like to have a word from you if you have a moment. Many of the boys here often speak of you and your fine work. HONORABLE SIR: As an admirer of your courageous fight in the United States Senate for the rights of the American people, I am impelled to express myself to you in a complimentary way.

I have for more than two years given myself over to a close study of your efforts, through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, as a result, I have become convinced that all good Americans can not help but admire the expressions of your wholesome convictions in favor of the American people.

It is quite evident that you have not chosen the path of least resistance, and for this reason it behooves me to believe sincerely that you are endeavoring to support legislation that is beneficial to all alike.

I have read with a good measure of interest the remarks contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1, 1923, which have been the cause of a much heated discussion with regard to your stand on the matter of Wall Street, etc.

I am confident, however, that the beratings of the press will have no effect upon your determined cause to champion the right of a free people, and hope that you may find ample support for your admirable contentions within your own ranks.

I have the honor to remain

Very respectfully yours,

I delivered your speech the other night. Of course, I didn't deliver it like you would have done the job, but I delivered at it and gave you the credit. That is all I could do. After the meeting dozens of people asked me if I could procure them a copy of your speech.

Your speech is certainly wonderful when read by a man familiar with the conditions in this section of the country. What I mean by this is that your speech is particularly applicable here, and I suppose it is just as applicable elsewhere.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: On Tuesday, June 20, I was an interested spectator in the Senate gallery, and had come to Washington with the express idea of being present when the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill was to be reported for consideration.

When Senator WALSH asked that it be given preference over the tariff measure, I was highly elated. I was also pleased when Senator ROBINSON took the floor in the soldiers behalf, but I was overjoyed when the junior Senator from Alabama rose on two occasions, stimulated by the telegram that had been sent him from the department commander of the American Legion in Alabama.

I had always known that you were a champion of our cause, for I had received your promise on one occasion that your sympathies were with these men and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD had disclosed to me more than once that your conviction in this cause was sincere.

Your appeal and your oratory in those two master speeches were without parallel, and I am sorry that every man who wore the uniform did not hear them. I am only one of the vast army that has returned to civil life, but I believe that I have the privilege to extend to you my heartfelt gratitude and appreciation for the splendid stand that you have taken for this legislation.

I can not boast of a Senator from Pennsylvania who is in accord with this measure, but I am proud indeed that there is one man in the upper House who speaks not only for Alabama but for Pennsylvania as well. I was forced to leave Washington quite early on that day and could not grasp your hand and thank you, so I am taking this means of telling you that your effort shall not be in vain, because your Alabama is human and her sons will not overlook your name.

Again thanking you and wishing you extended success I remain,

Yours very truly, HENRY M. BAKER.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1923.

SENATE ACTION IN HEFLIN CASE DANGEROUS PRECEDENT AGAINST FREE DEBATE.

By voting to declare Senator HEFLIN (Democrat, Alabama) out of order and deprive him of the floor for an utterance to which Senator LODGE (Republican, Massachusetts) objected, the Republican majority of the Senate have infringed the right of free discussion in that body and attempted to muzzle a sovereign State of the Union. This is the opinion now being expressed by Republicans as well as Democrats. One former Republican Senator has condemned the ruling as a dangerous precedent.

The injustice and absurdity of the Senate's action were made all the plainer by reason of Vice President Coolidge's contention that Senator HEFLIN's offense consisted not in the words he spoke but in his "attitude and the expression that went with them."

Senator ROBINSON (Democrat, of Arkansas) has clarified the whole issue in the following statement:

SENATOR ROBINSON'S STATEMENT.

"In sustaining the decision of the Vice President that Senator HEFLIN was out of order when, in discussing the British debt settlement, he declared, 'I am here to represent the people; to represent, in part, my State. I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street,' the Senate violated its own precedents and trespassed upon the freedom of debate.

"The Chair admitted in his ruling that the words used did not impute unworthy motives or conduct to other Senators, and justified his decision solely on the ground that the attitude and expression of the Senator implied that other Senators did represent bond sharks and gamblers of Wall Street and big financiers.

"This decision can be sustained by no other legislative precedent of the Senate.

"If this precedent should be applied impartially to all Senators it would end freedom of speech and debate in the Senate.

"No Senator has earnestly defended this decision, and in my judgment it will be regarded as a parliamentary monstrosity."

In speaking on the subject in the Senate, Senator ROBINSON said:

"If a Senator can not say 'I am here to represent the people'—if he can not say 'I am not here to represent bond sharks or gamblers'—then I ask Senators what is the privilege of a Senator of the United States?

"Of course some one was sensitive about the matter because of something that he thought must have been in the mind of the Senator from Alabama; but I respectfully suggest that the question of orderly debate is confined to the language employed by the Senator. If Senators will read the whole paragraph in which the words 'objected to' are found, they will find that there is not the slightest implication or imputation by the Senator from Alabama. Let me read it:

WHAT HEFLIN REALLY SAID.

"'Mr. HEFLIN. I merely wanted to go on record as saying a word in behalf of some of the statements of my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]—I did not hear all of his speech—and to speak for the American people somewhat about a debt that is due to them. Does Wall Street want to collect her money from Great Britain and have this whole debt held up until she can collect it? She did have it held up, it seems, until she collected $1,700,000,000 from France and Great Britain. Does she want to have this debt held up for 62 years so she can go on undisturbed and collect the other money due her from the various countries? I am here to represent the people, to represent in part my State; I am not here to represent the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street. I want the American people to have a fair deal.'

"When the connection in which the language objected to which was used by the Senator from Alabama is considered one can not arrive at the conclusion that it constituted a charge that other Senators represented Wall Street or did not represent the people. It was a declaration that Wall Street had a motive to protect its interests; it was a declaration that the Senator from Alabama was here to represent other interests than Wall Street. However much they dislike the arguments made by a Senator or the position taken by a Senator on any subject, if Senators write into the precedents of the Senate a decision that the representative of a sovereign State can not stand on this floor and declare that he represents or seeks to represent in part his State and does not represent interests which he thinks are obnoxious to the people of his State, then we shall have gone a long way toward suppressing free speech in the Senate of the United States."

SEES VICTORY FOR BRITAIN.

Senator HEFLIN, Democrat, Alabama, criticized the interest-rate features of the settlement, declaring it took "statesmanship of a high order and diplomacy of a marked and magnificent type to effect a debt settlement with Great Britain by which we borrow money and pay 4¼ per cent for it and loan that money to Great Britain at 3 and 3½ per cent."

The Alabama Senator said Great Britain had achieved success in her debt negotiations through the "marvelous skill and genius of the master minds that she sent here to perfect a settlement with certain innocent, raw, and inexperienced Republican diplomats."

"We drove the British troops," he added, "from Kings Mountain. We whipped our British cousin under Washington at Yorktown, but what they did to us in Washington in battle with General SMOOT and his Republican comrades is enough to make the angels weep. It was, indeed, a battle of the giants."

Senator HEFLIN said Great Britain under the settlement would pay the United States the first year approximately $138,000,000, while as interest on money loaned to Great Britain the Treasury would pay out at the rate of 4¼ per cent $195,000,000, a loss of $57,000,000 to the United States.

The pending plan would "cancel" $1,666,700,000 of the British debt at its present rate of 4½ per cent interest, Senator MCKELLAR, Democrat, Tennessee, declared in another speech against the bill. (The Philadelphia Inquirer, February 17, 1923.)

THE ATTEMPT TO MUZZLE SENATOR HEFLIN OF ALABAMA—IT WAS A FAILURE FOR HE HAD ALREADY MADE HIS STATEMENT—BUT REPUBLICANS MADE THE TRIAL ANYHOW—THE GREAT ALABAMIAN PROPOSED TO SHOW THAT HE REPRESENTED THE PEOPLE OF HIS STATE AND NOT THE WALL STREET SHARKS, WHICH DECLARATION BORE DOWN HEAVILY ON THE SORE CORNS OF SOME OF THE GRAND OLD PARTY SENATORS UPON WHOSE FEET HE HAD STEPPED WITH CRUSHING FORCE.

WASHINGTON, February 22 (special correspondence).—By voting to declare Senator HEFLIN (Democrat, Alabama) out of order and deprive him of the floor for an utterance to which Senator LODGE (Republican, Massachusetts) objected, the Republican majority of the Senate have infringed on the right of free discussion in that body and attempted to muzzle a sovereign State of the Union. This is the opinion now being expressed by Republicans as well as Democrats. One former Senator (Republican) has condemned the ruling as a dangerous precedent.

The injustice and absurdity of the Senate's action, it is pointed out, were made all the plainer by reason of Vice President Coolidge's contention that Senator HEFLIN's offense consisted not in the words he spoke but in his "attitude and the expression that went with them."

WHY THE ATTACK ON HEFLIN BY THE NEWS?

Last Friday evening the Birmingham News viciously attacked Senator HEFLIN, referring to him as a vulgar demagogue, on account of the part he took in the debate upon the British and American debt agreement.

Did the facts justify this attack or is it in line with an apparent disposition of the News to vent its anger and malice upon all those who take the part of the people against the agencies of organized greed?

In criticizing Senator HEFLIN, instead of American Debt Commission, the Birmingham News is putting a premium upon deception, double dealing, and betrayal of the people by public officials.

Simply because Senator HEFLIN dropped a bomb into a nest of robbers and conspirators against the American people the News is in a terrible rage.

[From the Gazette, February 12, 1923.]

Senator HEFLIN was so bold as to say that he did not represent "the bond sharks, the big financiers of Wall Street." The Vice President ruled that such language was out of order and the Senate sustained the ruling. Senator HEFLIN must represent these neglected people whether he wants to do so or not.

The Republicans of the United States Senate tried to make TOM HEFLIN apologize for something he said about another Member of the Senate. That wasn't the first thing those Republicans ever tried to get our TOM to do what he refused to do.

We hold no brief for Senator TOM HEFLIN, but we will not talk against him merely because the Birmingham News is against him. It is our judgment that that paper is against most good men and measures. A good old gentleman used to say about a certain wet daily in Alabama, "I'll find out what side it is on and I'll take the other side and know I'll be on the clean, moral side." It looks from this distance like the Birmingham News in its attack on some editors, statesmen, and near statesmen is piling up trouble that may be hard to break away from.

Senator HEFLIN made a strong fight to have at least one Democrat named on the commission for settling the terms of the British debt. As Democrats will have to help pay the billion dollars lost to this country by the settlement made, we agree with "Cotton TOM" that the minority should have been represented.

CONGRESS FAILS IN ATTEMPT TO END FILIBUSTER—ONLY MOMENTARY BREAK IN HEFLIN'S NITRATE SPEECH—SCORES OF NOMINATIONS JEOPARDIZED.

Senator HEFLIN suspended his lone filibuster in the Senate long enough to permit a vote on the bill for return of alien property valued at $10,000 or less. HEFLIN gave up the floor only after the Senate had agreed that he should be permitted to go on with his filibustering speech as soon as the alien property bill was out of the way.

The farm credits bill also got through the Senate, HEFLIN himself moving its consideration.

HEFLIN STARTS FIREWORKS.

Senator HEFLIN, Alabama, started the Senate filibuster in an effort to coerce House leaders into yielding on the nitrate bill. He said he was prepared to talk all night if necessary and urged Senate leaders to use their influence in the House if they wished to prevent a filibuster that would prevent any more legislation getting through.

The nitrate bill, about which the trouble revolved, appropriated $10,000,000 for purchase by the Government of Chilean nitrates and calcium arsenate, to be sold to the cotton growers of the South to fight off the boll weevil. The nitrate would be used as fertilizer to help rush the crop to maturity before the weevil got in its ravages, while the calcium arsenate would be used to kill the weevil. The cotton growers would have three months to pay for the nitrate and calcium arsenate.

Representative POU, North Carolina, ranking Democrat on the Rules Committee, charged that CAMPBELL had broken faith with him after promising that the rule for consideration of the nitrate bill would be reported to the House. CAMPBELL instead pocketed the rule, POU said.

COTTON FILIBUSTER DELAYS BILLS IN DYING CONGRESS—HEFLIN AND SOUTHERN MEN HOLD SENATE FLOOR HOURS TO PASS BOLL WEEVIL ACT.

The filibuster, which threatened to hold up all legislation, was begun by Senator HEFLIN. It came just when everyone thought the session would have the most peaceful death of any Congress for many years, with everything that had any chance well cleaned up.

The situation to-night differs in the frankness with which Mr. HEFLIN announced on the floor his intention to talk everything to death until the House passed the boll weevil bill.

Mr. HEFLIN charged that the Republican leader on the House side, Representative MONDELL, had said he would not permit the boll weevil bill to come to a vote in the House. He suggested to those Senators who were anxious personally in behalf of various small measures that they should use their influence with Mr. MONDELL.

FARM CREDITS BILL CHECKS FILIBUSTER IN DYING CONGRESS—A BOLL WEEVIL FIGHT.

Senator HEFLIN (Alabama), aided by Senators SMITH (Democrat, South Carolina) and HARRIS (Democrat, Georgia), were conducting in the Senate what HEFLIN declared was a "finish fight" on the bill to appropriate $10,000,000 for nitrates and arsenates to kill the cotton boll weevil in the South.

Senator HEFLIN said the House wanted to vote on the bill, but that Floor Leader MONDELL (Wyoming) and Acting Speaker CAMPBELL (Kansas) would not permit action on it.

In an effort to break the deadlock Senator CURTIS conferred with Floor Leader MONDELL and other leaders in the House, urging them to recede from their position. They remained adamant.

BANKERS' FINANCE CORPORATION,
Milwaukee, Wis., September 25, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to thank you, to congratulate you, and to encourage you upon your splendid fight in protecting the great Federal reserve system from abuses in the future such as it has been subject to in the two years gone by.

Think I know something of the temper of the great western areas and of how the farmers feel at the present time. The policy of deflation which involved interest rates, resulting in the lowering of prices of farm products, has put the agricultural interest of our country in an angry mood. My first interest is with the Federal reserve system. It has been a bulwark to our Nation in the stressful days of the war. It was calculated to be a democratic institution, and the law was enacted for the purpose of serving all our people all the time. It is not my purpose to criticize specifically the administration during the past two years. I am satisfied that the reappointment of Governor Harding as the leader of the system again is going to hurt, and that very, very much. The farmers are aware of his attitude and of his lack of interest and sympathy with their program. They have paid the price once, and will not do it again. Therefore I wish to urge upon you the necessity of continuing your opposition to his reappointment. This is not because of anything personal, but because of my interest in the system and as it is related to the great western country and to the farmers particularly. What I have written you in this letter I would not hesitate to say to Governor Harding himself.

Yours very truly, H. A. MOEHLENPAH, President.

THE MECHANICS NATIONAL BANK,
Trenton, N. J., October 4, 1922.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: I have your favor of the 2d and thank you. I will follow your suggestion. I am not well and doubt whether I can be at the bankers' convention or not. It certainly would be an unfortunate thing for the bankers to attempt a thing like that.

While I think a great deal of my New York banking friends, with whom I have very intimate personal relations, I am none the less strongly opposed to and outspoken against their banking methods. I have not hesitated to so express myself in public speech when they were present.

The difficulty with our New York banking friends is that they mean well, but they don't appreciate the needs of the individual for credit and lean too much toward international banking, to the detriment of our own country. It is this attitude on their part that induces them to want the reappointment you speak of (Governor Harding), because the party in question is too prone to lean to their policies when he ought to stand up against them.

Very sincerely yours,

E. C. STOKES, President.
(Ex-Governor of New Jersey.)

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, it is exceedingly embarrassing to me to have to discuss this measure at this time, for I recognize the parliamentary situation in the Senate. This is the last day of the session; Senators are interested in various bills, and properly so; but I do not feel that I am personally to blame for the situation, for I warned Senators when the motion was made to take up the bill that, if it were taken up, there would have to be some time allowed for legitimate discussion. I do not know how I can render any larger service to the country, if I can render any service, than by calling attention to what I regard as the very unfortunate and very undesirable features of the measure which is now before the Senate. I shall not participate in any filibuster against the bill, even if I knew by doing so I could defeat it—and, of course, every Senator knows it could easily be defeated—but I shall state the argument against the measure as briefly as I can, and then permit the Senate to vote upon it. I desire to say to Senators, Mr. President, that, in my judgment, there has not been before the Senate for some time a bill of greater importance than this, or one which is fraught with graver consequences to the American people.

It is delightful always to participate in debate, even though my part be a most humble one, with the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], because they are frank in their statements. If the advocates of this bill in the House of Representatives had been as frank as have been the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Utah, the measure would not be here to-day.

The bill was passed in the other House and is here upon the theory that those who supported it can still be in favor of the proposition of having claims of our citizens against Germany settled out of this fund that we know we now hold not by confiscation but under treaty rights. The bill was passed, I say, upon the theory that it could be passed without any infringement whatever upon that principle. Now, however, the distinguished and able Senators from Iowa and Utah frankly declare their position, and we have all known it, of course, all the time. Their own view is that this Government is not entitled to hold any of this property; that it ought not to hold any of it. Therefore they favor this bill merely because it goes part of the way they desire, for their own view is—and, indeed, they very frankly state it—that the Government of the United States ought to release all this property. That furnishes me, Mr. President, with the point of departure which I desire in this discussion.

This proposition is only the beginning of a policy that contemplates the final release of every dollar of this property and the saddling of the burden upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of the United States of America. I shall develop that thought somewhat at length before I conclude, but that is the policy, and I think I might just as well cover that now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator from Ohio proceeds, I should like to understand what the attitude of the Senator is. Does the Senator advocate the holding of so much of this property as is in excess of the amount necessary to satisfy the claims of American citizens?

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to cover that point a little later. I do not wish to be diverted to that now. I hope to make the point clear, and if I shall not do so I hope the Senator will remind me of it later.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not wish the Senator from Ohio to misunderstand me.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the Senator perfectly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said that the theory of this bill and of those who framed it and those who secured its passage in the other House was that there would be ample money and property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to pay all the claims of American citizens against the German Government that are established before the mixed commission. My own personal view was called out by an inquiry, but even if I was wrong with regard to that it should not in any way affect this bill, which is based upon an entirely different theory.

Mr. WILLIS. I fully understood the Senator from Iowa, and his position is made perfectly clear in the report; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator proceeds to discuss the general proposition to which he has adverted will he further yield to me?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether this particular measure is not just exactly as consistent with the one theory about this matter as with the other? Those who advocate holding this property for the complete satisfaction of all American claims against the German Government may say, "There is plenty left, and accordingly I shall vote for this bill." Is not such a man entirely consistent?

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator from Montana desires my opinion, I will say no, I do not think he is.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to proceed just a little further to develop the theory that is back of this measure. I quite understood my friend from Iowa and my friend from Utah in their statements. I did not understand them to say that this bill is based upon their ideas, but I simply was commenting upon their individual opinions. I now say, however, that back of this whole movement, back of all this propaganda in the country, is the idea of surrendering every penny of this property and to saddle the burden on the taxpayers of the United States to pay the claims of American nationals.

I have here a good statement of the plan. It is found in an argument in support of this bill, prepared, or at any rate published, under the name of Mr. Edwin M. Borchard. Here is the conclusion of the whole matter; it is found on page 39 of his argument, of which every Senator, I assume, has received a copy. He says:

> It is submitted that every consideration advanced for the return of any of the property commands the return of all of it.

I warn Senators now that if this proposed legislation shall be enacted, if we shall create 28,000 precedents against the retention of this property, it will be but the beginning of the campaign to release all of the property in accordance with the view expressed by the Senator from Utah, when he said, as I understood him, that the way this ought to be handled would be for us to release all this property, secure an arrangement with Germany, and then collect the money from Germany. That sounds well; it will look well in print; anything may be printed on white paper; but does that appeal to Senators as a practical proposition? We have a claim against Germany now for the maintenance of our troops on the Rhine. Are we collecting it? Are we making war against Germany to collect it? Is it proposed that we shall make war in order to collect it? Everybody knows that an affirmative reply would simply be delightful verbiage. We are not going to make war on Germany for that purpose, and there is at present no tangible way whereby we can collect from Germany any obligations which are due us.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the question for information, for I have not studied this question as fully, perhaps, as have some other Senators. Is it not true that Germany has already paid back to our allies certain sums and that our allies are withholding amounts due us, but that we will undoubtedly get them from our allies?

Mr. WILLIS. I should say in response to that very proper inquiry that there is some question about that; that is a matter of controversy. However, the one important thing about which I am concerned is that we have not got it and we are not likely to get it. I understand it to be the fact that the Allies have declined to permit this Government to have any portion of the reparation fund for that purpose. That is my understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not quite have that understanding. I can hardly conceive that our allies would collect that money and then not pay what rightfully belongs to us.

Mr. WILLIS. At any rate, we have not obtained it as yet.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator another question while I am on the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Let me finish the answer I was about to make. The Senator and I agree perfectly upon the proposition that Germany owes us and that, whether or not there has been some misunderstanding with the Allies about the reparation fund, at any rate, we have not yet got the money. The point I want to make is this: It is understood by the Allies that this particular fund in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian is the fund that we elected to hold as our security. What sort of position will this country be in if we say to our allies now, "We have released the funds which we held as security; we have let them go, and now we come to you and ask for some more." Does the Senator think that we will improve our position any?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe that is a correct statement of the case. I may not have the facts entirely right; I obtained some of my information from newspaper articles that purported to contain letters from our Secretary of State and the replies from the British Government and the French Government, and I judged from that correspondence that it was conceded, first, that the Allies had collected at least part of this money—I do not know whether all of it or not—and, second, that they had not paid it over to the United States, but that they thought it was a proper claim and that they were all anxious that it should be paid over, and I anticipated that there would be no trouble. Certainly if Germany has paid it to our allies, we ought not to make her pay it again if we can get our allies to turn it over to us, and if she has paid it to them I have no idea that they will not promptly turn it over to us.

Mr. WILLIS. I agree pretty generally with the Senator on that proposition, which, by the way, has not anything particularly to do with this bill, although it is an interesting question. We are talking now about the claims of our nationals.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the Senator brought the question into this discussion by saying that part of our claim was on account of payment for our army on the Rhine.

Mr. WILLIS. No; I referred to that only in response to what the Senator from Utah had said. As I understood him, he had stated that the proper thing to do was to release all this property, secure an arrangement with Germany as to our claims, and then collect from the German Government. I suggested the amounts due on account of our army on the Rhine as an illustration of the fact that we were not collecting very rapidly. That is the only way that question came up. Now, to proceed——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer a further interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not care to occupy so much time, but I will be glad to yield to my friend from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator was speaking about the chances of our securing reimbursement for the expenses of our army of occupation, and he suggested that if we released this particular property we would imperil our claim against the Allies for that. Does the Senator understand that this particular property stands pledged for the payment to the United States of the expenses of its army of occupation?

Mr. WILLIS. My personal opinion is that it does not, but there is a contention as to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. Then, if that is the case, how could the release of the security for some other debt embarrass in any way the collection of our share of the reparation money paid for the expenses of the army of occupation?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I was simply stating frankly my own personal view. I do not believe that was in contemplation when the Knox resolution was adopted, but there are very many much more able than myself who take the contrary view.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But how could they take a contrary view? I have a copy of the treaty with Germany before me.

Mr. BORAH. Who are the able gentlemen who take such a view?

Mr. WILLIS. I can not make an enumeration of them, but I know there is a difference of opinion about it.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know anyone who could take that view. There is not the slightest foundation for it.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will read the letter from the Secretary of State he will observe that the Secretary states not that position but says that it is a controverted point, or language to that effect. I do not have the list of gentlemen before me.

Mr. BORAH. He must have made it so himself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator suffer me to read from the treaty?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In section 5 it says:

> All property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, * * * which was on April 6, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or under control of * * * the United States * * * shall be retained by the United States of America and no disposition thereof made, except as shall have been heretofore or specifically hereafter shall be provided by law until such time as the Imperial German Government and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, or their successor or successors, shall have respectively made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said Governments, respectively, of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States of America and who have suffered through the acts of the Imperial German Government or its agents or the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government or its agents since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to their persons or property, directly or indirectly.

And so on. How can it be possibly considered that that stands pledged for the expenses of this Government in maintaining its Army of Occupation on the Rhine?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to go into the argument of that point. As I have said, I do not so contend. I used that only as an illustration to combat the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah that it would be an easy matter to collect. I am talking about the claims of our nationals against Germany. That is all I am talking about at the present time.

As I have called attention to it here, the chief advocate of this bill admits that the policy that is back of this thing is the idea that all this property ought to be released; but, taking up the theory that is so clearly stated by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and which is the basis of the report—which, by the way, sounds a rather dubious note, incongruous and inconsistent with the usually definite and clear propositions advocated by the Senator from Iowa—he says, in his report, from which I read at page 2:

> The committee understands—

The report does not say that this is the fact, but it understands—> that the bill as it passed the House has the approval of the Alien Property Custodian—

There is not any doubt that the understanding of the committee is correct there—> and it is stated in that report that it also has the approval of the Department of State.

That is put in a very delicate and noncommittal sort of a way, and that is so stated in the House report. There is no doubt about that. I do not question that it is so stated in the House report. It is stated in that report that it has the approval of the Department of State.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that ought not to be subject to criticism, because the Senate committee did not have the Secretary of State or anyone from his office before it in the investigation. It did have the Alien Property Custodian before it; and I can not conceive of anything uncertain or doubtful about saying that the House committee, which had before it either a letter or a representative of the State Department, had so stated in its report. Our committee had no personal knowledge on that subject.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the Senator, and I understand his report, and the Senator understands that I would not under any conditions question anything that he might say; but I am calling attention to the fact which he has now emphasized, that his great committee which has reported this bill did not, as he has just stated, have the Secretary of State before it, and therefore has relied entirely upon the House report, in which, as he says, it is stated that the bill also has the approval of the Department of State. With great respect, I beg to suggest that in a measure so important as this the Secretary of State ought to have been before the committee, particularly when he had written, as he had previously written, to the House committee.

I refer to the hearings entitled "Enemy Owned Property," and I begin at page 56 of those hearings and call the attention of the Senate to what the Secretary of State did actually say:

I shall not discuss the plan which the bill sets forth of confiscating the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian by providing for its application not only to the payment of the claims of American citizens but also to the claim of this Government for pensions and allowances.

Going further down, he says:

In other words, so far as the claims of American citizens are concerned, the properties in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, or their proceeds if liquidated, are to be held virtually in pledge until Germany, Austria, and Hungary, respectively, make suitable provisions for the satisfaction of these claims.

I might say there, in response to an inquiry made by the Senator from Tennessee, that Germany has not made any arrangements whatever to take care of those claims.

Senators, think of the situation with which we are confronted. A Mixed Claims Commission is now sitting, as has been stated here, composed of eminent jurists, for the ascertainment of the amount of these claims, and yet it is proposed, almost before the commission is organized, that we shall surrender the only security we have for the payment of whatever claims may be found to be valid.

But it is stated here further in the report of the committee—and I shall read a little further from the Secretary of State in a moment—that—

The theory of the House bill is that sufficient property will remain—

I should like to know where the committee got that information. How can anybody possibly know whether there will be sufficient property remaining, when nobody knows yet the actual number of claims filed, let alone the sum total of the amounts that are involved?

I know this much about it: It is shown by the hearings that out of the first 1,200 claims filed there was a sum total of damages demanded of $221,000,000. The latest information I have from a representative of the Mixed Claims Commission is that up to date they have not got them all counted. They have counted up to 12,000. They know they have 12,000, and there probably will be 15,000, I am advised, and it is likely that the amount of the claims will be a billion dollars or more. Now, when they have not yet counted the claims and have not even made an estimate of the sum total of the amounts of the claims, how can anybody say that ample property remains to satisfy the claims?

Of course, it is utterly impossible; and this proposition, reduced to its elements, simply amounts to this: That we, the trustees, are proposing to surrender these claims when we do not know the number or the amounts, upon the theory that really the Government is responsible and that it will eventually pay. That is exactly what will happen. If the theory of this bill shall find expression in the law of this land, we will have claims presented that will run into the millions and the hundreds of millions. There is no logic whatever in the proposition that we are going to surrender all of these holdings of $10,000 or under. If there is reason for that, then why not surrender those of $15,000 or $50,000? Either we ought to hold this property until the Mixed Claims Commission has finished its work, so that we can know the number of the claims and the amount of them and be sure of something, or else we ought to follow the suggestion of the eminent Senator from Utah, and release it all, and saddle the burden on the shoulders of the taxpayers.

Now, I want to finish what I started to say about the attitude of the Secretary of State. I will read just a line or two further from this same document. I shall put these letters in at length, if I have that permission, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the letters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD. (See Appendix.)

Mr. WILLIS. I will read just a paragraph from the letter at the top of page 58:

It is understood that this bill has been introduced upon the assumption that it would require the return of a relatively small amount of property and that the security for the settlement of American claims would not be substantially impaired. Unless this were the fact, I could not approve this bill even though amended as above suggested.

That is what the Secretary of State says, and yet the report says that the Secretary of State is for it and no evidence at all is submitted to show that an adequate amount of property is left.

Then, I quote again from page 59. The Secretary, after quoting from his previous letter the paragraph I have read, says:

Suitable provision has not yet been made for the settlement of American claims, and my letter of July 26 adequately sets forth my present views with regard to the bill. I do not, therefore, deem it necessary to submit any additional statements in the matter.

I will put in the RECORD all those letters, a perusal of which will convince anybody that the State Department, at least, has never indorsed this proposition. The Alien Property Custodian has indorsed it; the State Department has not.

What is the method proposed by these persons outside of the Senate—the gentlemen advocating this bill? How are they going to pay these claims? In this same argument, at pages 28 and 29, it is beautifully outlined; a fine system. It says:

The claims can be legally secured, it is believed, by an imposition by the German Government of, say, 10 per cent in taxes on the sequestrated property. This would produce a fund of $50,000,000, and could be turned over to the United States Government as reparations. Unfortunately, the German Government can not promise to make such a payment without interference by the Reparation Commission. We are therefore again reluctantly driven by the official renunciation of reparations into the suggestion of a method intrinsically most undesirable, namely, ourselves to deduct from the sequestrated property 10 per cent for taxes. It may be said that 10 per cent, in view of the depreciation of the mark, is more than the normal rate of taxation on such property in Germany; but the owners themselves will probably agree to permit that amount of taxation in order to restore their property to productive uses. For any balance of the American claims above the $50,000,000 mentioned the German Government could issue to American citizens long-term German bonds, which, through the favors extended to the Allies by the Debt Funding Commission, we have the means to obtain allied consent to secure. It is assumed, of course, that the German Government will survive, and that some day it will again become solvent. It is, indeed, only on the theory that the German Government will not survive that the retention of any of the private property has as much as a precautionary, practical justification, though it is submitted that its evil consequences far outweigh even this consideration. The claimants should therefore be amply satisfied with the protection they are securing, which is far beyond that obtained by American claimants against France and Great Britain. These are still patiently waiting for their Government to protect them in the recovery of their "neutrality" claims. If deemed necessary, the United States Government could discount the bonds and hold them in its Treasury, as it does millions of the bonds of other foreign governments. The United States could also accept reparation dyes, which to some extent, through the Textile Alliance, have already been received. The proceeds of these could appropriately be used to pay American claims. Finally, the most feasible method of payment would be to secure from the German Government, with the unfortunately necessary allied consent, an agreement to pay the United States Government the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission as soon as the German Government comes into funds, whether through a foreign loan raised on the American market or otherwise. This would be the most correct procedure. At all events, the small amount of claims here involved, many of them not legitimate under international law, should not be permitted to tempt us into a violation of the principles of law, morality, and American traditions. It would, indeed, be more profitable in the long run if the United States Government were to appropriate from the United States Treasury the awards made by the Mixed Claims Commission and take in reimbursement long-term German bonds. By so doing we would at least establish the precedent of safeguarding private property, which good judgment dictates as the only one we consistently can adopt.

So, Senators, the proposition is simply this—whether we want to hold the security that we now have until the German Government shall have made some arrangement for the payment of these claims or whether we shall let it go and then have the claims presented to the Government of the United States.

In the House hearings also, at page 120, one of the advocates of this bill explained at great length the method whereby the taxes should be levied and how we will get the money to pay these claims that are going to be saddled on the Government of the United States if this bill shall pass.

The testimony is as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM. Now, then, you say we ought to pay all this money back and you have no doubt some way will be found in international law to get the money to meet claims against them. Will you suggest to the committee how that can be done, in your judgment?

Mr. EWING. I can only give my personal views of it, Mr. Graham.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. EWING. Because I do not know all the details of the complications.

Mr. GRAHAM. Give us a suggestion as to what you think about it.

Mr. EWING. Well, it occurred to me that possibly some arrangement might be made whereby on all imports into the United States from Germany a certain percentage, 1, 2, or 3 per cent, or whatever it might be, could be paid by the purchaser in America to the United States Government, the German firm who had imported these goods being given certificates which would be good in the payment of their taxes to the German Government. In that way this would not have to go through the Reparation Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know how we could possibly do that.

Mr. EWING. It would simply be a question of when the Germans would ship goods to the United States, a certain small percentage of the purchase price would be paid to the United States in exchange for a certificate which would be good in payment of German taxes.

Mr. MERRITT. You would then be collecting the money out of innocent third parties who had no connection at all with the case.

Mr. EWING. They would have their taxes to pay in Germany anyway.
Mr. GRAHAM. You would lay discriminating duties against German exporters, would you?
Mr. EWING. No; I do not think so. I do not think it would affect their export duties at all.
Mr. GRAHAM. If you were representing the United States of America and had nationals of your country who were entitled to payment of valid claims against a government that was bankrupt, practically, and burdened with debts which it never could pay, would you not retain some of the money until your own nationals were satisfied.
Mr. EWING. Not if it violated international law.
Mr. GRAHAM. Not if it violated international law?
Mr. EWING. No, sir. I do not see how you can have international law or how you can have any relations between nations in the broad sense of the word unless each is punctilious in observing its obligations under international law.
Mr. GRAHAM. Was the German Empire punctilious in observing them?
Mr. EWING. No.
Mr. GRAHAM. Were its nationals punctilious in observing international law?
Mr. EWING. Not all of them. Some of them were.
Mr. GRAHAM. Then why should they not pay their debts to Americans who have been injured by their unjust war?
Mr. EWING. They should.
Mr. GRAHAM. But you would turn it all back to them, would you?
Mr. EWING. Absolutely.
Mr. GRAHAM. You would turn everything back?
Mr. EWING. I would, absolutely.

So I think the policy of the bill can not be defended. It has not been defended, and the bill has passed through the House, I think, under a total misunderstanding, on the theory that ample property would be left.

It is said that the custodian has $347,000,000 worth of property in his control, and that this bill involves only $45,000,000. That sounds perfectly good; but what are you going to do with these other claims the amount of which, as I have stated, is not known? It is proposed in this bill to leave those claims where they will descend in due course as a burden upon the people of the United States, and appropriations will have to be made here to take care of them. So I say that the attitude of the Secretary of State has been misunderstood, and the fact as to the amount of this fund and the amount of the claims has been totally misunderstood.

The Senator from Utah stressed one point to which I wish to direct attention for a moment, namely, that the enactment of this law would promote international good feeling. Somehow, I have the idea that our duty just now is to our own people, to our own citizens. It might be promotive of international good feeling; it might be of advantage to the international bankers to just wipe this off, and say, "The Government of the United States assumes all of that," but I do not believe that is wise policy. I believe our first duty is to take care of our people by retaining, not confiscating, this property. Senators roll that word under their tongues as if it were a sweet morsel. It is not proposed to confiscate anything.

I am not unfamiliar with the decision which Chief Justice Marshall made in the Brown case, nor am I unfamiliar with what Alexander Hamilton said upon this question; but they were talking about one thing, and the instant proposition is an entirely different thing. I am contending that we are holding this property not under confiscation but under a right that came to us by the treaty, as it found expression in the Knox resolution, and this fight that is made here to release this property ought to have been made against the Knox resolution. It was then that the question was settled, when the Knox resolution was passed, but we are now proposing to amend that by saying, "Well, we put that in, but we did not mean it."

My contention is that we ought, as trustees, to hold every dollar of this property until we get this thing settled with the German Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not like to let go unchallenged the statement that this question was settled by the Knox resolution. It was not. Everybody recognized at the time the Knox resolution was adopted that that provision put it in the power of the United States, by virtue of a treaty with Germany, to utilize this property to satisfy claims against Germany if it desired to do so. The question as to whether it would eventually do so or not was left for determination. I think nobody can give any other interpretation to the Knox resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, as I said when I rose, I quite understand the situation here. Senators are anxious to get to the consideration of other bills, this being the last day of the session. If there were more time, I should feel disposed to continue this debate at some length, because I have an abundance of material, but I content myself by saying that it seems to me this would establish an exceedingly bad precedent, and if this bill shall pass, there will be in a subsequent Congress another bill, its proponents saying, "Now, let us release other property." Senators who are advocating the idea that we ought not to have held any of this property will become bolder in their views, and ultimately this obligation, for which we now hold a security, will be entirely without any security whatever, and it will become a burden on the American people.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a bill of that character now in the Senate, and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has chosen to report this bill rather than a bill which proposes to return all the property to its owners. This is the choice which Congress makes with regard to those propositions. Therefore it seems to me rather illogical to say that this is but an opening wedge.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, not only is it not illogical but the Senator's statement just made shows the tendency. They have taken first what would appear to be just a little innocuous bill, but along at the same time another bill is pending, and in the next Congress, when we have made 28,000 precedents by the release of this property, it will be said, "Here is some more," and eventually the idea which the Senator so ably advocates will find lodgment in the minds of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. This is the choice which the Judiciary Committee has made as between those propositions.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that, but I am talking about the tendency. I am talking about the precedent this establishes, and contending that it will be followed, undoubtedly, by bills expressing the views of those who think we ought not to retain any of the security.

Just one other word about the treaty. The Senator from Utah said that we are bound by treaty; that we had a treaty some time with Germany, and that we could not do this. Great heavens! Is it possible that this country is bound by any treaty it ever made to pay, for example, the Lusitania claims, or other legitimate claims of American nationals against Germany; that we were bound by those treaties that we made with Germany at a time when Germany was violating every treaty we had ever made with her? Upon what theory shall it be said that the American people are called upon to assume this tremendous burden, because we are bound by a treaty that was made some hundred years ago, and which the other party to the treaty absolutely violated?

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say that because another nation has violated its treaty therefore we are at liberty to violate our part of it?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not. We are not violating any treaty. On the contrary, what I am proposing to do when I say this property shall be held is that we shall act in exact accordance with the terms of the treaty and of the Knox resolution, for which I think the Senator voted. I do not know whether he did or not. If he did not, he ought to have made his fight against this proposition there.

I thank the Senate for its courtesy on such a busy day.

APPENDIX.

JULY 29, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR NELSON: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of July 21, 1922, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 3852) to amend an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, and requesting in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate an expression of my opinion as to the advisability of the legislation contemplated by this measure.

For the purpose of indicating my views regarding the bill it is unnecessary at this time to enter into a detailed discussion of its provisions. I understand that its general purpose is to provide for a commission composed of American citizens which is to pass on certain classes of claims of American citizens, and also on claims of the Government of the United States, for damages sustained as a result of the acts, during periods described in the bill, of either the former German Government or the former Austro-Hungarian Government, or their authorities, respectively.

In addition to the claims of the citizens of the United States the bill embraces provision for claims made by the Government of the United States for "all its pensions or compensation in the nature of pensions to its naval and military victims of war (including members of its air force), whether mutilated, wounded, sick, or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims," also for "the cost of assistance" by the Government of the United States "to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents"; and also for "allowances" by the Government of the United States "to families and dependents of mobilized persons or persons serving with its forces."

Provision is made for the satisfaction of these claims, in accordance with a stated order of priority, out of the property of German and Austrian nationals held by the Alien Property Custodian.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that I am most anxious that a settlement of the claims of American citizens should be promptly effected. You undoubtedly appreciate that, in addition to the difficulties which as a result of political and economic conditions have confronted the nations with which the United States was associated in the war in effecting settlement of claims against former enemy countries, the Government of the United States was obliged to deal with conditions incident to the conclusion of treaties with Germany, Austria, and Hungary to reestablish friendly relations with those nations.

Following the conclusion of such treaties, negotiations were entered into with Germany looking to the adjustment of the claims of our citizens pursuant to the rights of the United States recognized under the treaty concluded August 25, 1921, with that country. It is contemplated that a mixed commission on which Germany will have representation will be established to determine the amounts of these claims in accordance with the procedure usually governing matters of this kind.

I am glad to say that despite the recent difficulties in Germany, which apparently have delayed the completion of the arrangement, gratifying progress has been made, and I believe that a satisfactory convention will shortly be signed. The negotiations with the German Government indicate a desire on its part to move as expeditiously as possible with a view to the consummation of the plans under consideration. It is manifest that legislation such as that contemplated by the bill in question would be embarrassing to the Executive in dealing with the matter of these claims, since the enactment of the bill into law would make it necessary to abandon present plans.

Apart from this effect of the passage of the bill, I may say that it seems to me entirely appropriate that the usual practice should be followed in the determination of international claims, and that Germany should have appropriate representation upon a mixed claims commission by which the amount of these claims shall be assessed. The bill seems to deal with the settlement of claims as if it were purely a domestic affair. But the claims are those of American citizens against Germany, Austria, and Hungary, and it has hitherto been contemplated, as the joint resolution of Congress approved July 2, 1921, makes clear, that these Governments shall make suitable provision for the satisfaction of these claims. But if those Governments are to make such provision, I should regard it as proper that they should have the opportunity of being represented on the claims commission by which the amount of the claims is to be fixed. I do not see that any different principle should be applied because we hold the private property of former enemies in pledge, but this situation, I should suppose, would rather make the course to which I have referred, if possible, still more important before resort were had to such property for satisfaction. To undertake to exclude a nation in a case like the present from any participation or voice in matters thus vitally affecting its interests and to deal with such matters by ex parte action would be, in my judgment, at variance with the principles and practice generally observed by nations in their relations with each other, and I should think it unfortunate if such a course were initiated by this Government.

I do not speak of the situation which would be disclosed if Germany refused to make an arrangement for a commission to act in the assessment of claims in a manner which would be reasonable and satisfactory to our Government. I am, however, speaking of the present situation in which negotiations are pending and where there is every reason to believe that they will shortly be concluded.

I shall not discuss the plan which the bill sets forth of confiscating the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian by providing for its application not only to the payment of the claims of American citizens but also to the claim of this Government for pensions and allowances as described in the bill. While the latter class of claims is to be postponed in payment to the former, all are to be satisfied under the provisions of the bill, and it is manifest that the entire private property of former enemy nationals in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian will not be sufficient for the purposes stated.

Up to this time Congress has not committed itself to a confiscatory policy. In the joint resolution of July 2, 1921, Congress provided that the property should be retained by the United States and no disposition thereof should be made except as had been or might be provided by law until such time as Germany and Austria and Hungary "shall have respectively made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said Governments, respectively," of American citizens who have been damaged through the action of these Governments as stated, and until compliance with the other provisions of the resolution. In other words, so far as the claims of American citizens are concerned, the properties in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, or their proceeds if liquidated, are to be held virtually in pledge until Germany, Austria, and Hungary, respectively, make suitable provisions for the satisfaction of these claims.

As I have said, this implies a fair opportunity to make the required provision. When the amount of these claims has been determined, the question of the satisfaction can be taken up at once, Congress of course reserving its authority to deal with the question in the light of the event. I am of the opinion that this course can be followed quite as expeditiously as the course contemplated by the bill, and I should hope that in any case no measure of confiscation would be adopted until there had been a failure, after reasonable opportunity, to provide for the satisfaction of the claims of American citizens, duly ascertained.

I remain, my dear Senator NELSON,

Very sincerely yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

JULY 26, 1922.

The Hon. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of June 29, 1922, requesting my views regarding a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 364) with regard to the return of property of enemy nationals seized during the war.

I will briefly comment on certain features of the bill which seem to have an international aspect, and therefore to be of particular interest to this department, and also on certain points in the bill which it would appear desirable should be clarified.

The resolution is described as one supplementing the trading with the enemy act. It would seem desirable that it should be made clear with respect to certain provisions of the resolution whether they are supplementary to provisions in the trading with the enemy act, or whether they are amendatory of section 9 of that act.

Section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended, while limiting the classes of persons who may apply for property taken over by the custodian or for the payment of debts therefrom, or who may bring suit in the Federal courts in connection therewith, does not limit the amount for which claim may be made. The joint resolution permits "any person" to file a claim for sequestered property or for the payment of debt claims against such property or to bring suit, but limits the amount of the claim to $10,000. This limitation is probably intended to apply to claimants who are nationals of former enemy countries. It is not clear, however, that it would not also limit claims of Americans and other nonenemy nationals who, in proper cases, should be permitted to file for the full amounts claimed by them.

Paragraph b (6) of section 9 does not permit claims to be filed by foreign partnerships, associations, or other unincorporated concerns or corporations unless the claimant corporation or concern was, at the time the property was taken over "entirely owned" by subjects or citizens of nations, States, or free cities other than Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary, and is so owned at the time of the return of the property. If nationals of former enemy States are to be permitted to file claims in connection with property taken over, it would seem that corporations, partnerships, or other unincorporated concerns owned or controlled by them should also be permitted to file claims within the prescribed amount. However, there appears to be nothing in the joint resolution under consideration to indicate that it is intended to modify paragraph b (6) so as to permit such claims. If such claims are to be permitted, any amendment to the act should, it seems, clearly so indicate.

The effect of paragraphs (c) and (d) of the proposed joint resolution is not entirely clear. Paragraph (d), which is probably aimed at fraudulent transfers or transfers intended to defeat the Alien Property Custodian's rights, is sufficiently broad to prevent the release of property acquired by a nonenemy from a person who was technically an enemy within the meaning of the law at the time the property was taken over, but who is an American or a national of a neutral or cobelligerent State, or an enemy national who has acquired a new nationality in pursuance of the treaties of peace. If former enemy nationals are to be permitted to obtain the return of a portion of their property it would appear that persons of nonenemy nationality to whom such property may have been transferred since being taken over by the custodian should similarly be permitted to file claims. It would also seem that in a case in which subsequent to the taking over of property by the custodian the owner died, the person entitled to such property, either under a will or in pursuance of law, should be permitted to file a claim for such property. Paragraph (c) may be intended to accord this right, but it does not appear to be sufficiently clearly worded for that purpose.

Section 9 (e) of the trading with the enemy act provides as follows:

"No money or other property shall be returned, nor any debt allowed, under this section to any person who is a citizen or subject of any nation which was associated with the United States in the prosecution of the war, unless such nation in like case extends reciprocal rights to citizens of the United States; nor in any event shall a debt be allowed under this section unless it was owing to and owned by the claimant prior to October 6, 1917, and as to claimants other than citizens of the United States unless it arose with reference to the money or other property held by the Alien Property Custodian or Treasurer of the United States hereunder."

The proposed joint resolution does not require the reciprocal treatment described in the above-quoted provisions, nor does it limit debt claims of aliens to debts arising with respect to the property taken over. The department understands that at the present time Great Britain and other Governments associated with the United States in the war do not allow the payment of unsecured debts to Americans from the property of German, Austrian, or Hungarian creditors taken over by such Governments, even in the case where the debt arose with reference to such property.

Unless paragraph (e) of section 9 continues in force, a national of a State associated with the United States in the war could apparently file a claim for the return of property taken over, notwithstanding that his Government would not in a similar case allow the claim of an American citizen, and any alien could file a claim for a debt owed to him by a national of a former enemy State whose property was taken over by the custodian, although such debt did not arise with reference to the property taken over. It would, therefore, seem desirable that any amendment to the act should be so drafted as clearly to show that section (e) is continued in force.

The treaties concluded with Germany, Austria, and Hungary to reestablish friendly relations with those nations contain provisions securing to the United States all the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, and advantages specified in the joint resolution of Congress of July 2, 1921, declaring the state of war terminated, including all rights and advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaties of Versailles, St. Germain-en-Laye, and Trianon. The resolution of July 2, 1921, provided that sequestered property should be retained by the United States until such time as the enemy Governments made suitable provision for the settlement of claims growing out of the war. Under the last-mentioned treaties this Government has also the right to apply the proceeds of sequestered property to the payment at the prewar rate of exchange of debts of German nationals and certain public debts owed to American citizens. It is understood that this bill has been introduced upon the assumption that it would require the return of a relatively small amount of property and that the security for the settlement of American claims would not be substantially impaired. Unless this were the fact, I could not approve this bill even though amended as above suggested. I assume that the committee will be fully advised upon this fundamental point.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

OCTOBER 27, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. WINSLOW: I beg to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the White House, of a copy of the proposed resolution which you submitted to the Alien Property Custodian, authorizing the President to return to the Government of the Republic of Austria and the Government of the Republic of Hungary and the citizens and subjects thereof, property seized by the Alien Property Custodian.

Third clause of the preamble of the proposed joint resolution states that the Republic of Austria and the Republic of Hungary have fully restored to citizens and subjects of the United States all moneys and properties seized during the World War. This statement might readily be misleading for the reason that the department was informed by the Austrian Department for Foreign Affairs on April 29, 1920, that the property of American citizens was not sequestered or detained in any form whatever in Austria; that all laws pertaining to enemy property in Austria-Hungary were promulgated in 1914–1916 and did not affect the property of American citizens; and that after a state of war was declared to exist by the joint resolution of Congress approved December 7, 1917, between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government no special laws were promulgated against American interests with the exception of some regulations which affected certain American insurance companies.

In so far as shown by the records of the department, 61 claims have been filed by American citizens against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government for compensation for losses resulting from the torpedoing of vessels by submarines of that Government, for military requisitions made by that Government, and for damage or injury to persons and property. The total amount of these claims is approximately $13,043,913.

In addition to the foregoing claims filed with the department against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, it is not unlikely that many of the claims of American citizens filed with the department against the Government of Germany may upon investigation be found to be claims for losses for which the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government should be responsible. This possibility arises from the fact that claims for losses resulting from submarine warfare have been filed against Germany in cases where the Government responsible for the act has not been determined.

The treaties concluded with Austria and Hungary to reestablish friendly relations with those nations contain provisions securing to the United States all the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, and advantages specified in the joint resolution of Congress of July 2, 1921, declaring the state of war terminated, including all rights and advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaties of Versailles, Saint Germain-en-Laye, and Trianon. The resolution of July 2, 1921, provided, among other things, that sequestered property should be retained by the United States until such time as the enemy Governments made suitable provision for the settlement of claims growing out of the war.

It appears that the proposed bill is based upon the assumption that the claims of American citizens against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government for losses suffered by reason of the acts of that Government or its agents have been suitably settled or that no such claims ever existed. As seen from the foregoing, this assumption is incorrect.

I am, my dear Mr. WINSLOW,
Very sincerely yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DECEMBER 21, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. WINSLOW: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 18, 1922, in which you inform me that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House will on Thursday, December 21, commence hearings on House Joint Resolution No. 364, providing for the return of enemy property, and state that if this department is interested in the bill the committee will be pleased to have a representative appear and make such presentation of the matter as may be desired.

In reply your attention is invited to my letter of July 26 last in response to your communication of June 29, with which you transmitted a copy of the bill. In this letter, after commenting on certain provisions of the bill which I deemed should be clarified, I called attention to the fact that the treaties concluded with Germany, Austria, and Hungary to reestablish friendly relations with those nations contained provisions securing to the United States not only all the rights and advantages stipulated for its benefit in the treaties of Versailles, St. Germain-en-Laye, and Trianon, but also those specified in the joint resolution of Congress of July 2, 1921, declaring the state of war terminated, which resolution provided that sequestered property should be retained by the United States until such time as the enemy governments made suitable provisions for the settlement of claims growing out of the war, and I added:

"It is understood that this bill has been introduced upon the assumption that it would require the return of a relatively small amount of property and that the security for the settlement of American claims would not be substantially impaired. Unless this were the fact, I could not approve this bill even though amended as above suggested. I assume that the committee will be fully advised upon this fundamental point."

Suitable provision has not yet been made for the settlement of American claims, and my letter of July 26 adequately sets forth my present views with regard to the bill. I do not, therefore, deem it necessary to submit any additional statements in the matter.

I am, my dear Mr. WINSLOW,
Very sincerely yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

PAYMENTS TO NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE OFFICERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 14077, and will move its adoption, if I may have consent.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 8, 9, and renumber section 9, section 5; and section 10, section 6; and agree to the same.

J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
D. A. REED,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRANK L. GREENE,
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CUMMINS. Only upon condition that there be no debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Senate is entitled to know what is being done. I do not think there is any disposition to debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will take me about one minute to describe the report.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator ought to give the substance of the conference report.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for that purpose, but I do not intend that the consideration of the pending bill shall be interrupted by the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. This is a conference report, and, of course, if the Senator yields for the consideration of a conference report, he must in fairness permit the Senate to know what the conference report contains.

Mr. CUMMINS. I recognize that, and I have so intimated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This conference report has to do with House bill 14077, which the Senate passed upon yesterday with eight or nine amendments. I explained the bill on the floor of the Senate yesterday.

In conference to-day the Senate conferees have receded from four of the Senate amendments, and the House conferees have receded in favor of four of the Senate amendments, if I may put it that way. The amendments from which the Senate conferees receded are those which related to longevity pay of National Guard officers; the pay of special ratings to enlisted men of the National Guard; the drill pay of enlisted men of the National Guard in the event they are enlisted in the middle of a calendar month; and we also have receded from that section which provides that officers of the National Guard shall have the same number of drills per month enlisted men have, the House conferees thinking that was a controversial subject, and permitting the assembling of the units of the National Guard to be deemed such, if the units assemble as platoons or squads. We have receded from those four amendments.

The House has acceded to our amendment validating payments heretofore made in certain instances and which were always deemed legal, and which were almost impossible of collection, the amounts being exceedingly small. The House has also acceded to an amendment of the Senate which provides that the Federal Government may give hospital care and treatment to a National Guard soldier who is injured at maneuvers of the National Guard.

I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I said several days ago, in speaking on the shipping bill, that one nation on earth would be very happy if the ship subsidy bill should fail, and I predicted it would be Great Britain. I hold in my hand an article from the New York Herald headed "British glad ship subsidy has failed." I ask that it be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks, in 8-point type, without reading.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[From the New York Herald, March 2, 1923.]

BRITISH GLAD SHIP SUBSIDY HAS FAILED—ASSERT IT WOULD HAVE LED TO TARIFF WAR BY FOREIGN POWERS.

[Special cable to the New York Herald. Copyright, 1923, by the New York Herald.]

NEW YORK HERALD BUREAU.

LONDON, March 1.—British shipping interests view with unalloyed satisfaction the death of the ship subsidy bill in the American Congress. According to one of the most influential authorities in the shipping world, a subsidized American merchant marine undoubtedly would lead to the leveling of retaliatory tariff duties against American shipping by some foreign powers.

The editor of the Shipping World said to-day: "Private interests dislike facing rivals backed by the taxpayers. Foreign nations have not relished the idea of America barring their products with a high tariff, at the same time trying to carry its own goods and maintaining a big merchant marine."

LONDON, March 1 (Associated Press).—In commenting on the death of the American ship subsidy bill London newspapers find that the moral in the United States' experiment is "the futility of any government's attempting to create an industry artificially or to nationalize an industry."

The Telegraph, recalling gratefully the circumstances under which the American merchant fleet was built, deprecates the idea that Great Britain should view with satisfaction the collapse of the attempt at subsidization, and adds: "The experiment failed, as all State ventures in shipping either have failed or are failing. A bureaucracy, irrespective of nationality, does not understand business. If any people could have succeeded, the Americans with their acumen and commercial keenness would have done so."

The Chronicle, on the other hand, exults and says under the headline "America's dream of ocean supremacy shattered by Britain": "The dream was shattered finally by the American taxpayer, but its true causes of failure were economic. America could not build ships as cheaply as we do or as well. Neither could it run them or man them as we do. Washington made somewhat the same mistake with shipping that Moscow made with industries. Thus ends in catastrophe the vastest and most futile attempt in history to create artificially a new industry. A new chapter now opens for the British mercantile marine."

The Times says business men throughout the world welcome the death of the bill, because it marks a definite turning point in the attitude of the American people toward State intervention in commerce and removes a possibility of especially favoring nationally owned ships in American ports, to which in last resort other nations would have retaliated in their own ports.

"Thus," the Times continues, "commerce instead of following smoothly would have become temporarily an affair of watertight compartments—some closed and others half open. It will now be easier for the United States to continue to sell her vast surplus products, since one of the chief means of paying for them, namely, sharing in the transport services, will still be open to the competition of all the maritime nations of the world."

REMOVALS FROM THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall be exceedingly brief. Because of the crowded condition of the calendar, most of the things I wish to go in the RECORD I shall put in without reading. The matter I wish to discuss, and that very briefly, is the report sent to the Senate by the President of the United States dealing with the investigation had in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Coming, as it did, at the very last minute of the Congress, and by implication making a charge against the dismissed director and the 27 chiefs of bureaus, I wish to put in the RECORD first the statement circulated in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by the director, Louis A. Hill, seeking to organize all the employees into a Republican club, and have them pay dues. The substance of this statement has been read into the RECORD, and, without objection, I merely wish to have the full statement printed. The exhibit I shall call No. 1 is a photostatic copy of the first page of the pledge that was circulated, and the one which I shall number 2 is the back of that. They were printed on the face and back. They constitute the application.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPUBLICAN STATE VOTERS ASSOCIATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP.

ARTICLE II OF THE CONSTITUTION.

MEMBERSHIP.

[Definition of classes.]

SEC. 2. That membership of this association shall be of five classes: Active, registered, sustaining, contributing, and honorary.

SEC. 3. Active members in this association shall have the right to vote and a voice in its management and such other privileges and benefits as prescribed by this constitution.

SEC. 4. Registered members of this association, both sustaining and contributory, who are in the classified service, shall take no active part in the management of the association or of its partisan objects, but will otherwise enjoy the privileges and benefits of the association as prescribed in its constitution.

SEC. 5. Sustaining members in this association shall be those active or registered members who pay voluntarily such dues as are hereinafter prescribed by this constitution.

SEC. 6. Contributing members in this association shall be those active or registered members who voluntarily subscribe any sum in excess of $20,000 biennially to the association.

SEC. 8. Applications for membership shall be made to the association, setting forth that the applicant is a Republican, the legal residence, Washington address, and character and place of official or business employment. Application shall be referred to the membership committee of the association, whose report thereon shall be submitted to the executive committee and acted upon at its next regular meeting unless otherwise determined by a majority vote of those present.

ARTICLE IV OF THE CONSTITUTION.

DUES.

SECTION 1. The annual dues for active membership shall be $3.

SEC. 2. The annual dues for registered membership shall be $2.

SEC. 3. The annual dues for Class A—Sustaining membership, shall be $10. The annual dues for Class B—Sustaining membership, shall be $5.

SEC. 4. The fiscal year of this association shall begin on the 1st day of July.

SEC. 5. All dues are payable from July 1, annually, in advance, unless otherwise provided for by the executive committee for the period prior to July 1, 1923.

SEC. 6. Payment of membership dues, as hereinbefore prescribed, satisfies obligations to this association, and no increase of dues nor assessments for any purpose shall be made during the period for which membership dues have been paid in advance. No form of coercion shall be used in obtaining or maintaining membership.

Mr. CARAWAY. Each employee was solicited to become a member of a Republican club, and to contribute to a Republican fund, and each one who would sign was to be recommended as a man entirely worthy to be a member of a Republican club by Mr. Hill, who signed the recommendation, it would seem, in advance of the applicant signing. In other words, the application is circulated and the applicant, whoever he may be—black or white, old or young, no matter who he is—is recommended if he pays his fee.

They organized, and their first meeting was had on the 23d of February. I find that Mr. Louis A. Hill was on the reception committee. The President of the United States, who seems to have been invited, but had some prior engagement and could not attend this auspicious opening of a campaign financed by Government workers on the solicitation and suggestion of their chief, who has the power of removing them if they do not contribute, wrote a letter which I want to read, because it is remarkable:

I have had my attention called to the fact that the Republican State Voters' Association of the District of Columbia is to meet this evening for the purpose, as I understand, of making a preliminary program for the year's work. It is always a pleasure to express my hearty appreciation of the effort of this organization. American citizens who chance to be residents of the District of Columbia have need to be inspired by a considerably greater measure of patriotism and civic interest than is required of other citizens if they would exercise their suffrage privileges, for they must keep up their voting citizenship in some other community and go to more or less trouble and expense at election time if they would exercise their suffrage. Consequently I always feel that a somewhat special consideration—is due to those citizens in the District who maintain organizations and keep alive the interest in practical political activities.

Now, what may be covered under the words "practical politics" I believe is rather well comprehended. Practical politics was, of course, what put Mr. Hill and his people in charge of the bureau. Practical politics was what made him require these people to become contributors to a Republican campaign fund. Practical politics, therefore, was the subject of the President's letter of congratulation.

Now, Mr. President, under "practical politics" they got in control, and here is one of the results of practical politics. I have in my hand a ticket, and I have the name of the man who bought it and of the man who sold it, that I shall be glad to let any Senator see who may wish so to do. Bookmaking is going on in the bureau. A man bought a Dixie Turf Association $2 coupon for the week ending February 10, 1923, with possibilities of winning $400, more or less, and of course less. It is true that it is a felony to be a bookmaker in the District of Columbia, but where we have practical politics to organize a bureau practical results are to be expected and some privileges must be extended. I ask unanimous consent to have the ticket printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The ticket is as follows:

DIXIE TURF ASSOCIATION $2 COUPON FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 10, 1923.

The holder of this coupon is entitled to a voice in the free distribution of $2,000 worth of donations, given to subscribers holding the code to races and horses at the New Orleans track that have the highest percentage of winning plays on a $2 wager as furnished by the code on this coupon.

Five races each week. One horse each day—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday.

The most given away will be $400 on a $2 coupon and $200 on a $1 coupon. The least will be $10 and $5, respectively. See list and instructions on back of this coupon. Your money wired you every Tuesday at 10 a. m., free of charge.

Day.	Name of horse.	Won.	High.	Code.	Place No.	Horse No.
Monday
Tuesday
Wednesday
Thursday
Friday

	Amounts.
	$2.	$1.
Each week:
The highest will receive	$400.00	$200.00
Next highest will receive	300.00	150.00
Next highest will receive	200.00	100.00
Next highest will receive	100.00	50.00
Next 10 highest will receive	50.00	25.00
Next 50 highest will receive	10.00	5.00

INSTRUCTIONS.

In the number space under each day of the week are given the number of the race allotted to you and the number of your horse in that race. To secure the name of your horse each day you will have to get the New York Morning Telegraph, turn to the New Orleans handicap entries for that day, and number the horses consecutively, starting with the first horse in the race allotted to you. If your horse is No. 5 and race No. 3 on Monday, the horse you are playing would be the fifth horse in the third race as handicapped in the Morning Telegraph on that day.

If there are less than four horses in the race allotted to you and you have No. 4, 5, or 6; or, if your horse is scratched, then the first horse in handicap that starts is the one you are betting on. Thus you have a horse running each of the five days of the week.

Insert the name of your horse each day in the score on front page, and if it wins insert in column "won" the amount paid on a $2 wager as shown by closing odds in the Morning Telegraph.

DIXIE TURF ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CARAWAY. Another example of "practical politics" is as follows: A gentleman in the bureau who has charge of—or, at least, very considerable influence in—the appointment and dismissal of employees made out a list. I do not know how many Senators have had it submitted to them; I do not know how many Members of the House have had it submitted to them. I have talked to one Member, at least. In his list was contained the name of every employee in the bureau coming from his district. He was asked which of these he wanted retained and which he would like to have dismissed in case of a reduction in force. So that practical politics is to permit a politician, the Member of the House or the Senate, as the case may be, to reorganize at his pleasure the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, so long, of course, as he permitted the "practical" politician to remain in control of the bureau.

I have also copies of letters. Merely to protect the Members to whom the letters were written, I shall erase the name, but I wish to submit one of the letters to be printed in the RECORD. It is a notice by the director of the bureau that he has made engraved portraits of all the Presidents, and is inclosing to the Member a copy of each, with two large engravings of President Harding, made, of course, at public expense. But it is "practical politics," and I know of no reason why it should not be done. The organization was for "practical political" results.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD the letter to which he has just referred?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. ———: In compliance with your request, I take pleasure in handing you a set of engraved portraits of the Presidents of the United States and two large engravings of President Harding, which I trust will meet with your approval.

Very truly yours,

——— ———, Director.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall hurry because I want to yield to those who are anxious to discuss the bill before the Senate.

I have the report furnished the Senate under date of February 28 by the President. I propose to discuss it briefly. It is assumed that it is the President's answer to the charge that he removed the director and 27 chiefs of bureaus without justification. With this letter of the President is transmitted a report made by a committee acting under the Secretary of the Treasury and another by a committee under the appointment of or within, at least, the Department of Justice, calling attention to some discrepancies and some possible losses in the bureau. But I particularly want to direct attention to the report made by the committee appointed under the Secretary of the Treasury. That was commendatory. It reached the President a few days before he issued his Executive order. The report made by the Department of Justice was somewhat critical, but did not reach the President for a week after he had issued his Executive order. Therefore the report transmitted, which, as I presume, is to be the President's defense, was not in the hands of the President when the order was issued and therefore could not have been the basis for the order. Anyway, let me read some of the report that he did have at hand. I read from page 2, as follows:

In this connection it is proper to state that during the period covered by the reports, from March 31, 1917, to April 8, 1922, there were 1,056,794,721 sheets of distinctive paper issued to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, against which there appears to be a net shortage of only 860¾ sheets.

That is the language there, that "there appears to be only," which is commendatory and not critical. They had nearly 1,500,000,000 sheets of paper and only lost 860¾ sheets.

Referring to the currency the report said:

The bureau handled 973,659,745 sheets of money paper from April 1, 1917, to April 8, 1922, during which period there was a net loss of 350¾ sheets.

With respect to the differences, it is impossible to say what proportion of the differences is due to theft and what to error. In any case, they should not be allowed to run indefinitely but should be promptly cleared off the records by proper adjustments.

I read further:

Attention may be called to the fact that in handling 97,081,320 sheets of Liberty loan bond paper, covering a period of three years and during which the plant was in continuous operation, with the corridors stacked with sheets, there is a proven loss of but 113¾ sheets and no more.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire from what report the Senator is reading?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am reading a letter from the Treasury Department, Bureau of the Budget, Washington, D. C., February 28, 1923, reporting on the investigation had by the Treasury Department of the alleged irregularities which occurred in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think the report was in reality a very highly commendatory report of the management of the office.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is filled with gratification at the results of the investigation. I read again:

Attention may be called to the fact that in handling 97,081,320 sheets of Liberty loan bond paper, covering a period of three years and during which the plant was in continuous operation, with the corridors stacked with sheets, there is a proven loss of but 113¾ sheets and no more.

That is a commendation and not a criticism, and yet that is the report touching which the President is alleged to have acted when he removed the director of the bureau and 27 chiefs.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the President ever given a reason why he discharged those men, except the technical reason that it was for the good of the service?

Mr. CARAWAY. That is all, but by transmitting this report at the very last day of the Congress it is intended to be a blanket indictment. And the estimate for $100,000 to cover possible shortages—not proven shortages but possible shortages—is the charge by implication, and so meant to be.

I have in my hand and I shall read, because it will take but a moment, a report from the former director, Mr. James L. Wilmeth, bearing date of yesterday, in which he said:

When I took charge of the bureau in December, 1917, there existed a shortage of $24,500 in war saving stamp account. This is a part of the shortage now reported. I requested the Treasury Department to appoint a committee to check up the bureau in 1920 after the great war rush had abated to some extent. The department did appoint such a committee, and Thomas Collins was chairman. His committee reported after a long and careful checking and found the $24,500 shortage to which reference is made above. The committee found losses in all amounting to about $55,000, including the $24,500. Most of the difference was covered by thefts and losses occurring over a period of years. All this was reported to the Treasury Department. This committee check that I requested was the first checking of the bureau by a Treasury committee for a period of 15 years.

Employees who had yielded to temptation and stolen unfinished currency were apprehended and brought to trial by secret-service operatives and six or seven of them convicted. Every loss, however small, was promptly investigated by secret-service men and reports submitted to the department. There was a loss of about $10,000 in currency that arose between the numbering division and the custodian of paper on its way to be destroyed. The numbering division claimed it sent the mutilated notes and the custodian claimed he never received them. Outside of the war-savings stamp loss of $24,500, occurring before my term, and the disputed loss of $10,000 mutilated, there was an actual loss of about $20,000 from theft during my term. Considering that the yearly value of securities finished was $25,000,000,000, or $100,000,000,000 during my more than four years' term, the losses are insignificant and infinitesimal. Besides, the guilty parties have been brought to justice by the Secret Service, who investigated each and every loss and theft and made report of the same to the Treasury Department.

JAMES L. WILMETH.

MARCH 2, 1923.

Mr. President, here is a letter urging me to try to influence the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to give these discharged people an investigation. That committee, for reasons that all now understand, refused this request. This letter I shall not read in full, because I do not want to interrupt the business of the Senate further, but shall call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the man who wrote the letter, Mr. George C. Cole, was an ousted chief of a division and had had charge of the numbering of bonds. He had been engaged in private business in the District of Columbia. He had a business that was prosperous. The Government when war came asked him, at a sacrifice to himself, but from a patriotic motive, to close his own business and take charge of the bond division in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He did so at a very great loss. It is undisputed that he saved the Government millions of dollars by the devices that he installed. There never was a charge of any kind against him, but he was dismissed and disgraced. He has stood ready for a year to answer any accusation and has pleaded at the door of the White House for a reason for the action taken against him. He has knocked at the committee room door here in the Senate for an investigation. He is willing to submit all the proof, and if he does not convince everybody that he was not only honest but efficient is willing to accept any punishment the committee may devise, and yet willing himself to carry the burden and expense of the investigation in order that he may vindicate his own reputation the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has refused to permit him to be heard. I shall read the closing paragraph of his communication:

Senator CARAWAY, I never sought a position in the bureau. The officials of that institution urged me to come. They told me it was my patriotic duty to come in and help get out the bond issues, and you are privileged to investigate this statement, and you will find also from others that it is a fact that I made good. Senator, after the officials told me how urgently the services of a pressroom executive were needed I gave up an established business of my own and went to the bureau, thinking it was my duty, only to be kicked out like a dog after putting over the biggest, most successful, accurate bond-numbering proposition ever tackled by the Government in the history of printing. If you will investigate you will find that I inaugurated systems for numbering and serial lettering bonds in a manner that saved millions and millions of operations, resulting in a saving to the Government of a fabulous sum of money. I only pray and hope that the Supreme Architect of the universe will assist the President and you gentlemen of Congress in bringing out all the facts concerning each and every official dismissed by the Executive order of March 31, 1922, furnishing a report that all of the people may know the truth, and at the same time investigate our successors and publish the truth about them. I am ready to appear at any time before the President, Secretary Mellon, any Senator or Congressman, or investigating committee, and can assure you that with just half a chance I can prove that I was efficient, honorable, and upright in all my dealings. Should I fail to convince the most skeptical I will gladly submit to the most scathing denunciation by the person or persons that give me a chance to be heard. Senator, if we have been cleared of the charges submitted against us without even an opportunity to furnish a little helpful explanation when some perplexing question arose, what would have happened if we had been afforded just half a chance to protect ourselves by answering questions or producing evidence or having witnesses called in our behalf; or suppose, for instance, that we had been accorded the same privilege that the average criminal is accorded, that of having an attorney, what then would have occurred? When you stop to think that we have been on trial, or under investigation, for 10 months without even a chance to defend ourselves, it seems impossible that such a thing could happen in this land of the free, where justice and a square deal have been preached since the time of Washington.

Mr. President, let me say this: That is the most scathing indictment, I think, of a government that I have ever read. Here is a citizen who, for patriotic reasons, gave up his private employment, in which he could have grown rich, as I have been told by people who claim to know, and entered the service of his country when war came, who successfully managed the governmental business intrusted to him, but was then discharged under a cloud, and although for months he has begged merely for the opportunity to be investigated, merely for the opportunity to answer questions, not stipulating what the questions shall be or who the propounder of the questions shall be, yet he is denied that opportunity in free America by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The same committee permitted men who wanted to besmirch his character to be heard, but denied men against whom, by inference, charges had been made to be heard, and the committee give as a reason for such action, "It would be a serious thing to investigate the President of the United States." I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the entire letter from Mr. Cole.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,

United States Senator from Arkansas, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have followed with interest the developments brought to light recently in regard to the Executive order issued March 31, 1922, by which 28 bureau officials were separated from the service. I was particularly interested in the President's statement of January 25, relative to the great number of bonds that were duplicated, and how it had greatly upset the officials of the Government. Like the evidence that was furnished to the President when he was misinformed to the extent that he felt it necessary to dismiss us without warning and without a hearing of any kind, he has no doubt again been imposed upon by the same ruthless crowd, and led to believe that there was reckless duplication in the production of bonds. Every printer in business allows a certain percentage for spoilage on every job printed, not only in commercial printing houses but in the Government Printing Office. I grant that there was spoilage in the bureau on bonds, due to defective numbering machines, accidents, or oversight on the part of some individual.

Senator, do you think it would be possible to assemble a form of intricate, delicate numbering machines that depend upon fine springs, ratchets, and cams for accuracy, to be whirled along on a press producing from 1,000 to 6,000 or more bonds per hear, and never go wrong? That would be a physical and mechanical impossibility. If you will investigate this matter, you will find that the surface division's actual percentage spoiled while Mr. Wilmeth was director was the lowest in the history of that institution and that the percentage of bonds spoiled by defective numbering amounted to less than the spoilage allowance of a commercial printing office.

It is strange how some one has the audacity to furnish the President of the United States with unreliable information. If he wants the truth about the spoilage that took place prior to his Executive order of March 31, 1922, why don't he call the officials that were in charge of the bureau and cross-examine them. They could really enlighten him.

I do not regret being out of the Government service if the method of separating us from the service is indicative of what one may expect, if some irresponsible crowd can get to the President of the United States with wild stories, and have him separate you from Government service without warning, and without a hearing or even a chance to appear before some investigating committee or official to submit your side of the case. I challenge any individual to show one instance of spoilage or duplication of numbers on securities that was not properly accounted for while I was chief of the surface division. I can prove that production and accuracy was greater and the percentage of spoilage the lowest in the history of the bureau, if given an opportunity and permitted to call witnesses.

Senator CARAWAY, I never sought a position in the bureau. The officials of that institution urged me to come. They told me it was my patriotic duty to come in and help get out the bond issues; and you are privileged to investigate this statement, and you will find also from others that it is a fact that I made good. Senator, after the officials told me how urgently the services of a pressroom executive were needed I gave up an established business of my own and went to the bureau, thinking it was my duty, only to be kicked out like a dog after putting over the biggest, most successful, accurate bond-numbering proposition ever tackled by the Government in the history of printing. If you will investigate, you will find that I inaugurated systems for numbering and serial lettering bonds in a manner that saved millions and millions of operations, resulting in a saving to the Government of a fabulous sum of money. I only pray and hope that the Supreme Architect of the Universe will assist the President and you gentlemen of Congress in bringing out all the facts concerning each and every official dismissed by the Executive order of March 31, 1922, furnishing a report that all of the people may know the truth, and at the same time investigate our successors and publish the truth about them. I am ready to appear at any time before the President, Secretary Mellon, any Senator or Congressman, or investigating committee, and can assure you that with just half a chance I can prove that I was efficient, honorable, and upright in all my dealings. Should I fail to convince the most skeptical, I will gladly submit to the most scathing denunciation by the person or persons that give me a chance to be heard. Senator, if we have been cleared of the charges submitted against us, without even an opportunity to furnish a little helpful explanation when some perplexing question arose, what would have happened if we had been afforded just half a chance to protect ourselves by answering questions or producing evidence or having witnesses called in our behalf; or suppose, for instance, that we had been accorded the same privilege that the average criminal is accorded, that of having an attorney, what, then, would have occurred? When you stop to think that we have been on trial, or under investigation, for 10 months, without even a chance to defend ourselves, it seems impossible that such a thing could happen in this land of the free, where justice and a square deal have been preached since the time of Washington.

Thanking you and every other person that has stood up for right and truth, "which must prevail," I am,
Gratefully and sincerely,

GEORGE C. COLE,
Ousted Chief of Surface Presswork Division,
Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

P. S.—I was appointed to the Government service from Detroit, Mich., by the United States Civil Service Commission in 1908.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I became very much interested in the matter which has just been discussed by the Senator from Arkansas, as I think every other citizen ought to be. I became convinced that a great injustice had been done to these men, and that even though they were criminals they ought to have had their day in court.

Mr. CARAWAY. If they had been indicted they would have been entitled to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I never could understand why it was that the committee of the Senate pigeonholed the Senator's resolution proposing an investigation, in the face of what I believe is conceded to be the truth in regard to these men.

Mr. CARAWAY. I answer the Senator's question; the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], sitting at the back of the Chamber, said, "It would be a serious thing to investigate the President." That is the answer.

INTERNATIONAL COURT.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a short time back the Senate refused to consider the resolution introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] providing for the participation of the United States in the Permanent Court of International Justice. I voted against the immediate consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Utah, but in so voting I want it to be clearly understood that, so far as my personal view is concerned, from the information at hand, from the message of the President of the United States, supplemented by the information contained in the letter of the Secretary of State, I believe, with proper reservations, America's participation in that court will be a very wise and proper procedure. I voted, however, against the motion immediately to consider the resolution for the very obvious reason, it seems to me, that it would have been impossible to have disposed of the question in the few remaining hours of the present session of Congress. We have on the calendar, as has been said, a number of important House bills which have been passed by the House of Representatives and which we can probably dispose of, and I think it is our duty, in order to expedite important business so far as possible, to endeavor to clear the calendar of such bills.

It was plainly evident, it seems to me at least, that the debate which would naturally follow if the resolution had been considered at this time would perhaps have made it impossible to have reached a vote and therefore we would neither have cleared or partially cleared the calendar nor arrived at a decision on the very important matter involved in the resolution.

I simply make these observations because I do not want my vote to be interpreted as opposing our participation in the important functions of this court, which, as I understand it, would in no way involve us in the commitments of the League of Nations.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the resolution proposing that the Senate approve the adherence of the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, put forth by the League of Nations, for the approval and consent of the signatories of the Versailles treaty, providing for a Permanent Court of International Justice, established under a "statute" enacted by the council and assembly of the League of Nations, or, in other words, that the United States submit itself to the jurisdiction of the court so established, advised by the President in his special message to the Senate, was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], February 26, 1923, and lay upon the table by the request of the Senator until it was suddenly called up by him and a motion made to proceed to its consideration without any opportunity for Senators to debate it.

The resolution was never referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, having jurisdiction of such matters, for a report, as is usual in all important resolutions, and has not been debated in the Senate. The Senator himself has made no statement concerning the merits of his resolution or the great obligation to which he proposes to commit the United States. The resolution was called up only a few hours before the Congress would adjourn under the provisions of the Constitution, and there was not only no time for its discussion but if it had been taken up it would have consumed the remainder of the session and have defeated the consideration of many important measures that should be passed. Without regard to the merits of the resolution, I would have voted against it, as I did, for these reasons.

Mr. President, the resolution was not prepared with the usual clearness we always expect in any measure proposed by the able and distinguished Senator from Utah; and, coming from him, its meagerness and contradictory and antagonistic provisions must challenge the attention of everyone.

The first paragraph of the resolution broadly proposes that the United States adhere to the protocol, which is an agreement to submit controversies it may have with other nations to the adjudication of the proposed court without exceptions or limitations. The second paragraph provides "that such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the covenant of the League of Nations, constituting part of the treaty of Versailles." But the succeeding paragraphs expressly provide that the United States shall participate upon an equality with all other States members of the league in all proceedings of the council or assembly of the league for the election of judges or deputy judges and the filling of vacancies, and that the United States shall have a voice in all proposed amendments to the statute creating the court, and no amendment shall be made without its consent. It is also stipulated that the United States shall pay a fair share of the expenses of the court.

While there is a provision that the United States shall bear no legal relation to the League of Nations and assume no obligations under its covenant, yet it is stipulated that it shall participate in elections of judges, proceedings for the amendment of the statute creating the court, thus directly providing that the United States shall be represented in the council and assembly of the league in most important and vital matters, involving the highest legal relations, which are necessarily extended by the provisions of the statute and protocol applicable to all nations submitting to the jurisdiction of the court. It is impossible that a nation can be in part a member of the league, participate in its deliberations and be bound by them, and not have legal relations with it. This is obvious to everyone and needs no elaboration. I do not propose to revive the discussion of the League of Nations or the propriety of our becoming either a limited or full member of that organization. Those questions are not now before the Senate or the country. The stipulation that we shall participate in the election of judges means nothing, for the 15 judges and deputy judges were elected nearly a year ago for the term of nine years, and the court was fully organized and held its first session in June, 1922.

There is no stipulation in the resolution excluding from the consideration of the court all questions of vital interest, independence, and national honor, which have always been reserved in arbitration agreements and arbitration treaties which the United States has made in the past. No self-respecting nation can submit to arbitration or to the adjudication of any court, especially a foreign one, any question vital to its existence, affecting its independence as a sovereign nationality or involving the honor of its people and its government.

Mr. President, I have always favored a great international court or tribunal, composed of great lawyers, learned and experienced in law and judicature, for the determination of justiciable questions, involved in controversies between the civilized nations of the world, proceeding and governed by the principles of righteousness and justice, as declared in the recognized rules and precedents of accepted international law.

I have also thought that conferences of nations, held with the approval of nations having controversies that would probably lead to war for their amicable and just settlement, could do much to avert war and preserve peace, and I have favored such conferences.

I announced these views in an address I made in the Senate on November 19, 1919, when the League of Nations was under discussion, and they appear in the record of the proceedings of that day. I then said the policy advised by Washington in his Farewell Address to the American people does not mean isolation as asserted by the advocates of the league, but freedom and independence. Isolation is such a complete detachment from the world as would make us a hermit Nation, but independence is freedom from entanglements by artificial ties which impair our freedom of action. It does not interfere with American playing a great part in the affairs of the world as she always has done, but only forbids entangling alliances which for all future time mortgage the judgment and commit the destinies of the American people not according to their will but according to the will of a supergovernment. The United States has always favored liberty, peace, and honorable relations among nations, and it can and will continue that course in the future without being bonded or coerced by foreign nations. Alliances are not necessary to make an honorable nation discharge its just and righteous international obligations.

I further said that I believed in peace and hated war and the horrible suffering that it brings to mankind; that I would favor a great council of free, sovereign, and independent nations where all differences and grievances could be discussed and, if possible, compromised and amicably settled upon just principles and the inherent rights of men. I also said I would favor a great international court of justice, where justiciable controversies of nations could be heard and determined and impartial justice administered without delay and without price upon the principles of righteousness and international law. That Washington, Lincoln, Cleveland, Taft, and President Wilson favored these methods for adjusting international differences, and that we now have The Hague court and about 35 treaties with various nations, negotiated by Mr. Root and Mr. Bryan while they were Secretaries of State under President Taft and President Wilson, for these purposes; and I thought such arrangements were feasible without surrendering the sovereign rights of any government and without obligating any people to sacrifice themselves for the exclusive benefit of others.

Mr. President, I am still in favor of such a world court, but not one with compulsory jurisdiction or the decrees of which are to be executed by armies and navies. I would not favor a court where the United States could be sued and interpleaded without its consent, either by powerful nations, like Great Britain and France, or the barbarous Kingdom of Hejaz in Arabia or the farcical negro republic, Liberia, in the jungles of Africa.

The jurisdiction of the court should be by consent of parties, and the sole sanction for the performance of its decree should be the just and irresistible force of the public opinion of the civilized nations of the world, which now no just and self-respecting nation can or should resist. The jurisdiction should also be confined to justiciable questions or those not involving the vital interests, independence, or honor of the contesting nations.

I also believe in voluntary international conferences where the representatives of the civilized nations can discuss all controversies between contending nations which threaten war. When parties are brought together and discuss their differences, especially in the light of views of others who are disinterested, settlements are often effected of most difficult and disturbing questions.

Mr. President, I have no prejudice against the Permanent Court of International Justice, to the jurisdiction of which it is proposed by President Harding we shall submit, solely because it was established by the League of Nations; but I do object to the provisions of the constitution of the court and its organization and to the obligations we would assume under the protocol. The ratification of the protocol would commit us to the principles of the covenant of the league without reservations and lead inevitably to full membership of that organization and involve us in the political contentions and wars of Europe. We should not do indirectly what we have by direct action refused to do.

I have no quarrel with the League of Nations as an organization of the nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa, for whose primary use, benefit, and control it was proposed and organized. Those nations had a right to create a league and to organize it with such power as their people and their governments desired, and we have no right to complain of their action. All independent nations have a right to govern themselves in such manner and by such constitutions and laws as their people may choose and select. That is self-determination and government by consent of the governed.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] a few days ago in an elaborate and able address gave a history of the League of Nations, its proceedings and work, from which it appears that as an European organization it is a great success and functioning well in the interest of those people without the aid of the United States and notwithstanding we did not enter it under our traditional policy against entangling alliances. I am glad to hear of the league's success, and I hope that it may ultimately be able to allay the bitterness and strife, the racial, territorial, and religious controversies, centuries old, raging in those countries. Europe has been a battle field for more than a thousand years and is now threatened with several wars. All men must and do hope and pray that they may settle their differences and that they may be blessed, like our country, with peace, prosperity, and happiness. It must, however, be conceded that the great controversies involving the members of the league are being settled in conferences of the premiers of the great powers without reference to the league or its consent and approval.

Mr. President, there is one other matter I desire to refer to briefly. We constantly hear it asserted that the United States has been a hermit nation and has in the past and is now pursuing a policy of aloofness in the affairs of the world. Nothing could be further from the facts than these assertions. We have always taken a prominent part in promoting peace, happiness, good will, commerce, and friendly relations between the nations of the world. When the United States was a young nation we sent our Navy, under Decatur and Preble, to the Mediterranean Sea and crushed the pirate governments of north Africa, and forever put an end to their depredations upon the commerce of the world. Commodore Perry visited Japan, which up to that time had excluded all foreigners, and by negotiation opened its ports to the commerce of the world. We succeeded in establishing the open door in China to the commerce of all nations, and later joined with other nations in the suppression of the Boxer rebellion.

We promulgated the Monroe doctrine, primarily, of course, to prevent European powers from establishing bases in the Western Hemisphere from which to conduct hostile operations against us, but also to preserve the young republics of South America from becoming a prey to those governments, a policy which has done much for the cause of liberty and free and independent government. When Great Britain undertook to seize a part of the territory of Venezuela President Cleveland told that country to stay its hand and settle its controversy by proper arbitration, and it did so. We intervened in Cuba and put an end to the fearful atrocities of the Spanish Government upon the people of that island, and ultimately secured its independence and self-government. We took the Philippine Archipelago and Porto Rico from Spain, and have so administered their affairs as to greatly promote the prosperity and happiness of their people. We made treaties with Colombia and Panama through which we were enabled to construct the Panama Canal at a cost of more than $400,000,000, connecting the two great oceans, by which our commerce and that of the whole world has been promoted and benefited.

We participated in both of The Hague conventions to preserve the peace of the world, and are a member of The Hague court, with proper reservations. We took part in the Algeciras conference, which successfully adjusted the Moroccan differences between France and Germany and averted war between those countries.

We have successfully negotiated and entered into some 35 treaties with different nations providing for arbitration and adjustment of controversies by peaceful methods instead of war, which are now in force.

We have frequently proffered our good offices, and the President of the United States has arbitrated controversies between other nations.

We have made treaties of commerce and amity with all civilized nations of the world, and our commerce now extends to all of the four corners of the earth.

Our greatest adventure was our participation in the World War, which we brought to a successful conclusion and prevented the Germans from subjugating Great Britain and France and ultimately our own country, at a cost of billions of dollars and great suffering and hardship to our soldiers, to whom the country will always be grateful, and is now providing generously for the disabled, and will provide for all when time and conditions permit.

The conferences held in Washington last summer, participated in by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, and the treaties then made providing for the peaceful adjustment of threatened troubles in the Orient and the partial disarmament of nations, are among the greatest international events of history, and it is believed will contribute much toward preserving the peace of the world.

The United States and charitable organizations and individuals of this country have contributed in the last four years more than $850,000,000 to relieve hunger, sickness, and other afflictions of European and Asiatic nations. There is not to be found in all history a manifestation of more splended charity and interest in suffering humanity.

There are some who assert that we are responsible for economic conditions in Europe, but they fail to state what we should have done for those countries or what we can now do for them. Do they wish us to continue to send them the wealth of our country? We have already advanced them more than they will ever repay, and for which we are now burdening our people with taxation. They should show a desire to do something for themselves before asking sacrifices of others.

There are some who complain that we do not now interfere in the unfortunate controversy between France and Germany in regard to the invasion of the Ruhr district, but France has expressly stated that she wanted no interference and would not tolerate any intermeddling upon our part. We can only mediate or arbitrate differences between other nations by the consent of both parties. There are others who demand that we intervene to protect the Armenians from the brutality of the Turks, but we all know from an investigation made by President Wilson that this would involve us in war with Turkey, requiring an army of hundreds of thousands of men and the expenditure of billions of dollars. We have the profoundest sympathy for the Armenians, but we must always give prime consideration to the interest of our own country.

Mr. President, we have done all these things without violating the traditional policy of our country, so splendidly stated by Washington in his Farewell Address to the American people—that America should not intervene in the political affairs of Europe and that we should not become entangled in military alliances with them. We have at the same time followed the advice of Jefferson—"Peace, friendship, and commerce with all nations and entangling alliances with none."

Mr. President, I want the United States to continue its interest in world affairs. I want it now, with proper regard for the interest of our people, by economic conferences and arrangements with other nations, to do what it can to still the tempest that is raging in Europe, get those people to cease thinking of war, go back to work and production, and open their markets to our commerce as in former days. This will contribute not only to the cause of humanity but to the economic interest of both our people and the people of those countries.

While doing these things we must guard our country against internationalism. We must maintain our sovereign independence. We must not lose our love of country, our pride in our institutions, and our patriotism. Nationalism will preserve all these, but internationalism will destroy them.

Mr. President, I have thought it proper to say this much in connection with the policy that the President has announced in his proposition for our submission to the Permanent Court of International Justice, established by the League of Nations. It looks to me like the President has changed his views in regard to entangling alliances. It is impossible to see how we can favor his suggestion and not go into the League of Nations. If this country changes its views on this subject and favors the abandonment of our traditional policy and becoming a member of the League of Nations and participating in European troubles, we should do so in a manly way. We should go in the front door, assuming all the obligations of the covenant, and not attempt to go in by the back door and in a manner misleading to the people, and wanting in the candor and courage which should always mark the action of the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, recently a distinguished citizen of my State, Hon. William L. Frierson, late Solicitor General of the United States, delivered a very able address upon "The Permanent Court of International Justice," before the Maryland State Bar Association. As the subject of this court is a live one in this country now, and will be given great consideration between now and the time when Congress meets again, I feel that publicity ought to be given to that address. I do not agree with all the views of the distinguished gentleman, but it is an able, a lawyerlike, and a statesmanlike address, and I think it will be to the interest of the country that it be published in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that it be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

[An address delivered before the Maryland State Bar Association by Hon. William L. Frierson, Atlantic City, N. J., June 29, 1922.]

Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen, in bringing to your attention the recently established Permanent Court of International Justice, now sitting at The Hague, I am impelled by the profound conviction that if it shall succeed in commanding the confidence and respect of the world, more will have been accomplished for the happiness of the human race than has resulted from any single movement inaugurated by man. If it shall be so supported that it may fully perform the function it was designed to perform, the world will have taken the longest step yet taken in advancing human civilization.

I think I may frankly discuss this subject without the fear of abusing the privilege which your invitation gives me. All political parties are committed to the policy of making all proper efforts to restore and maintain the peace of the world, and no party is committed to any definite policy with respect to an international court, though all favor an extension of the principle of arbitration. So I hope I may counsel freely with my brethren of the bar and with American citizens of all shades of political faith and remain free from the charge of offensive partisanship.

For four years, first as witnesses and then as participants, we saw practically the whole civilized world drawn, nation by nation, into the deadly conflict which followed a quarrel between two petty European governments. When the war ended, many great governments were prostrate and exhausted. Many lesser ones were frankly bankrupt, impoverished, and helpless.

In this situation thoughtful and practical men felt that stern necessity had added its inexorable force to the humanitarian and idealistic desire for peace. It seemed that an opportune time had arrived for bringing about a new order of things based on a new conception of national dignity and honor.

It must be confessed that the conception of a world in which nations may, without the loss of dignity and prestige, assert their rights and adequately protect the interests of their people and yet not resort to arms involves a revolution in human thought. It requires no slight departure from preconceived ideas of sovereignty to feel that a government may properly submit to any judgment, save its own, the rights of its citizens or matters which we have been accustomed to regard as touching its honor. And yet we have undoubtedly reached the point where, if the old order of things is to continue, every government must face the constant danger that an overburdened people will be driven to revolution and repudiation as the only means of relief.

Some of us believed, and still believe, that the plan for a League of Nations offered the best, and an entirely feasible and proper means of making future wars, if not impossible, improbable. But there were those who thought that, in some of its features, it tended to the establishment of a supergovernment, involving a surrender of some measure of sovereignty. They felt that we would be assuming some obligations which were contrary to our traditional policies. They felt that we would be taking upon ourselves risks which it would not be safe for this country to incur. They were not ready to enter into international engagements which, as they construed them, might increase rather than decrease the danger of our being drawn into foreign wars. And the Senate decrees that the United States should not enter the league.

I shall not discuss the merits of the League of Nations or the wisdom of its rejection. It was opposed by Senators, one of them from my own State, whose patriotism and honesty of purpose and conviction, however widely I differ with them, I no more doubt than I doubt my own. But I am satisfied, by the utterances of leaders of all political parties, in saying that practically all Americans were and are in sympathy with the high purposes which President Wilson sought to accomplish by proposing the League of Nations.

That treaty negotiated at Paris was rejected, not because Senators were unwilling that this Government should cooperate in any way with other nations to make peace more secure, not because they believed that all forms of concerted action would be repugnant to the spirit of our Constitution, not because they were opposed to everything included in the particular plan proposed, but only because they found in that plan some things which they regarded as subject to insuperable objections. Hence we have the right to assume that those who for this reason felt it necessary to keep us out of the league will not oppose undertakings, otherwise unobjectionable, merely because they may have been included in the rejected treaty.

The two leading objects sought to be accomplished through the league were general disarmament and an effective administration of international justice. Nearly all the great powers became members of the league and thus committed themselves to the accomplishment of these objects in the manner provided by the treaty which we had rejected. The United States is not a member of the league, but I am safe in saying that disarmament and international justice are subjects dear to the heart of America. Here, then, are two purposes which, I may assume without argument, our people earnestly desire to promote in every proper way.

Having declined to join other nations in organizing the league, we had, perhaps, lost some of the commanding influence we might otherwise have exerted in shaping world policies. But, by observing proper courtesy and avoiding action likely to produce jealousies, we were still in a position to do much for world peace. Our part was to stand ready to cooperate with the league and other governments, to lead when occasion required, and to follow when most could be accomplished in that way.

In the matter of disarmament the league was naturally embarrassed by our failure to enter. Its policy in this regard would be controlled by the great naval powers. Neither one nor all of them could be expected to take radical action so long as the United States remained uncommitted to similar action. Here, then, was an occasion for our Government to lead. And President Harding invited the great naval powers to confer with a view to the limitation of armaments.

For the work of the conference I have nought but praise. Much has been done to lessen the danger of recurring war. Heavy burdens of government have been lightened. Some questions that might have resulted in war have been peaceably settled. With Great Britain and the United States limited to about equal battleship strengh and Japan not far behind, no one government can aspire to a dominating power on the seas, with its inevitable temptation to unjust aggression, and other nations will not be forced to maintain an extravagant naval strength to oppose such aspirations. We are, at least, relieved for 10 years of the burdens and the menace to peace which would have been inherent in the enormous navies about to result from competition participated in by the already great naval powers. And I believe that, after 10 years' experience under this treaty, we may safely expect that the old policies will not be resumed. Indeed, as I have said on another occasion, I do not regard it as an impractical dream to look forward to the time when the high seas will be fully recognized as the common possession of all nations, to be protected and kept safe for the commerce of the world by a common navy, leaving each government to maintain only such a navy as may be required for the immediate defense of its own coasts.

Through this conference our Government has made it possible for the League of Nations to proceed with a real program looking to disarmament. But more important than any concrete agreement reached is the recognition of a principle in which I see the best hope for the future. When we agreed with other governments to limit our armaments we gave our adherence to the principle that this Government surrenders no part of its sovereignty and suffers no loss of dignity when, in matters touching the interests of other nations as well as its own, it binds itself to a limited use of some of its powers in return for similar agreements by other governments.

While it was obviously our province and, in fact, our duty to take the lead in the matter of disarmament, when it came to the other great object of the league, the establishment of a court of international justice, the situation was different. The league was functioning, with nearly all the great powers as members. Through the machinery of the league the very governments whose cooperation was essential to success were proceeding to organize a tribunal designed to be a world court. An independent movement by us to accomplish the same purpose would not only have been futile but could very well be regarded by other governments as antagonistic and offensive. This time it was our part to follow and not to lead. We could only wait for others to complete the work and then do what we could to help make it effective.

The league has now completed its work, and the Permanent Court of International Justice convened at The Hague two weeks ago for its first session. If it is possible for this court to accomplish the splendid purpose of its creation, it is inconceivable that any citizen of this peace-loving country should be willing for his government to have no part in bringing about such a result. We would, I am sure, be ashamed to see failure come through lack of proper cooperation on our part.

It behooves us to consider seriously what our relation to this court shall be and in what manner we may support and strengthen it. Let me, therefore, review, as briefly as I may, the manner in which it has been organized and attempt to explain just what it is.

While it is the creature and an agency of the League of Nations, there has been a consistent effort to make it a tribunal to which all nations may safely submit their disputes. When the council of the league came to take the first step it was recognized that to be completely successful the court must be so constituted as to be acceptable to governments which were not members as well as those which were members. It was, therefore, decided to invite a number of the most eminent international jurists of the world to formulate a plan to be recommended to the authorities of the league. No feeling that might have been supposed to have been engendered by our failure to join the league deterred the council from extending an invitation to a great American lawyer, and Mr. Root became a member of the committee. And it should be the source of some satisfaction and much confidence that in the plan formulated his genius and profound knowledge of American ideas of justice left their impress upon every page.

This committee was wholly unofficial. No one of its members had an authority to represent or speak for his government. It was merely a meeting of individuals, as experts, to formulate an expert opinion. But the plan recommended by it was, with slight modifications, embodied in what was called a statute and adopted by both the council and the assembly, and later ratified, I believe, by all the more than 40 governments giving adherence to the league.

The ultimate object of the statute was the creation of a court which would draw to itself for settlement all international controversies. It was hardly to be expected, however, that all nations would at once be ready to agree to so sweeping and compelling a jurisdiction. Many disputes had been amicably settled through voluntary arbitration, and some governments, especially those not members of the league, were not ready to have that method of proceeding entirely supplanted. Hence the first article of the statute declares that this court shall be "in addition to the court of arbitration organized by the conventions of The Hague of 1899 and 1907, and to the special tribunals of arbitration to which States are always at liberty to submit their disputes for settlement." Thus governments which may for any reason be unwilling to submit particular disputes to the new court may still, if they prefer, resort to arbitration in the old way.

The court consists of 11 judges and 4 deputy judges, who are to be elected by a majority of the votes in the assembly and also a majority in the council of the league, the two bodies acting separately. The elections are to be from lists submitted by each member of the court of arbitration belonging to a League of Nations State and by persons appointed for that purpose by League of Nations Governments which are not represented in the court of arbitration. Only one judge may be selected from the nationals of one government, but a selection may be made from the nationals of a government which is not a member of the league.

So far as concerns those nations which participate through the league, it would be difficult to devise a scheme of elections better calculated to promote fairness. Other nations are given consideration when their nationals are made eligible to the judgeships. And, it may be added, a distinguished American, John Bassett Moore, is now sitting as one of the first judges.

Whenever practicable, there must be 11 judges on the bench, a deputy judge taking the place of any judge who can not be present. And in no event is the court to consist of less than 9 judges.

Another distinguishing feature of the plan is that every government, whether a member of the league or not, which becomes a litigant is entitled to have one of its own nationals on the bench. If there is no such national among the judges or deputy judges, the litigant names one who takes part in the decision on an equal footing with his colleagues.

The court is open primarily to all League of Nations States, but also, and on an equal footing, to all other States, subject only to their being required to contribute in a prescribed manner to the expense.

The jurisdiction of the court thus constituted is only such as shall be conferred on it by an agreement of parties except to the extent that the various governments may accept a compulsory jurisdiction. It is provided:

"The jurisdiction of the court comprises all cases referred to it and all matters specially provided for in treaties and conventions in force."

Hence jurisdiction will be taken of any controversy, of any nature whatever, between any two nations in the world which the parties choose to submit. The court will also take jurisdiction, at the instance of either party, of all such controversies as the disputing governments have, by existing treaty, agreed to submit when they arise.

The jurisdiction which the authors of the plan hoped the court would ultimately exercise is set out in the provision which gives an opportunity for accepting a compulsory jurisdiction in this language:

"The members of the League of Nations and the States mentioned in the annex to the covenant may, either when signing or ratifying the protocol to which the present statute is adjoined, or at a later moment, declare that they recognize as compulsory, ipso facto, and without special agreement, in relation to any other member or State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of any or all of the classes of legal disputes concerning:

"(a) The interpretation of a treaty.

"(b) Any question of international law.

"(c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation.

"(d) The nature and extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation."

More than 20 governments have accepted this compulsory jurisdiction, though, as far as I am advised, none of the really great powers have yet gone that far.

Governments which have become members of the league have not thereby agreed absolutely to submit their disputes to this court, but they have agreed to submit them either to the court or to arbitration. Governments, like ours, which are not members of the league, have not agreed to do either except as they may have entered into arbitration treaties with other nations.

Our Government has as yet given no recognition to the court. Whatever adherence we shall give it must be signified through treaties negotiated with the League of Nations or with the separate governments composing it. And the league, I think, has made it clear that we need feel no embarrassment in opening such negotiations by inviting an American lawyer to counsel with it and in electing an American citizen to be one of the first judges. Obviously our cooperation is not only needed but earnestly desired. We have but to meet other governments in the same friendly spirit they exhibited in constituting the court, and we may, I doubt not, secure as large a measure of responsibility for maintaining this means of adjusting international disputes as we deem it safe and proper to assume.

In determining what we shall seek to accomplish in this way the first question is, Ought we to join other nations in the agreement not to resort to arms without first submitting our controversy either to the international court or to arbitration, and then only in the event of a favorable decision?

Justice effectively administered constitutes the very foundation of all civilized life. Without it confusion, strife, and conflict are inevitable. Wars, in the last analysis, result not so much from the nature of actual disputes which arise as from the want of any practical way to force honorable and peaceful settlements. The active germs of war lie in the indefiniteness and uncertainty of international law, but to a greater degree in the entire absence of any authority to declare rules governing nations in their intercourse with each other or to apply such rules to particular controversies.

In our own country orderly government is possible not merely because we have a system of laws to control individual conduct but chiefly because there is constituted authority by which these laws may be enforced. We might have ever so perfect a system of laws and the result would be hopeless chaos if every man was free to interpret, apply, and execute them for himself.

We can not claim, of course, that our judges are more than human and do not make mistakes, or that injustice is not sometimes done through judicial decrees. But no right-thinking man feels that he is surrendering any of his rights or dignity when instead of taking the administration of justice into his own hands he accepts in good faith a judicial determination of his controversies. The thing at last which makes orderly government possible is the authority to decide and the power to enforce judgments. The lawyer was not far wrong who defined a court as a place where disputes are settled without a fight.

The trouble with international law has been that there has been nowhere either the authority to interpret it or the power to enforce it. When international disputes have arisen, each government has decided both the facts and the law for itself; and then, having decided the case in its own favor, and driven by a sensitive national honor, has proceeded to execute its own judgment by the only available means—a resort to arms. The obvious goal of those who would eliminate future wars is a place where international disputes may be settled without a fight.

Complete sovereignty implies the right of a government, if it sees fit, to submit to no judgment save its own. But it also implies the power to agree upon that method for settling its disputes which will best protect the interests of its people. A sovereign government can not be subjected, without its consent, to any jurisdiction. But one of its chief objects is to promote justice and one of its chief desires should be to do justice. It can exert its sovereign power in no way more beneficial to its people than by aiding in providing means for making the attainment of justice as certain as is humanly possible. No argument is necessary at this late day to justify such efforts. Indeed, we have long been committed to the policy of arbitration for the settlement of all ordinary international controversies. We participated in the organization of the court of arbitration at The Hague. We have entered into treaties with many governments by which we have agreed to submit to arbitration all controversies of a specified nature. And we have actually arbitrated controversies over subjects as serious as our boundary lines and our rights in the Behring Sea.

True, when we agree to accept the judgment of any tribunal we waive some of our sovereign rights, or rather we agree to exercise those rights in a particular way in return for the agreement of other nations to exercise theirs only in the same way. The principle is the same as that which made us willing to agree to exercise to only a limited extent our sovereign right to maintain armaments.

To determine to what extent naval or other armaments are necessary for the protection of this country and the safety of this people is a duty committed peculiarly to our own Government. To leave this question to be settled for us by the judgment of any other government or association of governments would be a shameful abdication of power of which it is not to be supposed any American administration will ever be guilty. But the extent to which it will be necessary for us to exercise our undoubted and uncontrolled right to arm depends at last upon the extent to which other nations choose to exercise the same right. Our Government found that we had a Navy sufficient under existing conditions but which would become insufficient if the plans adopted by other powers for larger navies should be carried out. President Harding, of course, would not consider letting the judgment of any other government or governments determine for us the size and strength of our Navy. But, very properly, he did not think that there would be any surrender of sovereignty or loss of dignity in conferring with those with whom we were about to be forced into ruinous competition.

In asking for the conference, he said, in effect, to the other great naval powers: "Although we are richer and less crippled by the war and better able than any of you to persist in the old policies, we are willing to join you in calling a halt. We will not permit you to decide for us what armaments we need. But we have decided that those we have are sufficient unless you increase yours. We believe you will agree that yours are sufficient unless we increase ours. We are willing to preserve the status quo by agreeing with you that none of us shall increase our present battleship strength, and that all of us will observe such other limitations of armaments as shall, in our unanimous opinion, be proper."

This was no new policy. It was but the extension of an old one under which for many years the extent of armaments along the St. Lawrence has been controlled by treaties between this Government and Great Britain.

So we are confronted with the certainty that international disagreements will arise in the future as they have arisen in the past. We may, if we choose, stand aloof and trust to our ability to settle them by the power of the sword. But this will involve the sacrifice of both life and treasure. The alternative is to agree, in advance, with other nations upon a repository for the authority to decide such controversies. Surely there should be no hesitation in making a choice.

No one suggests an agreement that will limit in the slightest degree the right at all times to meet force with force or to immediately resist invasion. With this right reserved, I am convinced that no controversy can arise of so serious a nature that we may not honorably, and should not as an alternative to bloodshed, submit it to the judgment of an impartial tribunal. We are properly jealous of what we have been accustomed to call our national honor. But the same Christian sentiment that decreed the duel to be no proper or necessary means of vindicating individual honor leads to the conclusion that national honor is better vindicated by a law-abiding acceptance of the judgment of constituted authority than by the wholesale sacrifice and taking of human life. And so I say, since we are the richest and most powerful Government and profess to be an enlightened Christian Nation, it would be shameful and humiliating for us to fail by proper negotiations at the earliest practicable moment to become a party to the agreement by which the members of the league are already bound to submit all their international controversies to either the international court or to arbitration.

The next question is, Ought we to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice? This requires more serious consideration. The first obstacle is that we have no voice in the selection of the judges, except that we will have the right to select one if no one of the regular judges or deputy judges at the time we submit a case happens to be an American. There would undoubtedly be great advantages in having one tribunal with authority to compel the submission of controversies. But if there is one idea more than any other which is ingrained in American thought it is that any form of government without representation is intolerable. And I do not believe that the American people will or should ever be willing that their Government shall commit itself in advance to the submission of questions involving their rights to a court in the selection of whose judges it has no voice. We may very well agree that we will submit either to that court or to arbitration. As controversies arise we may prefer the court and let all our cases go there. But it would be unwise and unsafe to now commit ourselves absolutely to the jurisdiction of the court.

However, if the time shall come when we are ready to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of an international court, I can not doubt, in view of the importance of our participating in any permanent peace plans, that such an arrangement may be brought about by proper negotiations that this Government will have an equal voice with members of the league in the selection of judges. Hence in what I shall now say when I refer to the court I must be understood as meaning the court as now constituted plus a satisfactory provision by which the United States will participate in elections.

Of course, before accepting this jurisdiction we should fully understand and thoroughly consider its scope. Very naturally it extends first to cases involving the interpretation of treaties. Treaties are but contracts between governments. The art of using human language will probably never be so perfect that men may not honestly differ as to the meaning of contracts. And human nature is such that many men are prone to put a forced construction on their agreements when necessary to avoid unanticipated results. Hence out of treaties arise most of the international disagreements. And the most obvious function of an international court is to compose these differences by an authoritative interpretation of treaties.

It is true there may be questions of a delicate nature growing out of treaties as to which an adverse decision might be embarrassing to us. The States having surrendered the power to make treaties, the entire treaty-making power of the people of the United States is vested in the Federal Government and extends to all matters which are a proper subject for negotiations between independent governments, including the rights and privileges which the nationals of one country may enjoy within another. A treaty establishes rules of law which are of equal dignity with acts of Congress, and may override State laws on the same subject. Thus we have three classes of laws upon which public and private rights may depend. In the field reserved to the States the lawmaking power is in the legislature, and Congress has no power. Within the limits prescribed by the Constitution Congress may legislate. But there are matters arising out of our intercourse with other nations, matters which affect the rights and interests of other governments as well as our own, matters which can be controlled only by the action of more than one government.

In this day of quick communication and close commercial relations throughout the world it is of prime importance that our Government shall secure to its nationals adequate rights and protection in foreign countries, and this can be done only by according reciprocal rights in our own country. In all such matters laws may be established only through the treaty-making power. And, through the exercise of that power, the Federal Government may, to the extent that they affect foreign governments or their nationals, control matters which ordinarily belong exclusively to the States. By treaty aliens may acquire the right to inherit and hold property anywhere in the United States notwithstanding State laws to the contrary. In the same way they may acquire the right to be tried for offenses committed in this country, by consular or other courts of their own government.

Questions about which we are rather sensitive also grow out of treaties regulating the exclusion of nationals of other countries. Of course, no one doubts our right to exclude all aliens. But to do this would, of course, result in retaliation and make friendly intercourse impossible. To the extent, therefore, that we find it necessary to exclude the nationals of a particular government we have frequently resorted to treaties to avoid too harsh measures against our citizens on the part of that government.

Our courts are open for the assertion of private rights claimed under treaties, which they interpret for themselves, and our nationals in other countries are likewise subject to the same treaties as interpreted by the courts of those countries. By conferring jurisdiction upon an international court to interpret treaties we will surrender the power to finally determine some of the rights of aliens in this country, but other governments will surrender a corresponding power over the rights of our nationals. I do not mean that there will be an appeal from the decision of our courts in a suit between individuals. But if such litigation should arise the government whose nationals are interested could, if it thought proper, as between it and our Government, invoke the jurisdiction of the international court to obtain an authoritative interpretation of the treaty involved. Our courts would doubtless hold in abeyance pending litigation and would, of course, accept the decision of the international court as controlling.

While these considerations should render us cautious in establishing our relation to the international court, they are not, I think, sufficient to deter us from according to that court a jurisdiction which is essential if it is really to be the means of insuring the peaceful settlement of controversies.

It is entirely possible that the court may give to a treaty, relating to the exclusion of aliens, for instance, a meaning entirely different from what we intended, and thus commit us to a policy which we would never knowingly have adopted. The consequences of this should, of course, be carefully guarded against. We should be willing to accept the decision of the court as the correct measure of our responsibilities up to that time, but should reserve the right to immediately terminate any treaty which may be construed contrary to what we intended.

The remainder of the jurisdiction consists of determining the law and facts controlling international obligations and the redress of international wrongs. Without this jurisdiction, the court would in no real sense be an international court.

After careful study I am convinced that the proposed compulsory jurisdiction is admirably designed to preserve the peace of the world and that the chief hope of preventing future wars lies in the acceptance of this jurisdiction by all civilized nations.

It is true, however, that while this court is designed to provide a means of administering international justice, the uncertainty and indefiniteness as to what international law is remain. Nothing will in a larger degree promote a general willingness to accept its compulsory jurisdiction than to remove, as far as possible, this uncertainty. And here again, I think, our Government may properly lead.

There is, of course, no legislative body clothed with the power to enact laws to control the conduct of nations. And I suppose no one would say that our Government could properly join in establishing an international congress or parliament with authority to pass laws to be binding on us without our approval of each separate law expressed by a treaty negotiated by the President and consented to by the Senate. No rule or principle can be said to have the force of international law except with the consent, express or implied, of the separate governments.

We may, however, with perfect propriety, participate in a conference of nations for the purpose of formulating by unanimous agreement the fundamental rules and principles which should control the participating nations in their intercourse with each other. These rules and principles may be embodied in treaties which when approved by the Senate will become a code of international laws by which we will have agreed to be bound. But even if we should in this way get the rules of international law made certain to such an extent that all nations would agree to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the court, we would still have little more than another form of voluntary arbitration unless there should be some practical way to compel resort to the court and to enforce its judgments.

The inadequacy of any form of voluntary arbitration was painfully demonstrated as we saw a petty quarrel between Austria and little Serbia grow into an appalling world war. Senator LODGE recognized the necessity for compelling force when in 1915 he said that if we were to promote international peace at the close of the present war, if we were to restore international law as it must be restored, we must find some way in which the united forces of the nations could be put behind the cause of peace and law.

And Theodore Roosevelt, looking to a practical way of accomplishing results, said:

"The one permanent move for obtaining peace which has yet been suggested with any reasonable chance of obtaining its object is by agreement among the great powers in which each should pledge itself not only to abide the decisions of a common tribunal but to back with force the decisions of that common tribunal."

We must indulge no delusion that human nature has been wholly regenerated. I am far from believing that the gospel of the lowly Nazarene has not had its effect upon our code of morals or that it has not greatly elevated our standards of right and wrong. But I am fully conscious that it has not yet taken so compelling a hold on the human race that men and nations are no longer controlled by avarice, selfishness, and the passion for power. The time has not yet come when governments can be depended on to always do what they ought to do. Self-interest is still the best security for the faithful performance of international agreements. Governments, like individuals, may be relied on to do right if it is to their interest to do so and ruinous to do wrong.

The court of arbitration has been open to all nations for a good many years. But there has been no power to force any nation to submit a controversy to it. A powerful government, feeling that arbitration would not be to its interest, could, without antagonizing the rest of the world, ignore the court and settle disputes in its own way. The same will be true of the Permanent Court of International Justice unless it is made so dangerous to ignore the court that no nation can afford to take the risk.

It will not be entirely safe to rely upon the willingness or the agreements of governments to submit to the jurisdiction of the court unless in some way it is made certain that the concrete penalties for the violation of these agreements will outweigh the consequences of a possible adverse decision. There can be no certainty that the judgments of the court will be respected and obeyed so long as it may happen that to disregard them will be attended by less serious consequences to a particular nation than to obey them. If through the administration of international justice future wars are to be averted, the court must be so powerfully supported and its judgments so sure of enforcement that those who desire peace will have it, because those who desire war will not dare break the peace of the world.

The league has endeavored to provide the necessary power to make the court the great conservator of the peace it was designed to be. Every member is pledged to support it and its jurisdiction by military force or economic pressure or both. A violation of the agreement to accept the judgment of the court makes the offender the common enemy of all. Such a pledge made and faithfully observed by all the great powers would make war impossible, because it would be an act of practical self-destruction on the part of the aggressor. The making of the pledge would reduce the danger of war to a minimum, because the only menace to peace would be in the unavoidable possibility that a considerable number of powerful governments may not be faithful to their promise of support to the court.

According to American ideals and traditions justice must be the foundation of all acceptable government. We are proud of our military achievements, because they have been the means of promoting justice. We glory in the fact that our arms have never known defeat, but chiefly because they have never been employed in a cause that was not just. We rejoice in our present commanding power, because, desiring to ourselves be just in all our dealings and relations, we do not intend to use it unjustly. Realizing that our own best interests are now directly involved in the peace of the world our opportunity to make a lasting peace possible lies in using our power and influence to aid in providing the means for administering international justice.

For myself, believing as I do that the covenant of the League of Nations imposed no obligation that we could not properly assume, but respecting the objections that others had to it, I would like to see our Government now say to the nations composing the league that, while we found it impossible to engage in all your undertakings, we are ready to become a party to all agreements into which you have entered with respect to the Permanent Court of International Justice, to the end that it may be a truly effective agency for peace and order, and, if it can be arranged for us to have an equal voice in the selection of its judges, we will join you in accepting its compulsory jurisdiction.

I am aware, however, that there are those who felt that the covenant would have committed us in advance to the use of military force. I have felt that some way must be found to put the united forces of the nations behind the cause of peace and order and that we would be justified in agreeing, with other governments, to back the court with force of whatever kind should be necessary. But if those now authorized to speak for the American people still feel that we should not commit ourselves to that extent, there is still a way, not subject, I think, to reasonable objection, in which we may make our cooperation ineffective.

The interests of all nations are now so interlaced with each other, the prosperity of one is so dependent upon others, peaceful intercourse is so essential to the happiness of all, that the government which wrongfully disturbs the peace of the world is, in truth and in fact, an enemy of the world. With the means provided by which all nations may obtain honorable and peaceful settlements of international controversies, that nation which deliberately chooses to resort to arms is a disturber of the peace.

Why should any civilized government hesitate to treat such a nation as an enemy?

Surely our Government ought not to do less than enter into an agreement with as many governments as possible, ordaining that it shall be a canon of international law that the act of invading foreign territory, or declaring war, without favorable action by a recognized tribunal, or a refusal to abide its judgment shall be accepted as an act of war against all the nations.

The nations need not engage to furnish physical force if they will bind themselves to recognize a state of war as existing between them and the offending government, and agree to treat the latter and its nationals as enemies. Any nation will then be entirely justified, if it sees fit, in joining forces with the invaded country, or it may content itself with merely stopping all communication and dealing between it and the enemy country.

With such an agreement in general effect, a government contemplating war in violation of it would face the certainty of at once becoming an outlaw. Its ships on the high seas would be the legitimate prey of all nations. The civilized world would be in an alliance against it. Its nationals everywhere would be alien enemies with their property subject to seizure and themselves subject to be interned. It and its people would not be permitted to trade with any civilized country. Supplies for the support of its armies or the sustenance of its citizens could not be obtained anywhere beyond its own borders. In addition, soldiers in overwhelming numbers, from all over the world, would doubtless come to the rescue of the invaded country. The utter impossibility of success, under these conditions, would be the strongest possible guarantee against the commencement of war.

The picture I have drawn may not be speedily realized in its entirety. It may be that more than one nation will suffer disaster through faithlessness to agreements before it will be generally understood that the safety of every nation depends upon its own good faith in supporting measures of this kind. But the signs of the times point unerringly to some tribunal, adequately supported and commanding the confidence and respect of the world, as the surest hope for the future.

Just as law effectively administered is the only means of preserving domestic peace and good order, so an impartial administration of international justice is the only means by which international peace may be preserved. International justice may never be perfectly administered any more than domestic justice. But the time has come when considerations both of fairness and self-interest should induce nations, like individuals, to be satisfied with the nearest practicable approximation to perfection in the adjustment of their rights. I am profoundly convinced that the Permanent Court of International Justice gives fair promise of being a tribunal in which international controversies may be settled with at least approximate justice. Its success will mean more for the advancement of civilization than anything man has yet done. Its failure would be a calamity to mankind. I think we would hang our heads in shame if it should fail for the lack of any aid which our Government could but would not give.

In stating what, it seems to me, is the plain duty and ought to be the high privilege of our Government at this crisis in the affairs of the world, I have not, I think, suggested anything which can reasonably be said to be inconsistent with our theory of government, the spirit of our institutions, or the happiness and security of the American people. I fully agree that, in our desire to do that which will benefit the rest of the world, we can properly do only that which is consistent with our own Constitution. The Government of the United States, if true to the purposes of its creation, can never sacrifice the interests and well-being of its own people to serve the interests of any other people.

In America, public officials are but trustees of some part of the power which belongs to the people. This power is intrusted to them to be used for certain definite purposes. It can not, without a breach of trust, be used for unauthorized purposes any more than a trustee for a named beneficiary can use funds in his hands to promote a charitable cause, however worthy or appealing.

The spirit of our Constitution breathes in its opening words, which declare the purposes for which the government is clothed with power:

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution."

The authors of this Constitution were speaking for a people whose ability to maintain an independent government still hung in the balance. They indulged no ambitious delusion that they were about to establish justice throughout the world. They doubtless anticipated that the time might come when the happiness of the American people would depend largely upon the stability of international justice. But primarily they were content to establish justice in their own country. They did not authorize the use of the power and resources of the people to secure tranquillity in foreign countries unless this should be necessary to insure domestic tranquillity. They had no thought of undertaking the defense of other nations except as this should be required in the assertion of our rights and in our own defense. They designed this country to be an asylum for the oppressed of all nations but did not aspire to promote the welfare of all peoples or to secure the blessings of liberty to all mankind except as this might follow from things tending to promote the welfare of themselves and their posterity and those who might choose to make their abode here.

The Government thus established must be essentially selfish in the sense that America and her interests must always be the first consideration. While we may properly adopt policies and engage in undertakings which are highly beneficial to other peoples, this result must be only incidental to the primary purpose of protecting and advancing the interests of our own people. It would be a gross abuse of power to send an American Army, as crusaders, to fight in a sentimental cause or one deemed holy. It would equally be a breach of trust for this Government to use our soldiers to liberate oppressed people in other lands, to restore order in countries disturbed by revolution, or to aid in establishing republican government for foreign peoples unless such a course should be necessary to properly protect American rights and American lives.

This may seem to some a cold-blooded view to take of the proper function of a great government. But it is in full accord with our best traditions and with uniform practices of our Government.

The Monroe doctrine has been a great protection to all the governments in the Western Hemisphere. But we did not promulgate and have not maintained it because it was our duty or the province of our Government to protect them. Its justification is in the properly selfish purpose to protect ourselves against the danger to us likely to follow from European colonization and aggression.

We freed the people of Texas and Cuba and enabled them to establish independent governments, but this was done to relieve us from conditions at our very door which made American lives and rights insecure, and, in the case of Cuba, had actually resulted in the destruction of one of our battleships.

We did not enter the World War merely because we believed the cause of Belgium and England and France was just and that of Germany unjust, or even because we were convinced that a German victory would be a misfortune to the world. The great body of our people were, from the beginning, in full sympathy with the Allies. Perhaps a majority would personally have been willing to contribute of their means and their manhood to insure the overthrow of Germany. There were, of course, many who did not share this feeling. President Wilson and the Congress had, however, been intrusted with power belonging to all the people to be exercised for certain definite purposes which did not include sacrificing American lives and treasure in fighting the battles of other nations. The Government, therefore, very properly remained neutral so long as there was a reasonable hope that American rights would be respected. But the welfare of the American people requires that at all times our national honor shall be defended and American rights on the high seas and elsewhere protected. And when Germany's conduct of the war became equivalent to making war on us we accepted the challenge and placed ourselves among her belligerent enemies.

With the war thus forced upon us, fidelity to its own people required the Government to leave undone nothing which should be necessary to make victory decisive and the results lasting. And so, regardless of what was the justifying cause of our entry into the war, once in, we fought with the inspiration that came from the determination that victory should bring the greatest possible measure of peace and security to the world and corresponding blessings to mankind.

I have thus stated, at perhaps unnecessary length, my conception of this Government and its powers, because I want to make it plain that in advocating adherence to an international court I do not speak as one who believes in a loose construction of the Constitution or as one who would have our Government, disregarding the fact that it is a Government of limited powers, through idealistic and humanitarian motives, exert its powers for purposes wholly different from those for which they have been intrusted to it. I fully and unreservedly agree that in determining our governmental action every other consideration must give way to the good and welfare of the American people.

It is conceivable that a time may come when for us to take a particular course might benefit the rest of the world but would disturb domestic tranquillity or injure the general welfare in the United States. The people themselves would, of course, have the right to make the sacrifice. But they have not intrusted their public servants with the right to make such an altruistic choice for them. The Government would have no alternative. It must stand for that which will best promote the interests of America.

Entertaining these sentiments I heartily agree that even in the effort to promote the peace of the world we can not afford to enter into any arrangement which will not leave our Government free to efficiently promote the interests and well-being of our own people. To any proposed plan of cooperation with other nations must be applied the acid test of whether it will tend to the accomplishment of the purposes for which this Government was declared to have been established.

I place my advocacy of adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice upon the firm conviction that our Government can not do otherwise without failing to embrace the greatest opportunity it has ever had to serve the purposes for which the Constitution was ordained. Aside from any altruistic consideration there is now no unsettled question which so directly and seriously involves the well-being of the American people as the administration of international justice. We have learned that a world war may result quickly from a very small beginning, and that we are now so related to the rest of the world that such a war can scarcely be waged without our being compelled to participate. This constant danger of war is a standing menace to everything that the Constitution was intended to promote. Justice can not be said to be established under modern conditions unless there is some means of obtaining it for our citizens everywhere. There can be no domestic tranquillity if we are harassed by foreign wars. The common defense can be best provided for by reducing to a minimum the necessity for costly armaments. The general welfare is best promoted by making war as nearly impossible as we may. And the blessings of liberty can not be fully enjoyed except when peace reigns.

To the extent, therefore, that we contribute to the maintenance of international peace we will be serving our own best interests in the strictest sense. In addition, there will be the inspiring and ennobling thought that we will be helping to make the world a better place in which to live than it has been since the fall of man, and to obtain for future generations a greater degree of security and happiness than mankind has hitherto enjoyed.

To us whose profession constitutes us priests ministering at the altar of justice, whose training and experience have taught the lesson that human rights are secure and human happiness possible only when law is supreme, the most appealing vision must be that which discloses a world in which nations, no less than individuals, respect the rights of each other and are subject to just laws administered by constituted authority. Now that it is evident that in the future successful war will depend not so much upon bravery or even military genius as upon ingenuity in devising mechanical means for the wholesale taking of human life, there remains far less to appeal to the spirit of chivalry, and military glory loses much of its glamour. Now, it seems to me, is the propitious time for justice to come into its own as the dominant, ruling force of the world.

The Permanent Court of International Justice offers the most practical and the most promising means yet devised for substituting just and peaceful settlements for armed conflict. It is my earnest hope that this great Government of ours, having found itself unable to take the lead in establishing this international tribunal, will not be too proud to follow the lead of other nations, but will promptly give the stamp of approval and accord that measure of support which seems essential to make it indeed the best hope for the future.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION—LIGHT WINES AND BEER.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in view of the adoption of a resolution by the New York Legislature to memorialize Congress to adopt a light wine and beer amendment to the national prohibition act and the declarations of certain Senators that they will ask for a modification of the national prohibition act raising the alcoholic content of permitted beverages, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the status of State prohibition laws, especially with reference to the definition of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not yield at present. I wish to conclude my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is well recognized, of course, that Congress can not legalize what the States prohibit. The following 15 States prohibit all alcoholic beverages without reference to the percentage of alcohol they contain: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Kansas, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Dakota, and Washington.

The following 20 States prohibit alcoholic beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol or more: Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Two States, South Carolina and Texas, prohibit beverages containing 1 per cent or more of alcohol.

The following 9 States have adopted the definition of the national prohibition act by reference in their State legislatures: California, Connecticut, Louisiana, Maine, Missouri, Nevada, New York, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; not now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want to finish my remarks. I do not wish my remarks interrupted here.

Two States, Maryland and Massachusetts, have adopted no State codes, but the courts have upheld certain parts of their former legislation which prohibit any person from selling liquor without first obtaining a license. Inasmuch as no one can secure a license to sell intoxicating liquors containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in those States, this furnishes a partial enforcement code to aid in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

As long as more than three-fourths of the States of this Union, by their own action and initiation, have prohibited the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages with even 1 per cent or less of alcohol, the folly and indefensibility of this effort to legalize light wine and beer, or even 2 per cent beer, is manifest. As I have already stated on the floor of the Senate, light wines and beer as commonly known are intoxicating liquors, so recognized by the courts. They can not be legalized while the eighteenth amendment remains a part of the Constitution. An attempt of Congress to legalize what more than three-fourths of the States prohibit can result only in one thing, and that is the encouragement of lawlessness.

The bootlegger and his attorney would plead in the courts as their defense that Congress had set up a standard defining intoxicating liquor different from or more liberal than that of their State laws, and that they supposed they had a right to sell 1, 2, or 3 per cent beer, even though the State law prohibited it.

There is only one legal, orderly method to secure light wines and beer, and that is by repeal or change of the eighteenth amendment itself. These other attempts are simply camouflaged efforts to make the thirsty believe that they can secure what they want without doing it in a legal manner. What they want is booze with a real kick, and nothing less will satisfy them. To hold out such a false hope to the voters of even a wet district is unworthy of a public official who takes an oath of office to support the Constitution without mental reservation or purpose of evasion. The friends of the eighteenth amendment and the laws enacted to enforce it will meet this challenge of the opponents of prohibition in the next session and in future sessions, and I am confident that the same moral force that placed the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution will maintain and enforce it and prevent any impairment of present enforcement provisions.

The question of the proper standard of alcoholic content which should be fixed to effectuate the purpose of the eighteenth amendment was thoroughly considered by Congress at the time of the passage of the national prohibition act. The standard which was adopted has since been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. At the time of the passage of this act persistent efforts were made to fix the alcoholic content in beer at 2.75 per cent. (See report of the hearing before subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.) This was rejected as unsatisfactory. The proposed amendment to that act for light wines and beer would not tend to carry out the purpose of the eighteenth amendment, but to defeat it. No change should be adopted designed to weaken the law or which will necessitate further litigation upon the subject. Congress can not legalize any liquor which is intoxicating in fact. It may prohibit liquors nonintoxicating, if it finds such action is necessary or desirable in the enforcement of the prohibition law. This principle is sustained uniformly by the courts.

I can not close without pointing out the utterly erroneous and misleading premises on which the resolutions of the New York Legislature are based.

The preamble begins by stating that "Whereas the interpretation of the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution expressed in the Volstead Act has resulted in widespread contempt and violation of the law, illegal traffic in liquor, and in official corruption," and so forth.

Mr. President, these statements are so unfounded as both to amaze and amuse. That there has been a temporary relaxation of standards of life and conduct due to the reaction following the intense and abnormal strain of war can not be denied. To say that this relaxation is due to prohibition is literally to murder the truth. The fact is that if the saloons and other drinking resorts had been in operation during the disturbed and lurid period since the World War closed crime would have developed on a hundredfold larger scale; the riots, clashes, and near wars would have been far more dangerous and destructive. Before the war whenever disturbances threatening public order arose the first thing the authorities did was to close the saloons. Thank God, the eighteenth amendment had permanently closed them when the perils and crises of reconstruction raged about us.

Undoubtedly there have been some instances of corruption among prohibition officials and some illegal trading in intoxicating liquors; but, compared with conditions prevailing in the Republic as a whole, they are no more than the usual number of such happenings connected with enforcement of laws against crime. An illegal liquor traffic flourished in the days of license. The intimation in the resolution that something of an especially sinister nature in prohibition has produced corruption, or an illicit trade, is without the slightest justification.

Considering the country over, and from year to year, the glorious truth is that there has been a decrease of 85 or 90 per cent in the consumption of intoxicating liquors in the United States since the advent of prohibition, and that there has been a resulting increase in savings banks deposits throughout the Nation of most gratifying and inspiring proportions.

Prohibition is a success. It is becoming stronger and more effective every day. The moral forces of America accept this latest challenge from the liquor element. The movement for light wines and beer is an assault under cover on the eighteenth amendment and will dash itself to pieces against the moral sentiment of America.

Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the Secretary report the first amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa still hold the floor?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am asking that we proceed with the pending bill.

Mr. STANLEY. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Texas a question. He said he would submit to a question after he was through speaking.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Iowa secured the floor, but, with his permission, I shall be glad to answer the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator had spoken of the law of Nevada. Has he the date of that act?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not have it here.

Mr. STANLEY. Can the Senator give me the approximate date?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but I shall be glad to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. STANLEY. I am advised that recently, in the last few months, the Legislature of Nevada repealed the law to which the Senator referred. The repealing act was vetoed by the Governor of Nevada, and passed over his veto by a two-thirds majority.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to have the statement of the Senator. I find, however, on again looking over my enumeration of the States that I was correct in listing Nevada among the States which had adopted the definitions in the national prohibition enforcement act. Nevada repealed her own enforcement act, it is true, but then proceeded to adopt the definitions in the national enforcement act.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the Secretary report the first committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire if the Senator from Iowa desires to discuss the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course the Senator from New Mexico has a right to talk on the amendment; I do not dispute that. I want the amendment reported, however, so that we may know what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 24, after the word "or," insert the words—who was a daughter of a resident citizen of the United States and herself a resident or former resident thereof, or the minor daughter or daughters of such woman, she being deceased; or.

PUEBLO INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, we have been engaged in a very hurried consideration of important legislation and have not been able to give expression to our understanding and debate these questions as we would have liked. The other day we passed a bill which was of very great importance to a considerable number of people. It was known as the Pueblo Indian lands bill. No time was taken then to even analyze or discuss the provisions of that bill. I imagine that it is a precedent for the Senate to have considered that bill and passed it with the little information which it had at the time. I think it was a very great compliment to the committee which reported that bill that the Senate should have thus enacted it.

Inasmuch as a number of people are interested in the measure, I believe it advisable that there should be put into the RECORD a brief analysis of the bill. The questions are of importance, and a great many people are interested in them. So I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, the bill as it passed, and a brief analysis of the provisions and purposes of the bill which I have here prepared. We will thus avoid consuming the time of the Senate in presenting it to the Senate.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

An act (S. 3855) to quiet the title to lands within Pueblo Indian land grants, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to quiet title to various lots, parcels, and tracts of land in the State of New Mexico for which claim shall be made by or on behalf of the Pueblo Indians of said State as hereinafter provided, the United States of America, in its sovereign capacity as guardian of said Pueblo Indians, shall, by its Attorney General, file in the district court of the United States for the district of New Mexico, its bill or bills of complaint with a prayer for discovery of the nature of any claim or claims of any kind whatsoever adverse to the claim of said Pueblo Indians, as hereinafter determined.

SEC. 2. That there shall be and hereby is established a board to be known as "Pueblo Lands Board," to consist of the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and a third member to be appointed by the President of the United States. The board shall be provided with suitable quarters in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex., and shall employ such clerical assistance, interpreters, and stenographers with such compensation as the Attorney General shall deem adequate, and it shall be provided with such necessary supplies and equipment as it may require on requisitions to the Department of Justice. The compensation and allowance for travel and expenses of the member appointed by the president shall be fixed by the Attorney General.

It shall be the duty of said board to investigate, determine, and report and set forth by metes and bounds, illustrated where necessary by field notes and plats, the lands within the exterior boundaries of any land granted or confirmed to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico by any authority of the United States of America, or acquired by said Indians as a community by purchase or otherwise, title to which the said board shall find not to have been extinguished in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the board shall not include in their report any claims of non-Indian claimants who, in the opinion of said board after investigation, hold and occupy lands of which they have had adverse possession within the terms of the limitations or either of them prescribed in section 4 of this act: Provided, however, That if all the members of the board shall not agree that the Indian title is not extinguished to any tract or tracts of land, then such tract or tracts of land shall be included in the lands which shall be claimed for said Indians.

The board shall report upon each pueblo as a separate unit and shall complete its report upon one pueblo before taking up another, and upon the completion of each report one copy shall be filed with the United States district court for the district of New Mexico, one with the Attorney General of the United States, one with the Secretary of the Interior, and one with the Board of Indian Commissioners.

That in the event there is submitted to the Pueblo land board any claim or claims originating during the 20-year period provided for in subsection (a) of section 4 of this act under and by virtue of a deed or deeds, or a contract for a deed or deeds, entered into by the authorities of any pueblo with such claimant or claimants in behalf of such pueblo, then the board shall not report such claim or claims for suit to quiet title, but shall investigate all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, the value of the improvements upon and extent of use of the land claimed, and shall report the facts fully to the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn shall report the same to Congress with his recommendations in the premises: Provided, however, That if after one year from the date of the transmittal to Congress of the recommendation by the Secretary of the Interior no action has been taken pursuant thereto, then the claimant or claimants shall be served with process in the appropriate suit to quiet title and his or their rights shall be litigated in the same manner as would any other claim under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That if it shall appear that any of the claims above mentioned in this paragraph originated prior to June 20, 1910, such claims shall, if the governing authorities of the pueblo interested in the premises shall file with the said board their written approval thereof, be recognized as valid and disposed of in the manner provided for the disposition of the claims included in the provisions of section 10 of this act.

SEC. 3. That upon the filing of each report by the said board, the Attorney General shall cause to be filed in the United States district court for the district of New Mexico, as provided in section 1 of this act, a suit to quiet title to the lands described in said report as Indian lands, the Indian title to which is not extinguished.

SEC. 4. That all persons other than Pueblo Indians claiming title to or ownership of any lands involved in any such suit or suits, may, in addition to any other legal or equitable defenses which they may have, plead limitation of action, as follows, to wit:

(a) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed for more than twenty years next preceding the passage of this act, under color of title.

(b) That in themselves, their ancestors, grantors, privies, or predecessors in interest or claim of interest, they have had open, notorious, actual, exclusive, continuous, adverse possession of the premises claimed for more than thirty years, next preceding the passage of this act, with claim of ownership, but without color of title.

SEC. 5. The plea of such limitations, successfully maintained, shall entitle the claimants so pleading to a decree in favor of them, their heirs, executors, successors, and assigns for the premises so claimed by them respectively, or so much thereof a may be thus established, which shall have the effect of a deed of quitclaim as against the United States and said Indians and a decree in favor of claimants upon any other ground shall have a like effect.

The United States may plead with like effect in favor of the pueblo or any individual Indian thereof, as the case may be, the said limitations hereinbefore defined.

SEC. 6. That all lands, the title to which is determined in said suit, or suits, shall where necessary, be surveyed and mapped under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at the expense of the United States, but such survey shall be subject to the approval of the judge of the United States district court and if approved by said judge shall be filed in said court and become a part of the decree, or decrees, entered in said district court.

SEC. 7. That necessary costs in all original proceedings under this act, to be determined by the court, shall be taxed against the United States, and any party aggrieved by any final judgment or decree, shall have the right to a review thereof by appeal or writ of error or other process, as in other cases, but upon such appeal being taken each party shall pay his own costs.

SEC. 8. That in the sense in which used in this act, the word "purchase" shall be taken to mean the acquisition of community lands by the Indians other than by grant or donation from a sovereign.

SEC. 9. That any person not impleaded in any such action, and claiming any interest in the premises involved, may be made a party defendant thereto, or may intervene in such action, setting up his claim in usual form.

SEC. 10. That as to all lands within the exterior boundaries of any lands granted or confirmed to the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, by any authority of the United States of America, or acquired by said Indians as a community by purchase or otherwise and which have not been claimed for said Indians by the findings and report of the board as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause notice to be published in some newspaper or newspapers of general circulation issued, if any there be, in the county in which the said lands, or some part of them are located, otherwise in some newspaper or newspapers of general circulation published nearest to such lands, once a week for five successive weeks, setting forth as nearly as may be the names of claimants of land holdings within said exterior boundaries and not embraced within the lands claimed for said Indians as aforesaid, with a description of such several holdings as shown by a survey of Pueblo Indian lands heretofore made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and commonly known as the Joy survey, or as may be otherwise shown, and requiring that any person or persons claiming such described parcel or parcels of land adversely to the apparent claimant or claimants so named as aforesaid, or their heirs or assigns, shall, on or before the thirtieth day after the last publication of such notice file his or their adverse claim in the United States land office in the land district wherein such parcel or parcels of land are situate, in the nature of a contest, stating the nature and basis of such adverse claim, and notice of such contest shall be served upon the claimant or claimants named in the said notice, in the same manner as in cases of contest of homestead entries; if no such contest is instituted as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the claimant or claimants named in the said notice a patent or other certificate of title for the parcel or parcels of land so described in the said notice; but if a contest be filed, it shall proceed and be heard and decided as contests of homestead entries are heard and decided, under the rules and regulations of the General Land Office pertinent therefo. Upon such contest either party may claim the benefit of the provisions of section 4 of this act, to the same effect as if he were a party to a suit to quiet title brought under the provisions hereof and the successful party, shall receive a patent or certificate of title. Any patent or certificate of title issued to non-Indian claimants under the provisions of this act shall have the effect only of a relinquishment of title by the United States of America and the said Indians and shall not affect the adverse rights of any other party or parties whatsoever. If the names of the claimants of such parcel or parcels of land are unknown, and after such notice more than one person or group of persons united in interest makes claim in such land office adversely to each other, the register and receiver shall require them to set forth in writing the nature of their respective claims, and thereupon the said claims shall be heard and decided as if they were made in a contest in the first instance. All patents or certificates of title which may be issued in accordance with this act shall be in such form as to convey the title of the United States and said Indians to the grantee, naming him, and to his heirs and legal representatives.

SEC. 11. That if any non-Indian party to any such suit shall assert against the Indian title a claim based upon a Spanish or Mexican grant, and if the court should finally find that such claim by the non-Indian is superior to that of the Indian claim, no final decree or judgment of ouster of the said Indians shall be entered or writ of possession or assistance shall be allowed against said Indians, or any of them, or against the United States of America acting in their behalf, unless it shall be found that such non-Indian claimant shall also be entitled to said land under the provisions of section 4 as herein provided. In such case the court shall ascertain the area and value of the land thus held by any non-Indian claimant under such superior title, excluding therefrom the area and value of lots or parcels of land the title to which has been found to be in other persons by adverse possession under the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That any findings by the court under the provisions of this section may be reviewed on appeal or writ of error at the instance of any party aggrieved thereby, in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as if such findings were a final judgment or decree. When such finding adverse to the Indians claim has become final, the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress the facts, including the area and value of the land so adjudged against the Indian claim, with his recommendations in the premises.

SEC. 12. That when any claimant, other than the United States for said Indians, fails to sustain his claim to any parcel of land within any Pueblo Indian grant, purchase, or donation under the provisions of this act, but has held and occupied any such parcel in good faith, claiming the same as his own, and the same has been improved, the value of the improvements upon the said parcel of land shall be found by the court, and reported by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress with his request for appropriations to pay such claimants for such improvements at the valuation so found by the court.

SEC. 13. That if any land adjudged against any claimant be situate among lands adjudicated or otherwise determined in favor of non-Indian claimants and apart from the main body of the Indian land, and the Secretary of the Interior deems it to be for the best interest of the Indians that such parcels so adjudged against the non-Indian claimant be sold, he may, with the consent of the governing authorities of the pueblo, order the sale thereof, under such regulations as he may make, to the highest bidder for cash, and if the buyer thereof be other than the losing claimant, the purchase price shall be used in paying to such losing claimant the adjudicated value of the improvements aforesaid, if found under the provisions of section 12 hereof, and the balance thereof, if any, shall be paid over to the proper officer, or officers, of the Indian community, but if the buyer be the losing claimant, and the value of his improvements has been adjudicated as aforesaid, such buyer shall be entitled to have credit upon his bid for the value of such improvements so adjudicated.

SEC. 14. That the pleading, practice, procedure, and rules of evidence shall be the same in all causes arising under this act as in other civil causes in the Federal courts, except as otherwise herein provided.

Passed the Senate February 28, 1923.

Attest:

GEORGE A. SANDERSON, Secretary.

MEMORANDUM ON SUBSTITUTE FOR ORIGINAL BILL, S. 3855.

The bill provides for a commission, to be called "The Pueblo lands board," composed of the Attorney General of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and a third member, to be appointed by the President. The board will determine out of court the area of lands claimed by non-Indians to which the Indian title has been extinguished, and compile a report on each pueblo showing the lands to which the Indian title has not been extinguished. The report will form the basis for a suit to quiet title, to be brought in the Federal court by the Attorney General, covering the lands to be claimed for the Indians pursuant to the findings in it. Thus only the claims included in the report will be litigated, and those excluded by the board will be approved and patented without expense of any character whatsoever to the claimant. It was stated at the hearings before the Senate committee that due to the existence of ancient towns and settlements like Taos, Espanola, Chamita, and Bernalillo on Pueblo lands, the title to which in the non-Indians could not be questioned, a preliminary investigation such as the board is authorized to conduct would result in the approval out of court of 80 per cent of the claims in number, although not in area, and that such claimants should not be put to any expense in the matter. It is the intent of the bill, therefore, to provide the machinery to accomplish that purpose.

In approving any claim the board must be unanimous in its decision. It shall exclude from the report lands the title to which has been acquired by adverse possession under color of title for a period of 20 years, or by adverse possession under claim of ownership for a period of 30 years, but since a dissent on the part of one member of the board would throw such claim into litigation it is believed the Indian's rights are well safeguarded. In any event, no mere squatter's right could give title to the claimant.

When the report is filed the Attorney General will direct suits to quiet title to be brought on the lands covered by it, and the statute of limitation mentioned in the preceding paragraph may be pleaded in addition to any other defense with like effect by both Indians and the non-Indian claimants. If the non-Indian claimant wins, he obtains a patent without cost in the same manner as those whose claims were approved and excluded from the suits in the first instance by the board.

Claims based upon Spanish and Mexican grants can only prevail when the title is superior to that of the Indians, and when that is found to be the case the Indians can not be ousted unless the claimant is and has been in actual possession pursuant to section 4. Where the court has found against the Indians on the question of the superiority of title, the value of the land in conflict is then appraised and the findings transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, who reports to Congress, which may compensate the claimant accordingly by an appropriation. The Indians do not lose the land.

Similarly where a claimant fails to make good his claim against the Indians, an appraisal of his improvements is made by the court and the same procedure is followed as in the preceding paragraph. Thus a good-faith claimant may get back the value of his improvements, although he loses the land, which goes to the Indians.

To cover cases where small holdings apart from the main body of the Indian lands may be lost by claimants, and yet such lands, because of their location, might not be desirable to the Indians, it is provided that if the Indians give consent the lands may be put up at public auction and sold for cash, the proceeds of the lands without improvements to go to the Indians.

In an amendment offered by me and passed it is provided that when a claim is submitted to the board which originated in a deed or a contract for a deed with the authorities of the pueblo during the 20-year period of the statute of limitations in section 4 the board shall value the improvements upon the land and refer it to the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn shall report the matter to Congress with his recommendation; but if Congress fails to act within a year thereafter the claim will be included amongst those to be litigated. If such a claim originated within that period but prior to June 20, 1910, then if the governing authorities of the pueblo approve the board shall exclude the claim from lands claimed by the Indians.

I also offered an amendment drawn by the Indians' attorney, Francis C. Wilson, giving the Indians the right, under certain conditions, to designate a reputable attorney to represent them as associate counsel, but it was voted down. However, the subcommittee had the matter up informally with the Department of the Interior, and it was agreed that the Pueblos might recommend to the department a number of qualified attorneys, from which the Secretary would select one to represent them. This, I trust, will adequately cover the situation.

No appropriations for irrigation and conservation are contained in the bill, because the committee from which it was reported was without authority to insert such provisions in the bill. In any event, it would have been impossible at this Congress in the short time remaining after the bill was agreed upon to have obtained appropriations for such purposes. It is hoped that between now and the next Congress sufficient time will be afforded to enable a careful study to be made of the needs of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico for water for irrigation, and provision can then be made to meet those needs adequately. It can be safely stated Congress, always receptive to constructive suggestions looking to the helpful aid of its wards, especially when they are as worthy of that help as the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, will welcome recommendations for water development for their use and benefit as compensation for losses in land and water which they would probably suffer under any bill, however carefully framed, provided it was designed to do justice to both them and the non-Indians.

There is no provision in the bill concerning jurisdiction over the water rights or conflicts over such rights present or future. The committee which framed the law was convinced that the passage of any law at the present session of Congress would be endangered if an attempt should be made to deal with any question not necessary to the ascertainment of the boundary of the lands belonging to the Indian pueblos, which shall be Indian country within the terms of the enabling act.

In general the bill is drawn in the belief that it will safeguard the Indians against unjust and inequitable claims and do justice to the non-Indian claimants as well. The entire subject is most involved and complicated, and much thought and time has been expended upon it by Congress since early in January. It is hoped that the bill will fully justify the faith of its framers and in its actual application to the problems involved fulfill their intentions.

ORDER FOR RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, if I may have it, that when the Senate concludes its business today it take a recess until 10 o'clock in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I am not sure, under the parliamentary procedure, whether it is an amendment to the amendment or may be offered separately. I ask that it be read, and if the Chair holds that it is an amendment to the amendment, which must be offered before the adoption of the amendment, I will offer it for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the committee amendment is pending it will have to be offered as an amendment to the amendment to be in order at this time. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Utah proposes to add to the pending committee amendment:

3. (a) An individual who was at such time a citizen or subject of Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary, and that the money or other property involved, or the principal thereof, was earned by such individual while a bona fide resident of the United States, and where such individual shall be a bona fide resident of the United States at the time of the return of his money or other property to him, or

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether I am able to accept that provision, but for the purpose of shortening the consideration of this bill I accept it so far as I am able to do so.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill has been before the Senate now two or three hours, it seems to me. There are a lot of bills on the calendar that have passed the House and which should pass the Senate. Unless they are passed very promptly there will be no chance of passing them. It would seem to me the pending bill should be expedited. If it is not out of the way pretty soon, then it will not pass at all, unless some other legislation passes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think if we would consider this bill to the exclusion of other matters, we could dispose of it within 10 minutes.

Mr. WARREN. I think the proposition advanced by the Senator from Mississippi is correct. It is due the House that we should dispose of their bills now on our calendar after we have disposed of the pending bill.

AMENDMENT OF WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for a few minutes,

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment if he can do so without losing the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will, if I may do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has kindly consented that I may again ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14401) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act, provided we can get an immediate vote on it, and I understand that can be done.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I make that request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he is also in favor of the amendment of the Alien Property Custodian act?

Mr. HEFLIN. I voted to take it up.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will not the Senator from Alabama permit us to pass the bill, which would require, I think, only a very few minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I know; and now the calendar is in such a state, and we are in such a state over here, that I can not discuss anything else until morning. It is the only bill which we have got up which I can discuss at length, and the Senator must pardon me while I speak.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator from Iowa will let this bill go through. The Senator from Alabama, I understand, is willing to let this bill go through, so that we shall make some progress by letting this one go through, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14401) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senators.

Mr. HEFLIN resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4245) to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enactment of the tariff act of 1922 and all other customs revenue laws, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14435) making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

The message further announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3580. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.;

S. 3874. An act granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River;

S. 4503. An act granting the consent of Congress to Bethlehem Steel Co. to construct a bridge across Humphreys Creek, at or near the city of Sparrows Point, Md.;

S. 4592. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Eagle Pass & Piedras Negras Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande between Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico;

S. 4631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across Sulphur River at or near Paces Ferry, in said counties and State; and

S. 4638. An act authorizing the Great Northern Railway Co. to maintain and operate, or reconstruct, maintain, and operate, its bridge across the Columbia River at Marcus, in the State of Washington.

The message also further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House has signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2984. An act for the relief of Thurston W. True;

H. R. 5918. An act for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.; and

H. R. 14050. An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to income tax of nonresident aliens.

INVESTIGATION INTO SALE OF FERTILIZERS (S. DOC. NO. 347).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting in response to Senate Resolution 307, agreed to June 17, 1922, a report on certain phases of the fertilizer industry, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

THE LEGISLATIVE SITUATION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senate passed a very important act here not many weeks ago providing for the Government to buy some nitrate of soda to help the distressed farmers in the boll weevil infected area of the United States. I understand that the leader of the majority in the House and the acting Speaker of the House will not permit that measure to come before the House for a vote. If those are to be the tactics over there, why not filibuster to death every bill that comes over here from the House? We can do it. We have but a few hours remaining of this session.

Twenty-six millions of people are in distress on account of the ravages of the boll weevil, and the Senate, by an almost unanimous vote, passed the nitrate bill, and it has been in the House for several weeks. I understand the present Speaker of the House promised Mr. POU, of North Carolina, that he would recognize him to bring up the bill, but it has not been done. Now we are told that the majority leader has said he would not permit it to come up. If that is the case, why not fight on this side and prevent House measures from coming up over here? I am not willing to sit silent and permit their measures to go through here when they are holding up and throttling this measure at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Would the Senator do an injustice to deserving claimants and litigants and others interested in measures pending before the Senate simply because another body is holding up a measure in which he is interested? I do not think the Senator would do that for a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I would not do an injustice to claimants. But the Senator from Kansas is an able man, a very influential man in the Republican Party, and he and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] could get busy with the Republican leaders of the House and get action on the nitrate bill. There is only one way now to get that bill through and that is to fight, and I am ready to enter the battle upon the subject.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not claim to have any influence either in the Senate or the House, but I will state to the Senator that I have already exercised all the influence I could to help get the bill through the House. I commenced four or five days ago on the proposition.

Mr. HEFLIN. What does the Senator think about it now?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not any late reports on it. The last I heard was what the Senator just stated.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator try to get a report within the next hour?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator could not do that. The Senator from Kansas is busy here and can not lobby; he can not go over to the House and lobby a bill through that body.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is not a matter of lobbying a bill through the House. It is a matter of getting right done to a people in distress. We voted here to appropriate money for the drought-stricken farmers of the Northwest, and I did it cheerfully. We gave it to them. The House passed a bill, and the Republican Senate tried to pass it, donating $5,000,000 to Liberia to pay debts owed to Wall Street. The Senate and House voted $20,000,000 to Russia to help a foreign people in distress. We are just asking for half that amount to be loaned for three months' time to the farmers of the South, every nickel of it to be paid back, and we are told that, in the closing hours of this session, the leader of the House has said that he would not permit the bill to come up if he could prevent it. Why should we permit any of their bills to pass through the Senate if those are the tactics to be employed over there?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator has said with reference to the importance of the nitrate bill which is now in the House. We passed it through the Senate; but, unfortunateiy, if we hold up the pending bill, it will be a pretty serious matter. We are then holding up some of our own bills that are on the calendar—bills that have passed the House but which can not become the law if we hold up the pending measure. Unless we do pass some of the bills now on the calendar, they can not become laws at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. May I add that my intention is to ask unanimous consent at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill to devote an hour to unobjected bills on the calendar, so that we may get through with the House bills at least.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will permit us to have unanimous consent, and that no one else will object to it.

Mr. CURTIS. I am going to submit the request just as soon as we finish the pending bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the pending bill would take 10 minutes to conclude if we should proceed with its consideration alone.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I shall be surprised if it does not take 10 hours.

A Member of the House has announced on the floor that faith had been broken with him; that a promise was made to permit the bill to come up, but the promise has not been kept. If that is true, what are we to do who come from the cotton-growing States where the boll-weevil ravages have reduced the crop to about 9,000,000 bales? Here we are trying to get the Government to aid in providing some nitrate of soda that we might hurry the crop and push it at an early date before the boll weevil gets in its work.

Some gentlemen have said that they do not believe in that sort of business. I do not believe in the Government going into business in competition with private enterprise in normal times and in ordinary transactions, but there is not a business concern in the South that is able to make this transaction. Nobody but the Government can make it. The Government has made it once before, and the Government got every dollar back. The Government takes no risk at all. I want to remind Senators what they are doing, and some Members of the House can read it in the RECORD when they say that the Government ought not to go into this sort of business. Let me tell you what was done.

Under the Federal reserve banking act anybody can come with good collateral, 60 per cent commercial and 40 per cent gold, and make the Government start its printing press and print money and take it out by the stack. They can use it and loan it out at high rates of interest, and the Government does not get a cent for it.

But if the farmers ask that the Government take its boats and go to Chile and bring nitrate here to help those farmers in distress to produce cotton and then pay back to the Government exactly what the Government has paid out, so that the Government does not lose a cent, what are they told? Some of these high-brow gentlemen say the Government ought not to go into that kind of business, that it is paternalism. What is the other? If one is paternalism, the other is paternalism. If those who have commercial collateral and gold collateral can go to the Treasury and have the Federal Reserve Board order money printed—Federal reserve notes by the hundreds and millions—and lend it to you and me at any rate of interest they can get, and use it until it serves their purpose and return it to the Government to be destroyed and never pay the Government a cent, why can not this aid be rendered to the farmers of my section and the people of that portion of the country who are dependent upon the cotton industry?

Not in favor of the Government going into that sort of business? This Congress passed a bill paying back to the big taxpayers money already paid into the Treasury—to the favored sons of the Republic—some seventy-odd million dollars. There are no little fellows who got any money back. It does not go to the fellows in the common walks of life. The plain people do not get any money back. But the big fellows who enjoy special favor at the hands of the Republican Party are the ones who get it back. They got back seventy-odd million dollars just a few weeks ago. That bill was passed without batting an eye; but when it comes to asking that the Government lend us $10,000,000 to aid the people who have been deflated until their property was destroyed, their homes and farms all mortgaged, and debts piled on them that they can not discharge in five years, we are told we ought not to stand in the way of other just measures. There is no more just measure than the one for which I am contending here to-day.

We should cooperate. If we did not, we never could pass any measure. If the Senate did not have regard for what the House does and wants done, and if the House does not have regard for what the Senate does and wants done, how can we get any measures passed? If we can not produce cotton, as my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] suggests, we can not run our cotton mills. We will shut down those industries and would turn hundreds of thousands of people out of employment, because somebody has a rule in his pocket that will not permit a bill to be brought out to give the House a chance to vote on it. Then they talk about expediting business over here.

I have several documents on my desk that would make very interesting reading between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow morning. I took about half of these breastworks down to-day, hoping I would not have to resort to them again. I am afraid I shall have to have them brought back.

The deflation policy of the Republican Party is a good subject to discuss. Mr. President, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 27, 1922, Mr. WINGO, Member of Congress from the State of Arkansas, made a speech in the House in which he said:

> The bill authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to establish progressive rates of discount passed both Houses practically unanimously for reasons which I shall give, and if I make any mistake I challenge my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], the Republican chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, to rise in his seat and correct me.
> The reasons were that Governor Harding had come before our committee and represented that it was necessary to give the board this authority in order to check the speculation and inflation of credits in New York City. We were led to believe that the sole object of the proposed progressive rate of discount law was to check the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and when those of us from the agricultural States suggested the ruin that might ensue to the farmers of the South and West if high rates were charged in that section, Governor Harding assured us that his object was to check speculative credits in New York and conserve legitimate credits for the moving of the coming crop. By reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 31, 1920, it will be seen that the Republican chairman of the committee discussed the bill at length in presenting it to the House and called attention to the fact that there was a good deal of speculation in the big cities. He specifically said that a good deal of the excessive borrowings were doubtless used for financing speculation or for new ventures that were of doubtful economic value.

[At this point Mr. HEFLIN yielded to Mr. MCCUMBER for the consideration of House bill 14401.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this reading is right in the line with what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] stated. He stated that Governor Harding came up here and told him that the board wanted this progressive interest rate in order that they might prevent speculation in the big cities; that New York was getting more money than she was entitled to. I have said before, and I wish to repeat, that I think he deliberately deceived the Senate and that he deliberately undertook to deceive the House of Representatives. I think that he knew when he was trying to get authority to impose the progressive rate of interest, which legislation has just been repealed by the amendment offered by me in the Senate, that the progressive interest rate would be applied to the grain-growing West and to the cotton-producing South; that it would do just what it did—drive Liberty bonds into Wall Street where the bond sharks there could buy them for $85 on the $100; that it would drive wheat, corn, and oats down to a point where the speculators would make millions and millions out of the deal; that it would drive cotton down, as it did drive it down, from 40 cents a pound to 10 cents a pound, and the gamblers in Wall Street made $150 a bale in the transaction.

I previously intimated that he had something to do with the speculation. I believe, as I live and God reigns, that Governor Harding himself made money out of speculation in cotton. I do not know how many of his coconspirators made money along with him. I again assert that there never has been a crime in my day like the deflation conspiracy which was then pulled off.

I used to stand here, Mr. President, and say that there was a conspiracy; that they met behind closed doors; that they deliberately planned this thing, and that they cautioned each other to say nothing, not to tell the public what was going to happen. I exhibited in this Chamber a day or two ago a little pamphlet purporting to be a stenographic report of the proceedings of that secret conference where this conspiracy was formed and where deflation was born. That little pamphlet tells the tale. When the meeting was over Governor Harding got up and said to those present that they must not tell anybody what had happened; he invoked secrecy. He told them not to tell the newspapers anything about what had occurred regarding rediscount rates. He knew that rediscount rates were the live wires of that whole situation, and he did not want anybody to get an inkling about what they intended to do.

Mr. President, I once before said, and I desire to repeat, that there were wealthy men in this country, men who speculate on the exchanges, men who buy stocks and bonds, men who deal in cotton and grain, who would have given anything on earth to have had the information possessed by Governor Harding and those with him in the conference on that dreadful day and night. There was a fortune in it; there were millions in it. The man who knew what was going to happen could go on the exchange and sell stocks with absolute assurance that when the button was touched and the bell commenced to ring around the Republic a crash was on and his fortune was made. What else was there to do? The man who sold stocks on the exchange knew that as soon as deflation broke over the country prices would go down, and the lower the prices went the more money he would make. That was what happened.

Some writers tell us that when Napoleon lost the Battle of Waterloo and Wellington was triumphant, Rothschild hurried back to London and reported in the nighttime that Wellington had lost and that Napoleon, the "man of destiny," had triumphed. Stocks and bonds went tumbling down. Rothschild bought them galore, and the next day, when the news came that Napoleon had not won, but that Wellington had been triumphant, stocks and bonds went up by leaps and bounds, and Rothschild made his fortune. So, Mr. President, Rothschild had information that others in London did not have. There was no telephonic communication then; there was no telegraph wire to speed the news of the day; but Rothschild had the news; he had it in his heart; he speeded to London; he knew that he could get there before anybody else; and that was his purpose. When he spread that alarming news stocks and bonds fell dead, and he gathered them up. That was the way he made his fortune, some of the writers tell us.

Governor Harding knew what was going to happen on the stock exchange; Governor Harding knew what would happen on the grain exchange; Governor Harding knew what would happen in the cotton-growing States, that cotton would fall down and down to 8 and 10 cents a pound. Nobody knew it, however, except himself and a few conspirators. They no doubt governed themselves accordingly, prepared their plans, went in and made their investments, and then stood by as the anarchist, who waits for the bomb to explode and for the people to be crushed, for their fortunes to spring up.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield to the Senator for a question, but I can not yield the floor.

Mr. BALL. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is the bill?

Mr. BALL. It is a bill proposing reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am trying to get some reciprocity now between the Senate and the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BALL. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator again state the nature of the bill for which he desires consideration?

Mr. BALL. It is a bill to provide reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia in connection with automobiles.

Mr. HEFLIN. What I am proposing is much more important than that. I can not yield just now. I am very fond of the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia. I love them both; and I want all the joy riders to have a good time while I am speaking; I want these able, active Republican Senators to get active in another branch of Congress. We have got to get something done here for the people that I am talking about. They have been robbed

Mr. President, I was just commenting upon that situation. How much would a man give to be in the possession of the information that Governor Harding and those with him had? No wonder he did not want the newspaper boys to have the news. If it had been flashed over the country that they were going to raise the rediscount rate, stocks would have commenced to tumble rapidly and these men would not have got in at the peak; but they waited; they said, "Let the people sleep; do not wake them until we are ready to give out a statement." So the people slept over the inferno that these men were erecting beneath them. What happened? Mr. President, the purchasing power of the South was destroyed; the purchasing power of the West was destroyed; the debt-paying power of the South was destroyed, as the debt-paying power of the West was destroyed, but—

> What care we for wrongs and crimes?
> It's dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes.

That is what they were after. "Do not tell the newspaper boys."

Mr. President, I remember when this awful drive broke. An election was coming on. Secretary McAdoo talked to Governor Harding, or wrote to him, and tried to get him to let up on deflation. The President sent a message to him, I have been told by his secretary, asking him to let up. Of course, we all know the condition of President Wilson at that time. He was lying upon his bed nearly dead. This man, Governor Harding, had been appointed by him. He had betrayed his chief and betrayed the section from which he came, and he was in touch and full swing with the big interests of Wall Street and was their active and subservient agent.

While this campaign was on, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] went to him and talked to him and tried to get him to let up on it. Other Senators who happened to be in the city here—the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. OVERMAN], and other Senators, as well as bankers from the cotton-growing States and from the West, cattlemen from these sections, and farmers from these sections—all came and called upon the governor of the board and requested him to let up. They told him what deflation was doing, but he did not let up. The election was coming on. A Republican had been nominated for President at Chicago; and what did this governor of the Federal Reserve Board, appointed by a Democrat, do? I want to say for him that I think he conducted his office very well and honestly up to the time that President Wilson got down sick and was not so that he could know what was going on.

After President Wilson got sick, however, and this man saw that the trend of things was toward the Republican Party he went over, lock, stock, and barrel, to the Republican Party. Sitting within a hundred yards of his stricken chief, he sent a telegram to Mr. Harding at Chicago, warmly congratulating him upon his nomination. Later on, after that same convention had adopted a platform demanding deflation and criticizing the Democrats, and Mr. Harding at Marion made a speech accepting the nomination and pledging himself to undo what Wilson (W. P. G. Harding's chief) had done, this man wired or wrote Warren G. Harding, commending and congratulating him upon his speech.

Later on, in that presidential year, when everybody knew that the people were being misled and that they were going to elect a Republican, he went out to Marion. He journeyed not to Jericho but to Marion, Ohio, to see the President-to-be, and there I would have loved to see him bowing and smiling most blandly to the man that he knew would have the appointing power and could either remove him or retain him in his place.

Oh, Mr. President, that is an awful picture—a man exalted by a Democratic President, put into this position of trust, who conducted his office well for a time, then, hungry for the fleshpots of Egypt, yearning for favor with those who dispense Republican patronage, he went over to them, soul and body—if he had any soul. What was he doing? He was doing everything he could to help elect a Republican ticket and a Republican President; and after the Republican President got in, Mr. President, this man was not content with the general knowledge that Republican leaders had of his betrayal of the Democratic Party and of his subserviency and timely service to the Republican Party. An article appeared in the Washington Times, and I think he had it written, when the President had not been in office a month, and that article read like this:

> While Governor Harding was appointed governor of the board by President Wilson, it is known that he supported the Republican ticket and did what he could to elect it. This has placated Republican leaders, and it is said that Harding will retain his place.

I read that statement on the floor of the Senate at the beginning of the drive that I made upon him and his deadly deflation policy. Nobody has ever denied it, and I said then that that paper predicted that he would retain his place, and I said: "He is retaining it," and I now say that he did retain it until by law his term expired on August 9, 1922. He served in that capacity from the time the President went into the White House until August of last year. He served over that period when I was talking into this RECORD indictment after indictment against him and was marking those RECORDS and mailing them to the President, besides writing him a letter seven and a half pages long giving him the history of this man's conduct and telling him that he could not afford, as President of the United States, to give sanction to the record of a man like that.

Some of the papers said that if this man went out of office he would go to New York, where he would be paid $100,000 a year. "Well," I said, "they ought to appreciate his services up there. He enabled them to make not hundreds of thousands of dollars but many hundreds of millions. They certainly are under great obligations to him." But he held on in the position of governor. When, however, his time finally did expire, I got an editorial or an article from the Journal of Commerce, after they thought the pendulum was swinging back toward Governor Harding. They thought that the pendulum had swung off; that he was not going to be reappointed, but they had a little squib that read like this:

> The pendulum seems to be swinging back to Harding. Mellon is using all of his influence to have him reappointed.

And who is Mellon? The Republican Secretary of the Treasury, using his influence to have Mr. Harding reappointed governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Why, Mr. President, there never was such a propaganda carried on as they carried on. They sent Federal reserve agents around to district bankers' conventions, to State bankers' conventions, and they finally had their cohorts and henchmen up at New York at the convention of the American Bankers' Association. They wanted to get the State bankers' associations to indorse him. Then they wanted the American Bankers' Association to indorse him. Then they wanted to go to the President and say: "The bankers have indorsed him, and you ought to reappoint him."

I reminded the President in my letter that there were more people interested in this banking system than the bankers, and I wrote a letter to Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, in which I inclosed a copy of my letter to the president of the American Bankers' Association in which I quoted the language of Governor Harding, practically saying that deflation was not necessary; that they had financed the World War, carried on all of our business transactions at home, and floated the Liberty bonds under the Federal reserve system without expanding too much, without even approaching the legal reserve. He said it was capable of being expanded more without touching the legal reserve, and very much more by resorting to that reserve, and I said: "Why, then, did we have deflation? We provided that reserve for this purpose. If we get in a tight place, if a panic threatens, if business stagnation seems coming on—go to the reserve. That is what we put it there for—to aid us on a rainy day, in a stormy time." Here was the governor of the board saying that that fund would save us; that all these other things had been done without even resorting to it; and that we could now do more without resorting to it and very much more by resorting to it. Then I said to Mr. Edmonds: "If the American Bankers' Association does indorse him I am going to introduce a resolution calling on the bankers of the country to tell how many of them speculated in bonds during deflation and what prices they paid for them"; and he wrote me back that that was an excellent idea; if such a resolution was passed, by all means to introduce my resolution, and I intended to do it. I intended to bring these bankers before the country and say to them:

"You voted to indorse this man for governor, did you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"You are in the banking business?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you buy any bonds during that period?"

"Yes, sir."

"How many did you buy?"

"One hundred thousand, two hundred thousand, five hundred thousand dollars, and so on."

"What did you pay?"

"I paid $85 on the hundred for some, $82.50 for some, $80 for some."

"What are your bonds worth now, Mr. Banker?"

"Oh, they are worth $100 on the hundred, and I am clipping coupons at 4½ per cent."

"That was what you were doing during deflation, was it?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you indorsed Governor Harding for reappointment?"

"Yes, sir."

"He has been very kind to you; has he not?"

"Yes, sir; I guess so."

"He enabled you to make many thousands of dollars on bonds; did he not?"

"Yes."

But what was he doing for the poor fellow who borrowed money to buy them, who not only sent his boys to the battle front but stinted himself and went into debt at home to buy bonds when the Government asked him to do it to save the life of his Nation from the dangers that threatened it? What about him? Did the banker have any consideration for him? Is that the way to promote patriotism in America? Is that the way to build up a stalwart citizenship in America—for the Government institution to become the handy instrument of the gamblers and the speculators of the land, fostering wealth in the hands of a few, and spreading ruin among the ranks of the many?

"Yes, Mr. Banker; you indorsed Governor Harding for reappointment. Do you think that is an honest act? You had in mind, did you, the fact that he had enabled you, by his crooked subserviency to certain interests, to drive these Liberty bonds down in value and to enable you to buy them at this low price? That is why you have indorsed him, probably."

Oh, Mr. President, I can see with my mind's eye now what occurred in my country. I have heard witnesses before the Committee on Agriculture tell with tears in their eyes what occurred in the West. I can see the men in my section coming up with their cotton, the price falling like leaves in autumn, down, down, down. Everywhere the farmer looked he was confronted with falling prices. What is the price to-day? Thirty-five cents. After two or three days, what is the price now? Thirty cents. Then, in two or three days, what is the price now? Twenty-five cents. He said, "That is $25 a bale below the cost of production, and I am ruined."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just a moment? The Senator did not make clear to the other side just how the House was treating the bill in which the southern farmers are very much interested. Nearly every Southern State had Representatives who went before the Rules Committee, and the Rules Committee unanimously passed a rule allowing a vote on the $10,000,000 revolving fund, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas presiding at that meeting. He has been presiding in the House and will not let the southern Representatives get that bill before the House. That is a matter they are very much interested in. They have acted in bad faith about it. They told our people that if they would wait until after the rural credits bill was passed that bill should come up next. They have gone back on their word, and the Senator from Alabama is justified in seeing that the House bills are held up until the House carries out its word of honor.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama did not make it plain that we have voted millions for the western farmers. This bill will not give a cent to a southern farmer. Every bit of this calcium arsenate and sodium nitrate is sold for cash. The Government tried this once before and did not lose a dollar. They made money on it. We are not asking them to give us anything; we are simply asking them to buy this nitrate so that the farmers can get it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank my friend from Georgia. I had already commented on that while my friend was out of the Chamber, but he was present at the hearing before the Rules Committee, and he has stated what transpired there. It was impossible for me to be present that morning.

Mr. DIAL. The Government also has the ships to bring the product in.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; Mr. President. Now I am going to discuss these subjects and it will take me two or three hours, and I should have plenty of time.

The Government has the ships, but we are talking about giving the ships away, talking about selling three thousand million dollars' worth of ships for $200,000,000, losing to the Government twenty-eight hundred million dollars in the deal, and then turn right around and give to those to whom we give the ships $50,000,000 a year to run them, and open the Treasury to them and loan money at 2 per cent. Yet this Congress in the closing hours can not find time or disposition to pass a bill that will not lose the Government one cent, and will be worth millions to 28,000,000 American people in the cotton-growing States of the Union.

We have the ships, as the Senator from South Carolina suggested. Let us take those ships and go to Chile, the farmers in the South paying the running expenses of them. We pay the wages and everything. The Government does not lose a cent. The Government takes this fund and gets this nitrate of soda, and takes it down to those people in distress, bound down in the bondage of debt, confronted with the ravages of the boll weevil. Experts tell us that the boll weevil destroyed a billion dollars' worth of cotton last year. And yet, we can not get action here in the closing hours.

Senators rise and say, "The Senator would not permit this measure or that measure to fail, would he?" What are these small measures compared to the destiny, the well-being, and the prosperity of millions of people in this country?

I was drawing a picture of what occurred in the South. The farmer came up and he said, "I must have money; cotton now is selling below the cost of production; if I sell it now, I will lose all of my investment for this year; I will lose the time I have spent, and everything, and it will leave me in a very bad shape."

The banker says, "What are you going to do?"

The farmer says, "I came up to get you to loan me some money on my cotton; I have borrowed it here before when the price went down, and I want to borrow some now, because it is below the cost of production; I want to keep it from going any lower."

I saw this farmer go up to the bank, and the banker said. "I would love to loan you this money, but I have not got it; the Federal Reserve Board has sent word down the line that we must not loan any more money on agricultural products."

They talked that way here for a long time. They said no such thing ever happened; and yet in this secret conference here in Washington it was agreed that these agents would go out in the country and come face to face with the bankers and let the bankers know what they had agreed upon here toward preventing loans.

The banker said, "I am very sorry; I would love to let you have the money, but I have not got it; I have got money now tied up in the cotton I have loaned it on."

And that was true. And then, gentlemen of the Senate, the farmer said, "Well, I have some Liberty bonds—a few, maybe $500 worth. I will bring them up here and put them up, too, with my cotton."

Then the banker said, "We can not loan on Liberty bonds; word has gone out not to loan on Liberty bonds."

Mr. President, what sort of a situation is that? That may not appeal to some Senators; I do not know whether it does or not. I do not care how small the business of a citizen of this Republic is, it is as much to him as the business of Rockefeller is to him. Providing for those dependent upon him means as much to him as does such provision for the richest in the land.

Imagine the farmer coming up to a bank, where he has been doing business, where he had borrowed money on cotton before and had never been denied until now, and this secret word has gone out, under the mysterious doings of W. P. G. Harding, telling them not to let the press know, not to let the public know, but to go face to face with the bankers, break the news gently to them, and let them start the thing in practical operation. Then the fellow stands there and says, "What is cotton worth?" "Oh, 30 cents a pound, or 25 cents a pound." "I want to borrow some money to keep it from going any lower." "I would love to let you have it, but they won't rediscount our paper at the Federal reserve regional bank." And that was true. "We can not get the money." That was true. "Therefore we can not let you have the money." That was true.

Then what happened to the poor farmer? He went back home and broke the news to his wife and to his children. His wife said to him, "John, I remember when you bought those bonds. I let you have some of my money, and you put in some of the money of the children to get those bonds to help out our Government, and I remember what they told you. They told you that they were as good as gold."

He said, "That is right."

"They told you they would be good at the bank any time."

"That's right."

"That when you could not get money on anything else, you you could get it on your bonds."

"That is true"; and it was.

"And now they have declined to let you have money on the bonds?"

"Yes. It is not the fault of the local bank. The local bank has already got its money tied up in cotton. It has to get more money from the regional bank before it can loan any more, and they will not let them have any more to loan on cotton. It is a hopeless situation."

And right there he stood, like Prometheus bound to the rock, with the vultures of Wall Street plucking out his vitals. Cotton went down from 40 cents to 10 cents, and the gamblers took away $150 on the bale and laughed in ghoulish glee while the farmer pined and perished. That is what happened in the cotton-growing States.

Mr. President, when I was in my State last fall I was speaking in the seventh congressional district, up in Etowah County. I was driving out of the splendid city of Gadsden and I met a poor white farmer bringing in 1 bale of cotton, just 1. That was all he had produced owing to the presence of the boll weevil, and he had one mule hitched to a 1-horse wagon, tugging up a hill, and as I went on to my appointment we passed him, and his wife was walking behind the wagon carrying a baby 10 or 11 months old in her arms. They were pitiful, poor people. I can not get that picture out of my mind. I talked to the gentleman in the car with me as we went on. I said, "There is an evidence of what deflation has done. Deflation brought ruin here. There is a poor fellow now who has been struggling with the boll weevil, carrying in the only bale of cotton he has with which to make a payment on his debts. He will leave other debts hanging over him." He has no money to buy the things he needs, and God knows that poor wife of his and that poor baby and he himself needed things. They had every badge of poverty displayed in their appearance.

Deflation brought ruin to the people by the hundreds of thousands in my section. Those who had Liberty bonds lost them. They were forced out of their hands. The agents of Wall Street bought them up and carried them back to New York. There is where they are to-day in the strong box of the big speculators and financiers where these conspirators drove them when they brought this ruin upon the people of the South and West.

Mr. President, I was reading a little while ago from Mr. WINGO's speech in the House placing the responsibility for the deflation about which I have been talking. He continued:

> By reading the debate that day it will be seen that gentlemen from New York and Chicago protested against what they alleged this policy was aimed at then, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], in answer to their protest, called attention to the fact that there was at that time borrowed from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York $3,454,000,000 of the total of $6,241,000,000 borrowed of all the Federal reserve banks in the United States.

Think of that, Mr. President. I am afraid Senators did not get the full significance of that statement. Out of a total of $6,241,000,000 borrowed of all the Federal reserve banks of the United States, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York had loaned $3,454,000,000. Senators, the American people are not going to stand for that sort of condition. The Government does not belong to Wall Street. The Government belongs to the American people, or did. Wall Street is the dominating influence in the Republican Party, and when I referred to Wall Street in this Chamber not long ago I was not referring to any particular Senator; I was referring to the power of Wall Street over the whole Republican Party from center to circumference, from end to end.

> In other words, the entire debate discloses that the House understood the progressive rate of discount was necessary and was to be used only to check the wild speculation in New York which threatened to absorb available credits that would be much needed for agricultural and legitimate activities.

Mr. President, this simply bears out the statement that I have made time and time again. I said the effort was made to deceive Members of Congress into believing that this thing was being done in the interest of the farmers of the country. God pity the crooks who put over such a deal, saying, "Why, New York is getting more than she is entitled to. We want it so we can take care of the crops in the crop-moving time." Well, of course, Senators and Members would say, "If that is what it is going to do, that is honest business." But what did they do? When they got this provision they never did apply it to New York, not once. Pardon me for speaking plainly when I call that crooked conduct. Pardon me for speaking plainly when I say that those who perpetrated that thing were scoundrels.

Where did they apply it? They applied it in my section, where they promised and almost swore they would not apply it. Where else? They applied it in the grain and cattle growing West, where they pledged their faith and honor, if they had any, that they would not apply it. What are we going to do with that sort of conduct? What would a jury do if a man were tried before it and the charge were made that he had gotten property under the promise that he was going to deliver it to somebody and then took the property off and sold it? What would the jury do? They would convict him of obtaining the property under false pretenses and put him in the penitentiary, where he ought to be. What did these men do? Did they procure this power under false pretenses? Did they get it through the practice of deception? Did they get it by the employment of scoundrelism? How did they get it? Well, they got it.

Let me read some more. I want to get the history of this whole thing right. I have promised, and I repeat the promise, that by the help of God, if I can prevent it, no such crime as this shall ever occur again. The way to prevent the recurrence of such a crime is to excoriate, condemn, scorn, and crucify those who betrayed the public trust and brought such ruin upon the country.

I reminded the Senate a few days ago of what Old Hickory Jackson told Biddle, and as I have plenty of time I will tell it again. Old Biddle went up to the White House—brazen, bold, and arrogant. He said to President Jackson, "You have a measure up there that you want to get through. I have one I want to get through. Let us couple them together and put them through." "What is your measure?" He told him. Jackson said, "It is a bad measure, and I am not for it." "What? You are not for my measure?" "No." "Then I will not let your measure pass." Think of that—this agent of the money power talking to the President of the American people, telling him that he had such power over the people's Congress that he personally would defeat the will of the people and put to naught the power of the President.

Jackson said, "Can you do that?" He said, "Yes." Jackson said, "That is too much power for one man or one set of men to have, and I will take it from you."

In the Senate Chamber, which was then midway between this Chamber and the House, standing at midnight, speaking, Thomas Benton bared his breast to the gallery and said, "I am informed that I am to be shot, as I assail the money power in behalf of my country. If I am to be killed, let it come now while I am in the full discharge of my duty to my country." But it did not come, and Jackson's measure passed. He trimmed old Biddle of his power, and he passed his measure through the Congress.

Then Jackson said something that will live while the Republic lasts, while free speech and liberty endure: "By the eternal gods, the people shall rule"; and he triumphed. Old Biddle was sore, disgruntled, and mad. He said to Jackson, "I will contract the currency. I will deflate the credits, and I will produce a panic." Jackson's speech in reply was less than 10 words, an argument that had more weight with old Biddle than any other speech he could have made. It saved the day; and here is what he said to him: "If you do, damn you, I will hang you." That ended the matter. They did not contract the currency. They did not deflate the credits. They did not produce a panic.

Senators, the time has come when the man in the White House has to have the courage, has to have the backbone, to say to anybody, one man or a set of men, "You can not play with the prosperity of millions of Americans. You can not disturb the rank and file. You can not produce distress amongst the toiling masses. You shall not reap where you have not sown, gather where you have not planted. If you do this, I will lay the heavy hand of the law upon you. I will punish you and punish you severely." That is what has to happen.

If I had been President when the conspiracy was formed in Washington, I would have summoned these men before me. I would have read Governor Harding's statement to him. "Governor, you said in your statement that the Federal reserve system has financed the World War?" "Yes." "You said it had floated the bonds?" "Yes." "Taken care of all our business at home—increase and wonderful expansion?" "Yes." "You said it had done all of that by expanding?" "Yes." "But without even approaching the reserve?" "Yes." "You said the reserve system was capable of expanding still more without approaching the reserve?" "Yes." "And very much more by approaching the reserve?" "Yes." "I order you to go to the reserve. I would rather go to the reserve and even reduce it and save the business of the people, prevent a panic, prevent the gamblers, like vultures, from feeding on the substance of the people than to permit a crash to come and save the reserve and then boast that you have a splendid gold reserve. Not only that, Governor Harding, but you lay off of this deflation. I do not want this thing pulled off. If you start it, I will remove every one of you from office to-morrow."

That is what I would have said. If they had started something that caused a good deal of trouble before I could stop them, I would have put them in the penitentiary, every one of them, if I could have done so. What right have a few men to get together to betray a trust and misuse power and pillage and plunder the people in order to make a few men immensely rich? What right have they to do such a thing in a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people"? They have not any right to do it, Mr. President.

The greatest surprise they have had arose from the fact that somebody would go after them in reference to this matter. They never doubted their ability to hush this whole thing up. They never dreamed that when they fired broadsides with a large portion of the press which they controlled or which the interests back of them controlled that they would not drive from the scene those who dared to expose their crimes and to condemn their infamy. When they failed in that they undertook to destroy me. They sent newspaper articles into my State which were written right here in this press gallery. They printed an article down there in one of the newspapers giving the name of a man who said he had just returned from Washington to Birmingham and who made some comments criticizing me. There is not any such man in my State; there is no such citizen who lives in Birmingham; but the little hickory-nut-head that wrote that never knew that I would find it out, but I did. I know who he is, too, but he does not know that I know him. I saw him look at me the other day as though he thought I was reading his mind. I do not have much to do to read it, either. [Laughter.]

However, Mr. President, they failed. Then they sent out a notice from here that Governor Harding and his friends were going to see to it that I had opposition. However, I have defied them, and I have defied those back of them. I have defied those who enjoy the spoils of that crime. I know in my mind that they made millions. If somebody will not tell the truth about it, what are we in this Republic coming to?

Mr. President, it was as much of my business as it was that of any other Senator to expose this thing. Governor Harding came from my State. He did not belong there originally; I think he was born in the State, perhaps; but he is not really native to the soil. I do not care how many may come from my State or from any other sections of the South or any other section of the country; I believe in telling the truth about a public official. Some of the newspapers stated that I ought not to criticize him; that he was from the South. That made it more incumbent upon me to criticize him. Any man who comes out of the South—God bless her; pure as light and stainless as a star in statesmanship and integrity—and soils his garment and blackens his name, reflects upon the other citizens of the South and deserves to be scorned and condemned. I voice the sentiment of every honest man in my State and in the South in regard to Harding and his pillaging bunch.

Mr. President, I recall with pride Mr. Blaine's book entitled "Twenty Years in Congress." In that book he pays a tribute to my people. He said that during the long period when southerners dominated and controlled the Government there was never a suspicion of corruption; that there was no extravagance; the record was stamped all over with evidences of honor and integrity. I am proud of that record; I am proud of the tribute that he paid to my people. I would be false to the traditions and the best interests of my people, and to the record to which I point with pride, if I did not scorn and condemn Governor Harding and those with him who pillaged and plundered the people. So, if it was thought that they could hush up the South because Governor Harding was from the South, those who so thought reckoned without their host. That is where they were surprised. When that issue was sprung on this floor nearly every southern man here rose with one exception, I believe, and entered his protest against this man and his policy. Why should I not condemn him?

Mr. President, since the Government reserves to itself the sole right to coin money, to print money for use among the people, since the Government claims that function and permits nobody else to exercise it, it owes it to the people to see that a circulating medium of volume sufficient to serve the business needs of the people all the time is kept in the country. Is not that sound doctrine? That is not Bolshevism; that is not socialism, but it is old-time democracy; it is common Americanism and common honesty. A man can not work without tools. If you take the tools away from him which are necessary to carry on his work, you hamper him; you handicap him; you hinder him; you make it impossible for him to work; but if you let him have the tools and he has the skill and the strength, he will use the tools to produce prosperity, to provide for his family, and to contribute to the wealth of the Nation. Well, what is money—gold, silver, greenbacks, Treasury notes, Federal reserve notes—but the tool? The people are entitled to have those in abundance.

Mr. President, the fight this Government has to make is to take out of the control of Wall Street the management over the money supply and credit of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment in order that I may have something inserted in the RECORD which I am sure the Senator will be glad to have put into the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield to the Senator if it will not take me off my feet, but I can not permit any bills to pass.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not desire to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator may ask to have the matter inserted in the RECORD later.

Mr. CUMMINS. For what purpose is the Senator from Alabama asked to yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Massachusetts desires to have some paper printed in the RECORD. I do not yield the floor. I will not yield at all now.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor, I assure him.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, in order that that Senator may have something inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Massachusetts had better wait until the Senator from Alabama shall have concluded.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Massachusetts may have what he desires printed in the RECORD inserted to-morrow morning about 9 o'clock. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the statement which the Senator has made I desire to ask him if he will yield in order that we may have a vote upon this measure, and that I then may ask unanimous consent to dispose of unobjected bills on the calendar?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I can not yield for anything now, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me state that among the bills which it is desired to pass is one which was introduced by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which sends about 300 claims of cotton-oil mill owners in the South to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts. It was hoped that this bill would have been enacted with others yesterday, but the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] objected to unanimous consent. The measures on the calendar are of interest to all sections of the country, and I hope the Senator will consent to the request submitted.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope we shall get all those bills passed; I am in favor of them; but I am after the nitrate bill at the other end of the Capitol. If my friend from Kansas will use his good offices I am satisfied he can secure the passage of that bill.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator declines to yield and wants to beat that kind of a bill and all others, of course it is up to him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not propose to beat that kind of a bill, but we shall get that bill, I think. I am hoping that the body at the other end of the Capitol will act favorably on it. I hope that the Fertilizer Trust of the United States is not sufficiently powerful to prevent legislation of that character. I am fighting for a righteous cause. I never try to delay measures here; no Senator can charge that I have. I have always been agreeable to Senators and permitted them to pass their measures if meritorious, and I have not tried to stand in the way; but there is a principle involved. If it is right to permit Wall Street to bring to the United States Treasury $60,000,000 in commercial collateral and $40,000,000 in gold and have the Government turn over to her $100,000,000 in Federal reserve notes and let her take that back there and loan it around for six months and gather in the sheaves of interest and then return the Federal reserve notes to the Government and let the Government destroy them without their paying one cent of interest for the use of all that Government money, I can not sit idle and permit the Congress to deny us the right to spend $10,000,000 to buy nitrate of soda, to be paid back by the farmers of my State and the South without costing the Government a cent.

[At this point a message was received from the President of the United States.]

Mr. President, I was delivering a discourse on the necessity of having the money supply and the credits free from Wall Street control. I remember that when I was a Member of the House of Representatives years ago I discussed with other Members, as well as with men outside of Congress, the question that Wall Street literally controlled the money supply and credits of the Nation. I said that ought not to be. The Democratic Party kept preaching that doctrine until we finally got control of the House, Senate, and White House in 1912, and the first pledge that President Wilson made was to free the Government from the control of Wall Street. He did it by inaugurating the Federal reserve banking system; but when I saw that system fall into the hands of Wall Street, when I saw the Wall Street Journal contain an article saying that the control of the Federal reserve system was no longer in Washington but back in Wall Street where it belonged, I said, like "Hickory" Jackson, we ought to take that power from them. I am fighting now to take it from them. Wall Street has an interest in the Fertilizer Trust. The Fertilizer Trust does not want the nitrate of soda bill to pass. The Fertilizer Trust wants to sell nitrate of soda to the farmers of the South at a cost of $35 a ton more than the Government will sell it to them. Oh, Mr. President, there is a wheel in a wheel; there is always a reason for defeating legislation of this character.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will yield, I merely desire to present a Senate resolution and have it referred.

Mr. HEFLIN. If it will cause me to lose the floor, I can not yield, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to have a resolution referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If it will cause me to yield the floor, I can not yield, and I am told that it will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate the Presiding Officer is required not to allow a Senator to be interrupted for that purpose. The rule has not been observed. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am sorry, Mr. President; I should like to accommodate my friend.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate the situation, and will not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am fighting for what is right. If I did not know I was right in this matter, I would yield the floor. I would not undertake to fight, because it is warm, and it is hard work to speak for six or eight hours at any time. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate manifestations of approval or disapproval are not permitted.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was saying a moment ago how Wall Street controlled the money supply and credits. The time was, under Republican rule, when 21 men in Wall Street held in the hollow of their hands the business destiny of a hundred millions of people. Think of that! As a Nation we are not yet 150 years old; and with the virgin wilderness of the West, with land and natural resources abundant for all, the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few has gone on.

Centralization of power is rampant in the Republic. Washington is becoming the seat of the power of those who want to destroy the sovereignty of the States, and the money supply is back in the hands of Wall Street, and we are hastening down the way that other governments have gone that have perished. Mr. President, he who fails to cry out against it, he who fails to give notice and warning, and he who fails to suggest that we face about and go the other way is false to his oath, false to his country.

The old negroes used to sing this song down in my country:

> He chose me for a watchman
> To stand on Zion's wall;
> And if I don't prove faithful
> I'll be the least of all.

And that is true. We have been chosen; we have been put on guard; and if, for any reason, we permit the enemies of the Republic to encroach upon the strongholds of liberty and justice and right we are unfaithful to our trust and unfaithful to the people who have sent us here. What is necessary to do? To take this control away from Wall Street.

Mr. President, I have seen the time when the grain crop was ripening unto the harvest, when the wind would sweep across thousands of acres of this yellow, ripening grain in the West, and I have seen the operators on the exchanges getting ready like vultures following a stricken deer's blooddrops along the way, waiting for him to fall; I saw them waiting, and just as the farmer's grain was ready to move to the market the price broke. The farmer went to the bank and said: "I must have money. I can not afford to sell at the price I am offered," but he could not get it. That was before the Federal reserve system was established.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be very glad if the Senator from Alabama would tell the Senate the importance of the $10,000,000 revolving fund.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I object to the Senator yielding.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can not yield now. I am going to get to that before I finish. I will get to the point my friend is speaking about. I have touched on it mildly, but I will discuss it in detail early in the morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, that bill, which is pending in the House, is more important to the country than the bill which the Senator from Iowa is pressing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield now, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall insist that the Senator yields the floor if he yields.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the grain grower of the West came up and wanted money. They said, "You can not get it." "Why?" "Because we have just had a letter from Wall Street saying that we must repay the money we have already borrowed. It looks as if we are going to have a panic."

Why, "panic" was the old vehicle they rode around in under Republican rule. Whenever a crop was ripening for the harvest they got out in that old vehicle, and you could hear it rattle all over the country—"Panic! Panic! Panic!" and the price of wheat went down and they bought it up for a song, and the farmer lost his crop, and debts piled up on him, and he mortgaged his home and his farm; and that process went on for years. Then, after that was over, the cotton commenced to open, and then these fellows started their vehicle through the Cotton Belt, rattling "Panic! Panic! Panic!" and the local banker said, "I can not let you have any money, because they are calling on us to send in what we have borrowed. We have asked to have an extension made, but they say they can not do it; you must pay back what you have already got. Therefore you must dump your cotton on the market"—and the price was falling down and down. So they cleaned up the South; they got our cotton for a song.

Now, what happened? Watch: They put up the price of grain after it had gone out of the hands of the producer, and the consumer had to pay a big price. They put up the price of cotton after it went out of the hands of the producer, and the consumer had to pay an enormous price. So the speculator made the money; the producer in the West was destroyed, and the producer in the South was destroyed. Bondage? Why, yes; it was a bondage of debt that Wall Street foisted upon us.

Mr. President, as for these 21 men, these money kings, old Biddle in his palmiest days never knew what power was, compared to them. They could produce a panic in 48 hours and drag business stagnation like a skeleton all over the country, spreading ruin everywhere. That is what they could do. That is what they did do. Who was it that broke their power? Who was it that pledged himself to deliver us from that situation? Woodrow Wilson.

I want to read you what he said, Mr. President. President Wilson, in a letter to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] dated October 17, 1914, said:

> In like manner by the currency bill—

He was commenting upon the Democratic record of constructive work—

In like manner, by the currency bill we have created a democracy of credit such as has never existed in this country before. For a generation or more we have known and admitted that we had the worst banking and currency system in the world, because the volume of our currency was wholly inelastic; that is, because there was more than enough at certain seasons to meet the demands of commerce and credit, and at other times far too little; that we could not lessen the volume when we needed less nor increase it when we needed more. Everybody talked about the absurd system and its quite unnecessary embarrassments, sure to produce periodic panics; and everybody said that it ought to be changed and changed very radically; but nobody took effective steps to change it until the present Congress addressed itself to the task with genuine resolution and an intelligence which expressed itself in definite action. And now the thing is done.

Let bankers explain the technical features of the new system. Suffice it here to say that it provides a currency which expands as it is needed and contracts when it is not needed—

What did they do with the Federal reserve system? They contracted it when the currency was needed. Up to that time they had followed the President's suggestion; but when he was stricken down and was no longer cognizant of what was going on they withdrew these credits and currencies when they were needed.

Continuing, he says:

a currency which comes into existence in response to the call of every man who can show a going business—

Does not that sound like a great Democrat, a great patriot, and a great American? Let me read it over to you—a currency which comes into existence in response to the call of every man who can show a going business and a concrete basis for extending credit to him, however obscure or prominent he may be, however big or little his business transactions.

That has the right ring to it. That rings like a statesman, a statesman unafraid, a great American, a man who does not shape his creed to his cringings and swallow his convictions for a job.

More than that, the power to direct this system of credits is put into the hands of a public board of disinterested officers of the Government itself who can make no money out of anything they do in connection with it.

Somebody did make money, and I think they were connected with it.

No group of bankers anywhere can get control—

Listen to that. My God! What have they done to-day?

No one part of the country can concentrate the advantages and conveniences of the system upon itself for its own selfish advantage.

And yet the facts show us that when six billions and more had been loaned through all the 12 banks, New York had loaned a little more than half of it. That was in the year of deflation.

The board can oblige the banks of one region to go to the assistance of the banks of another.

Do you get that, Senators? This board had the power to make the New York bank go to the rescue of the bank of the Senator from Georgia and the bank of my State, the banks that serve our sections, but it did not do it. I will tell you what it did do, though, in 1919. It took money from the Atlanta bank and the Dallas bank and loaned it to some of the northern and northeastern banks to the extent of seventy-odd millions of dollars; but when we needed this money, and our people needed it badly, they never made them put a dollar down there. They did not even apply the progressive interest rate to them. They did not help us to get money. They kept us from getting it and applied the progressive interest rate to our people and literally murdered them from a business standpoint.

Let me read that to you again:

The board can oblige the banks of one region to go to the assistance of the banks of another.

That is why we said you could not produce a panic under this system. That is why we said we had created a system that defied the panic producers of the country, and never until the system was betrayed, never until its controlling power was turned over to the gamblers of Wall Street, was there a panic produced.

The whole resources of the country are mobilized—

Listen to that, Senators—to be employed where they are most needed.

Think of that. Does not that sound like a great statesman and a great American?

The whole resources of the Nation are mobilized to be used where they are most needed.

Whose Government did he talk of? The people's Government. Whose resources? The resources of the Nation. To do what? To be mobilized so that they could be used to go to the rescue of people in distress, to prevent a panic. That is what he was talking about. What did they do? Richard H. Edmunds said what Governor Harding did. He locked up the Nation's resources; he stopped the circulation of the Nation's blood. He brought paralysis to the body of this business.

I want to read that to you again, because sometimes you have to read a statement a number of times to get a Republican to properly understand it. [Laughter.]

The whole resources of the country are mobilized to be employed where they are most needed.

How honest and straightforward that is. He said:

I think——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to know whether the Senator from Alabama has yielded to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HEFLIN. No. The Senator was whispering words of encouragement, and I was still speaking, enjoying the conference with my friend, and still trying to enlighten the Republicans. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. I wanted to know whether I would have two hours to go to dinner. I am going to relieve the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. President Wilson said further:

I think we are justified in speaking of this as a democracy of credit.

Is not that a glorious expression, "a democracy of credit," for the benefit of the people of the State of the Senator from Wisconsin, who sympathizes with their struggles and their troubles, and the people of my State, hampered and hamstrung by this system, as they were running it? The President speaks of this democracy of credit, so that the hod carrier in Wisconsin, the hoe hand in my State, the mechanic at the bench, the blacksmith at the forge, the plowman walking down the cool, moist furrow of his field, the merchant in the store, and the banker in his bank could get all the money needed to keep the industrial machinery, the agricultural works of the country running prosperously.

That is the purpose of a republic. That is the purpose of a democracy. A democracy that will not furnish a circulating medium and furnish a volume of money sufficient to meet the needs of everybody all the time is a failure, and the Government that permits a very few to control its money supply and credit, to the detriment and injury of the many, to the enrichment of the few, is on the road to ruin. We owe it to this Government we love to bring it back, to put it on the course the fathers intended it should follow when they christened it, unfurled the flag above it, and invoked upon it the blessings of Almighty God.

Credit is at the disposal of every man who can show energy and assets.

That is a statement of Woodrow Wilson, God bless him. To whom is he talking? About whom is he talking? He is talking to the country; he is talking about the people who make the country. Is he talking for Wall Street? No; he is talking for his own people—Democrats and Republicans and what not in the Nation—asking a fair deal for them as the spokesman of 110,000,000 people.

Each region of the country is set to study its own needs and opportunities, and the whole country stands by to assist.

Is not that glorious? Oh, Mr. President, the heart behind that sentence beat with love for the masses, like that of John Ruskin, like that of Thomas Jefferson, like that of "Hickory" Jackson. I will read it again:

Each region of the country is set to study its own needs and opportunities, and the whole country stands by to assist.

What happened when this deflation gang got on? The country stood by then, but what was going on? It stood by to watch the pale horse and his rider tour the South and West, leaving devastation and ruin in his wake. I recall the Scripture, in Revelation, John's dream, where he said:

I saw a pale horse, and he that sat upon him. His name was Death, and hades followed with him.

The pale horse was deflation. Governor Harding sat upon him, and as he rode through the South I saw the market value of agricultural products perish, I saw industrial establishments close, I heard the hum of industry cease and I saw 7,000,000 wage earners walk out of employment, wandering over the country, hunting for work and something to eat—7,000,000 of them.

I saw him reach into the West, and the business of the cattlemen perished, half the mother herds were sacrificed. The grain growers of that great section wilted in his presence, and their property was pillaged and plundered, and when he left, devastation and ruin was in his wake, mortgages, debts piled up, property gone, men driven mad in the South and West, blowing out their brains, their wives driven to the madhouse, and the children taken up and cared for by charity. These are the fruits of this murderous deflation I am talking about to-day, and it was brought about by the stronghold that Wilson was talking against, Wall Street; brought about by those on the Federal Reserve Board who betrayed their trust, and who went over to the enemy, who perverted the institution from the end of its creation and maladministered it for the purpose of serving corrupt interests in the country.

Those men were not doing that just for fun. Do not misunderstand me. Wall Street was not doing that just to punish the South. It was not doing that just to punish the West. When you see a chicken caught in the claws of a hawk and the hawk working on him, eating his meat and sucking his blood, he is not doing it to punish the chicken; he is doing it to feed his insatiate craw. So when these fellows were doing this they did not care anything about our wails and cries any more than the hawk cares about the cries of the chicken. They were working in their trade. We kept them out a long time, and they were hungry. Wilson had been President for eight years. The Federal Reserve Board had been in office six years, and those fellows were hungry, like the lion that Regulus, I believe, spoke of when he was trying to rouse his countrymen just before Rome fell down among her beautiful hills and died. He said:

Hear ye yonder lion roaring in his den. He has not tasted food for three days, and to-morrow he is to meet you and me in the bloody arena, and what a dainty meal ye will make for him.

We were making dainty meals for the Wall Street lion and bear, who were making ready to operate on us, and the man who sat at the head of this board, who had betrayed his party, betrayed his chief, and betrayed his section, was opening the door and telling them to go to it, and they came, and this ruin was wrought amongst my people.

It has been hinted to me that they expected to put a robe on him and a ring on his finger and have much ado over him as a great man. No doubt they felt he was entitled to such consideration from them, but, Mr. President, not so. He was entitled to the scorn of the people. He was entitled to what he has received, to be driven out, failing to get reappointment, and he would have failed of confirmation in this body if he had been reappointed. Thank God for public opinion in America. Thank God for the courage of the men and women in the country. They made themselves heard from when this fight waxed warm in the Senate. They notified the President. I received scores of telegrams and letters telling me that the writers had written to the President asking him not to reappoint this man.

I told Senators once before of a very amusing thing that occurred. A Senator from one of the Northwestern States told me——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEFLIN. This Senator from the Northwest——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator if he intends to allow us to get to the consideration of the pending bill within the near future?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield the floor any time we can get the House to act on the nitrate of soda bill, which affords relief to the people I represent in part, and the whole southern people, of whom there are 28,000,000—people who are interested in that bill. It can be passed, surely. The Senator himself is an able and influential Republican leader, and surely he and the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts and others can prevail upon the leadership in the House to let us have this measure. It is right and fair that we should have it. The Senate has passed it, and if it can be passed in the House and sent over here I will yield the floor in a minute.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator well knows that we can not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield without taking myself off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can yield for a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Is it not true that any action in this body or any speech in this body can not influence the action of the House at the other end of the Capitol?

The Senator can not filibuster here in this body against action of the other House. He knows that as an able and experienced legislator. He has served in the House and he has served in the Senate, and he knows it will be futile, and that there are many bills here on the calendar of vital interest to Senators and to Congressmen, and I appeal to him to be reasonable.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to be just as reasonable as I can. I want that bill passed in the House; and if they find out the situation here and are concerned, it seems to me they will relent. If my party were in power and the West were afflicted as the South is, I would go to the House and beg them to yield and grant this needed relief to the people of the West. I would not stop there. I would call the President, and I would ask him to get Mr. MONDELL on the phone. He has just appointed him Director of the War Finance Corporation, and he was just confirmed yesterday. If I were President I would say to him, "I want you to get out of the way and let that bill pass."

I have been here some time, and I know how these things are done. I have helped to do some of them. If Senators are anxious to get this and other bills passed, there is a way to do it and do it quickly.

I want to state this to the Senate: If Mr. POU, of North Carolina, has made the statement that I understand he did make on the floor, that the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. CAMPBELL] promised him three days ago that he would let him bring up the proposition and pass it, and he now charges him with not living up to that promise, how can I get out of the way and permit this bill to be defeated by such tactics when I and those with me from the South have it in our power to fight until to-morrow at 12 o'clock? If these bills are sufficiently important, let the President call an extra session of a couple of weeks. We can finish them up in that time.

My people have been destroyed practically in a business way. There are debts on them now that will take five more years to pay, piled upon them through deflation, and here we were asking for this measure of relief. We passed the bill weeks ago in order that we could have time to get it through the House. Then the Rules Committee of the House reported it out, and a member of that committee from North Carolina told us that they promised to let him bring it up. We were all aiding in getting measures through the Senate and not blocking anything, until at the last moment the word comes that they will not let the measure come up in the House. What would Senators do if their people were in distress under such circumstances? I think they would do like I am doing and like others are going to do with me.

All I ask is for them to let the bill come to a vote in the House. I am not asking them to pass it. I understand that the Republicans have said that they would vote for it if it came to a vote. If they will let them vote on it, that is all I ask. Of course, I can not make them pass the bill, but I want a vote on it. The bill passed here, and the promise had been made and word came to me and to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], and we have been fighting hand in hand on this question, as have other Senators from our section, and we believed all the time that the measure would be passed. We were told, "It will pass to-morrow or the next day," and yet here on the last day of the session, we are told that somebody has said he is not going to let it come up if he can help it, because he does not believe in that sort of business. What am I to do? The delegation from my State in the House are all for it. They want to vote for it. Why can they not get a vote? Of course, Republican Senators can use their influence sufficiently to let them get a vote on it in the House if they would do so. If they can do that, we will have no trouble over here. I will vote then to expedite business.

Now, Mr. President, I had finished reading a portion of President Wilson's statement. I want to read another one. This rings like a bell, as it rings true.

George W. Armstrong, of Fort Worth, Tex., in his book said this:

The position of the people toward Wall Street and the money question was very well stated by Mr. Wilson in one of his campaign speeches in 1912, after he became the Democratic nominee for the Presidency.

It is the mere truth to say that the financial resources of the country are not at the command of those who do not submit to the direction and domination of small groups of capitalists who wish to keep the economic development of the country under their own eye and guidance. The great monopoly in this country is the monopoly of big credits. So long as that exists, our old variety of freedom and individual energy of development are out of question.

That is true.

A great industrial Nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is privately concentrated.

That is what I said a while ago, that it is in Wall Street.

The growth of the Nation therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men. An invisible empire has been set up above the forms of democracy.

There it is, Mr. President.

We have been dreading all along the time when the combined power of high finance would be greater than the power of the Government.

Senators, I am talking to you on the most vital question that affects the life of the Nation to-day.

Have we come to the time when the President of the United States, or any man who wishes to be President, must doff his cap in the presence of this high finance and say, "You are our inevitable master, but we will see how we can make the best of it."

Oh, how that rings clear and true!

We have restricted credit and control of development, and we have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the world. No longer a government of free opinion, no longer a government by conviction and the vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and duress of a small group of dominant men.

Oh, Mr. President, there is the eternal doctrine. It was after that that he said we had created a democracy of credits. It was after that that he said the other banks could be made to go to the aid of one in distress. It was after that that he said when the representatives of democracy in this Chamber and the other had freed us from Wall Street control and set up the Federal reserve banking system and created this democracy of credits, when the resources of the Nation were mobilized, when the poorest man, if he had energy and determination, could get money with which to carry on his business.

Oh, Mr. President, what a great deliverance was that! He stretched forth, like Aaron of old, the healing rod and gave the land deliverance, and here was this system which stood foursquare not only to every business wind that blew in America but foursquare to all the winds of the world. A world war could not shake it. The floating of Liberty bonds by the billions did not disturb it. The increased business and credits of our own people made not a dent in its armor. It did all those things, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board boasted, without ever going to the gold reserve. President Wilson said that these resources were to be mobilized, these other banks made to go to the rescue of banks in distress; and now let us see what he did when the hour came.

When President Wilson, the great statesman who uttered those words, was lying on his back fighting for his life, unconscious half the time, this man refused to apply the progressive interest rate even to New York at all, but he did apply it to the South and West. Instead of having the banks of the East and the North to go to the rescue of the banks of the South he forced the Liberty bonds out of the hands of the banks in the South, forced cotton upon the market at a price below the cost of production, forced grain on the market at a price below the cost of production, and business stagnation reigned throughout those sections where we had resources in the Federal reserve banks sufficient to have saved them all.

Mr. President, I assert again that there was no occasion for this deflation, absolutely no reason or excuse for it. The bulletins of the board stated that the banks were in good condition; that business prospects were good; that a prosperous year seemed to be looming up before all those banks and the people. Governor Harding in his own report in 1920 said, before this drive broke, that there was no occasion for alarm, that the banking system was sound and our economic system was sound, and there was no occasion for anything of a drastic nature. And yet we had it, the most drastic deflation I have ever witnessed, and it produced wholesale ruin amongst the American people.

Mr. President, it not only produced injury throughout the South and West but I will tell you what happened up in the other sections of the country. Merchants in my country bought automobiles. They were being shipped down into the South, and when deflation gripped our people our merchants wired and said, "We are sorry, but deflation is destroying the purchasing power of our people and we can not take the automobiles; we can not pay you for them; take them back or tell us what disposition to make of them." They canceled their orders. The merchants in the South who had bought goods for delivery in the fall wired to the wholesaler and he to the manufacturer, "Deflation has us; do not ship the goods; cancel all orders."

Then what happened? The manufacturer turned around and went in amongst the men and women working for him and said to them, "We have to shut down. The South can not buy our goods. The West can not buy our goods. Sixty-odd millions of people have had their debt-paying and purchasing power destroyed. We can not sell our goods; we have got to close down." Men and women in mournful procession walked out of those establishments, and the doors were closed on them—I can see that sad picture now—until the ranks of the unemployed had swollen to seven million strong. They were denied the right to toil and live. The manufacturer closed down; the goods were kept in his establishment; the merchant canceled his orders. Deflation was spreading devastation all over our country.

Do you wonder then, Mr. President, that I should plead for a people who have been afflicted as they have been; who are in distress as they now are? What a pleasant thing it would be to them to get this little aid from the Government. How many millions of dollars it would save—$30 to $35 a ton on nitrate of soda—for these stricken farmers, these sorely distressed farmers of my State and all the other States in the South. What a blessing and a benefit it would be to them.

Mr. President, I repeat, the Fertilizer Trust does not want this bill passed, and it may be that the Fertilizer Trust has said it shall not pass. If that be true, it behooves us to answer back and say to them, "Then the other bills shall not pass." We have the power here to force the President to call an extraordinary session, I reckon. It need not be a very long session. Two weeks would do. That would not be very long. We are already here. I think we should do that in order to grant this relief to about a little more than one-fourth of the people of the whole Union. I appeal to the spirit of fairness and justice and right in the hearts of those on the other side to get in touch with the White House and with the leaders at the other end of the Capitol and see that a vote is permitted upon this bill. That is not asking much, Mr. President.

Continuing, Mr. WINGO said:

It is interesting to know that in the debate on that date—

Speaking of the time when the bill providing for the progressive interest rate passed the other House—

Mr. McKeown, a Democrat from Oklahoma, specifically raised the question of application of the policy and was assured that the making of this progressive interest rule to apply to banks in the stock-speculation districts, where they speculate in stocks, would not be used to impair the borrowing capacity of the agricultural communities.

Then, in concluding, Mr. WINGO said:

Read these records and it will be apparent to all that the policy of deflation was brought out by political pressure of a Republican Congress, and some of the same Republicans who now seek to leave the impression that Democrats were responsible were the ones who at that time applauded their leader when they charged the Democrats with inflation. In other words, these Republican politicians have shifted their positions and are now denouncing what they applauded then.

Mr. President, I have previously shown that at the time the advisory council met in Washington the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] introduced a resolution on the subject of deflation. It looked like a hint to the Federal Reserve Board that they were ready to "touch it off." The able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who is, in large part, the author of the Federal reserve banking system, arose in the Senate and sounded a note of warning. He said, "Senators, I fear that this is a hook upon which it is proposed to hang deflation," and he warned them against the evil consequences of deflation. He said that he was not surprised that New York and Chicago should want deflation.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] also warned against it. He also stated to me and to others that Governor Harding told him that if he could get that progressive interest rate sought by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who introduced the bill in the Senate, and by Mr. Platt, who introduced it in the House, and who is now a member of the Federal Reserve Board—that Governor Harding told him, with considerable embarrassment and excitement, with his lips fairly quivering, because he thought the thing was about to be beaten, that he would not apply it at all to the South and West, but he would apply it to New York and the big cities, where they were getting money for speculative purposes. After he got it, however, it was never applied to New York; it was never applied to a New England State; but it was applied most viciously, cruelly, and criminally to the Southern States and the Western States, right where they said they would not apply it at all.

Mr. President, what was that? It was a straight-out promise broken. Here were means employed to get legislation that amounted to deception, hypocrisy; in getting it a crime was committed, and then a greater crime was perpetrated against the people.

What did those who had inaugurated this policy do? A distinguished newspaper man from a Southern State, the editor of one of our greatest papers, told me that a manufacturer told him that they thought of bringing on deflation a little earlier in the spring, but the manufacturer said, "You hold back this thing; we want to unload our goods. If you bring it on now, and prices go down with all these goods on our hands, you will break us; wait." So those in control of the matter waited. Then what happened?

The manufacturers loaded their wares on the farmer; they sold them to the merchant who was in the midst of prosperity, as was the farmer and everyone else. And then, without a moment's warning, later on this thing came. The merchant said, "Certainly, cotton is above 40 cents; wheat and corn are bringing good prices; hogs and cattle are selling well, and everything is well in the business world; I will buy your goods; fill up my shelves." So the merchant, without knowing that lightning was going to strike him, was filling up his shelves. The farmer said, "I want some more plow mules; what are they worth?" He was told from $250 to $300 a mule. "Very well," he said, "I will take them." He was asked, "What else do you want?" He replied, "I want plows and hoes and machinery of various kinds; I want tractor plows; I want auto trucks; I want an automobile to run around the farm and attend to my business." So they unloaded on him. The farmer was innocent; he knew not that he was driving to a deadly, dangerous fall.

What did the country banker do? He did not know what was coming. He loaned money at about that time on cotton, and he loaned out about all he had. When the pinch came and cotton prices commenced to fall, after the Fertilizer Trust had sold its fertilizer at big prices to the farmer; after the auto truck man had unloaded; after the implement man had sold, and mules and horses had been palmed off at high prices—after all these things, the crash came.

Then what? The farmer went to the banker and said, "I want to borrow some money." The banker replied, "I have not the money, and they will not let me have it to lend on agricultural products." The farmer said, "I have got to sell my mules," and he asked "what will you give me for them?" He was told, "You can not get $25 apiece for them cash in the market place." "What! And they cost some $250 to $300. If that is true, I am ruined." It was true, and he was nearly ruined.

On the 9th day of February, 1922, replying to a speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is the only Democrat in this body who has defended deflation, I told the Senate what occurred in my home town to a prosperous young farmer who had a young orchard growing up around his place and a little vineyard. He also had an automobile and two or three mules and a milch cow. He was paying for his home, educating his boy and girl, the boy being 14 and the little girl 6, and he and his wife and children were happy and contented. I saw the devastating touch of deflation strike down that man. He drove by my home at Christmas time. I stood and looked at his wagon as he came along with a few household goods in it—bedsteads, bed springs, mattresses, and the like. His wife was sitting up in front with the little 6-year-old daughter; the farmer was walking along by the wagon, and his 14-year-old boy was behind the wagon with his head down, walking mournfully along. It was a sad picture. I knew what it meant before I spoke to him; but I walked out into the road and I said, "What is the matter? You are not leaving your farm, are you?" He replied: "I have not any farm; my farm is gone; my mules are gone; everything I had has been swept away, and I have not paid out of debt; debts are still hanging over me. I am going down to the factory town, Lanett or Langdale, in the county; I am going to work in the factory there and my boy is going to work in the factory." He said: "My wife is very cheerful; she says we will come again. I hope we will." I said: "Yes; God bless her; bless the optimism of the good wife and the cheering words that come to the man when progress seems so slow and times are hard and pinching." The good wife, crushed like him, but smiling through it all, was telling him that was all right; they would come again, but leaving her hopes behind, the little farm that they loved and the home place. The little 6-year-old girl was sitting by her in the wagon, hugging to her little breast a doll. "My boy takes it harder than any of us," the father said. Just as they were leaving, the boy came up and, with tears in his eyes, said: "Papa, what does all this mean?" That question has rung in my mind a thousand times over: "What does all this mean?"

Mr. President and Senators, they had no right to break up that man's home. How could they have prevented it? If they had loosened up, if they had gone to this Federal reserve system and permitted it to function as formerly, if they had continued to supply currency and credits, and put out $2,000,000,000 more, which would have amounted in trade to ten billions of dollars—because the expert money men tell us that $1 in circulation amounts to $5 when translated up through the system, so that two billions would have amounted to ten billions—that would have saved the day, and we could have done it without ever touching the gold reserve, and the Federal reserve system would have stood out resplendent in the glow of its own great achievement, having saved the country from panic, preserved prosperity, and held intact the business of the people. That is what we created it for.

What did they do? They struck dead that man's business. What did they do? They crushed his heart. What did they do? They drove him away from his home. What else? They bartered his substance for a song. What else? They left debts hanging over him that he feels in honor bound to pay, and that he will pay if he has to slave to do it. While he does that, these men in Wall Street, who bought Liberty bonds at $85 and $82.50 and $80 on the hundred, clipped their coupons and laughed over the misfortunes of my people. Those are the people that I plead for; and yet somebody in charge of the legislative program at the other end of the Capitol will not even let us have a vote on a bill which means millions of help to my people, that will save to every farmer who must use nitrate of soda thirty to thirty-five dollars a ton. The Government that he loves and supports and is ready to fight for, and that his son died for on the battle fields of France, will not let him even have a vote on this bill when it is said that there are votes enough to give him relief, but two or three men have said that they will not let the matter come to a vote! Are we not in a pitiful condition?

Mr. President, it will not always be thus. Thank God, the handwriting is on the wall. The change is coming. The poet has said:

Coming events cast their shadows before.

They have already cast them, Mr. President. The recent election tells of an awakening in the country that is a wholesome sign, a very wholesome sign.

What is the reason why we can not have an opportunity to get action on this bill?

Mr. President, we could not get Mr. Crissinger confirmed until I and those from the agricultural States demanded on this floor that he be confirmed and kept hammering away until we practically forced his confirmation. Bankers in the South and West got the impression that an attempt was being made to hold him up and give him a recess appointment, so that these Wall Street magnates could have nine months in which to court favor with him and to hold out threats and say to him: "Why, you have not been confirmed. We will see the President. He might withdraw your name. We might beat your confirmation." They wanted to keep the sword of Damocles hanging over his head, but I did not intend that that should be done, and others did not intend that it should be done, and we confirmed him last night, and he is out of their reach, thank God.

When I stood on this floor months ago and demanded a reduction in the rediscount rate, Mr. Crissinger, in a speech somewhere, or in a statement to the papers, said that the rediscount rate ought to be reduced, and he straightway incurred the displeasure of Wall Street when he did it. Wall Street did not want it reduced. Wall Street wanted to hold up his confirmation. Wall Street wanted to have a dark-lantern performance around during the recess, but he is out of their reach, and men who know him intimately say that he is an honest man, and they say that his sympathies are with the farmers and the common business men and bankers of the country, and I believe that is true. We have an opportunity to see it work, and we have the power right here in this Chamber, and henceforth it shall be employed. That banking system is being operated as a Government institution, and when it is not operated right I owe it, and every Senator here owes it, to the people of the country to call attention to whatever it is that the Federal Reserve Board is doing that is detrimental to the business interests of the country. Why not? Is it beyond our reach? Can we not criticize the conduct of the Federal Reserve Board?

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] got very much excited here one night when I was talking about Chief Justice Taft. I was just talking about Chief Justice Taft going over to London, and suggested that maybe he discussed the debt due us by Great Britain. What was wrong in that? He had a right to go if the President wanted him to go; but the Senator from New York got excited, and he said: "The Senator has referred to the Chief Justice." Why, certainly I had, and I will do it whenever I get ready. You can not throttle free speech in this Chamber. An effort may be made to do it, but it will not work. There is a judgment bar out yonder to which red-blooded Americans can go and submit their case to a fearless, intelligent people, and they will render the right verdict, and they will sustain those who fight for free speech in this body.

If I want to criticize the Chief Justice, I will do it. If I want to criticize any other member of the Supreme Court, or if I want to criticize the President, I can do it. If anybody does not like the criticism, let them answer it. Let them not invoke the tools of tyrants, suppressing free speech. Let them stand up with the lances of their wit and their arguments and their intelligence and undertake to combat the arguments that are made. That is the way to fight battles in a deliberative body. Do not invoke rules that are born of tyranny and oppression of the worst sort. So, if I want to discuss the Federal Reserve Board, and criticize the policy of the board, I reserve the right to do it. I helped to create that institution, and the creature is not greater than the creator. Congress created it. Congress has a right to demand that it do what Congress intended that it should do—serve the business needs of all the people all the time.

Those who think they are going to get a picnic out of this business of the American people are mistaken. The clock has struck in the tower of this Nation's destiny, thank God, and the tide has turned! It will not be long until this Government will be restored to those who will conduct it to the highest and best interest of the American people.

Mr. President, I incurred the displeasure of a coterie of financiers and speculators up in Wall Street because I unmasked them before the country. I told what they were doing. I showed how they were increasing their pay roll, building it up, putting people on the list of employment, 3,000 of them, when that bank was doing less business than another bank within a hundred yards of it with 200 employees, and when a large part of the money paid to those 3,000 employees, if left in the bank, would have come as a franchise tax to the Public Treasury. That is what I showed; and they said, "We must crush this fellow, because he is treading on dangerous ground. He is getting on our corns. He is hurting us. We must suppress him"; and they had fellows writing editorials about me who probably never heard of me until their bosses told them to attack me.

Do you know why they were doing it? Because I exposed what happened. When a former Secretary of the Treasury was about to ask for the resignation of Governor Strong, of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and he pretended that he was sick, and he was going off on a trip on the sea, Governor Harding deceived the Secretary of the Treasury by saying, "I have practically got his resignation in my pocket," and that kept him from being removed. Then this Secretary of the Treasury passed out, and Strong stayed in, and is in yet, and they raised his salary from $30,000 to $50,000 when distress was raining like a hailstorm all over the South and West, and business was being destroyed, and they were increasing the salaries of clerks in that bank from $1,800 to $18,000 and from $2,500 to $25,000. I was disclosing all of that, and that is what made them mad; and then when I disclosed that William Boyce Thompson, chairman of the Republican campaign committee in New York, was borrowing on a dummy note $3,000,000 from a bank of which he had been director, that is why they wanted to suppress me; and I showed, Mr. President, that that bank in New York was loaning for speculative purposes to two institutions in New York more than all the Federal reserve banks were loaning to all the agricultural States in the Union. That is why they wanted to suppress me. They did not care anything about me as an individual. They wanted to suppress my voice in this Chamber, and stop the fight that I was making day after day, week after week, and month after month.

Here is a letter from a friend who used to be an officer of the Government, an ex officio member of the Federal Reserve Board:

I understand that in December, 1922, or January, 1923, a number of salaries were jacked up—in order to get ahead of the new governor of the board, who, it was feared, might have some notions of reform and economy. Among the salaries that have been stilted are the following:

This refers to the New York bank—

C. H. Coe, formerly a $1,500 clerk and who was getting $7,200 at the time the Reserve Board sent in its answer to the Overman resolution—

I think that was in October, 1921. He has been subsequently raised to $8,400.

L. R. Mason, who was drawing $6,500 in October, 1921, has enjoyed a raise to $10,000.

W. H. Dilliston, formerly a $3,800 clerk, was in October, 1921, drawing $6,600, is now getting $7,200.

B. M. Grant, originally a $2,400 clerk, who in October, 1921, had been jumped to $6,000, has received a further advance to $6,600.

J. Rice, who formerly got $1,700, who by October, 1921, was getting $4,500, has now been raised to $6,000.

W. W. Schneckenburger, formerly getting $4,000, at the time of the Overman report drawing $7,500, has been jumped to, it is said, $12,500.

D. H. Barrows, formerly getting $3,000, was drawing in October, 1921, $7,500, and is now getting $8,500.

Please note that these increases have taken place notwithstanding the fact that the franchise taxes which the New York Federal Reserve Bank is paying to the Government is now a mere fraction of what the Government got from the bank in 1921. I take the liberty of suggesting that you write to the Federal Reserve Board and ask them to send you a list of any advances which have been made in the salaries of officers or employees of the New York Reserve Bank since October, 1921.

Mr. President, do you know why they did not want Crissinger confirmed? This is another reason. They wanted to get these salaries all raised before Crissinger got in; and so if the Banking and Currency Committee could just hold the nomination back until the closing hours of the session—if they were forced then to report the nomination out, and he was confirmed, the salaries would be increased, the list closed and beyond the reach of Crissinger when he came into power. That is another reason why they did not want me to continue undisturbed to discuss their record and to tell the truth regarding them in this Chamber.

Mr. President, we are simply fighting to have a better day for the business people of the country. We are simply fighting to have a fair deal for them. I have no criticism to make of the Federal reserve banking system. I think it is the greatest system ever created. I thought that when I voted for it. I thought that when I fought in the Democratic caucus in the House to recognize cotton warehouse receipts for loans at the banks in the cotton-growing States. I thought that when I fought for the recognition of elevator receipts for corn and wheat in the Western States of my country. I thought that when we provided credits for every kind of business in every section of the country. When I saw that system turn away from the course on which we had started it, when I saw that system perverted from the ends of its institution, when I saw it maladministered, I said, "It is my duty to help bring it back to the true course we mapped out along which this system should travel"; and I am fighting for that.

Now I want to say to Senators on the other side that the measure that is pending in the House, which we are seeking to have passed through Congress, would mean much to my people. The only way I have to help bring about that legislation is to fight as I am fighting here to-night. The only means I have is to speak upon this question and upon other questions which vitally affect our whole people and continue to fight, asking the other side to do that which is just and fair and right to the great cotton-growing States of the Union.

Mr. President, I remember reading about what Henry Clay and Daniel Webster said about the arid lands of the West. They said it was a barren waste, and that no human being could live in that vast area, but I have seen all that theory exploded. I have seen the hand of inventive genius at work in that territory. I have seen the skill and genius of the shrewd, wide-awake American operating under the adverse conditions which exist out there. I have seen the river dammed up over yonder and water backed up in the mountains and pipes run across the country and vast reservoirs of water accumulated. I have seen the floodgates raised and that water flowing down through the arid land, making that soil to blossom as the rose. I have seen that land produce. I have seen agricultural products thrive upon its soil.

Who made that possible? The Government of the United States. Who spent the money? The Government of the United States. Who provided it? Congress. Then what? We loaned money to the farmers out there to buy farms. We have helped them in that way, and now we let them pay for water to moisten their land and help to produce their crops, and if misfortune comes and they can not pay for the water when the crop is harvested, we credit them with the money they owe, and the Government charges them only 5 per cent interest. That is right. That is a beneficent thing. The Government is doing wisely and well when it renders that aid to those farmers, making not two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, but making grass to grow where none grew before. There the Government is rendering aid to people out in the arid lands of the West, and I voted for the measures to grant that aid.

I saw the wheat-producing section of the Northwest gripped in a drought. The clouds failed to come and no rain fell. The wheat crop failed; the farmers could not even buy grain for seed purposes; and I saw Congress appropriate money to buy grain for those farmers in the drought-stricken West, and I voted for the measure.

I saw fire sweep Salem, Mass., and people were without homes, living in tents and in the open in the wintertime, and I voted in the House for the Government to go to their rescue, to send money and Government tents and provisions to help those people in the time of their distress, and that legislation passed, my recollection is, through a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, and was approved by a Democratic President.

I saw the people of my own section in the year 1922, in the midst of the most terrific ravages of the boll weevil we have ever witnessed, trying to produce cotton at tremendous cost. I saw the crop fail and about 9,000,000 bales produced where 16,000,000 bales had grown. I saw the people from that section, through their representatives—of whom I was one—come to the Senate and ask for aid to buy nitrate of soda at cost in Chile, to be delivered to those people for cash, the Government to get all of its money and the expenses back in a few months' time. I saw that bill passed through this body, and then I saw it throttled at the other end of the Capitol; and I heard in the closing hours of the Senate that one or two men who had promised to let them have a vote on it had changed their minds for some reason and were not going to permit a vote, and that one Member from North Carolina had charged bad faith on the floor of the House.

Mr. President, I saw the opportunity going by to grant that relief to my people, and I said it is wrong, it is unfair, it is unjust, and it is outrageous; and I am justified in making a fight to get action upon that measure, at least to get a vote upon it, and that is what I am asking for.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. DIAL. I call the Senator's attention to the fact and ask him if he recalls how much money Congress appropriated to destroy the barberry bush this year? We appropriated a very large amount, probably as much as $500,000. It was claimed that an insect which was bred on that bush interfered with the growing of wheat, if the Senator remembers.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank my friend for calling that to my attention. I voted for that provision, as he did, very cheerfully.

I remember when the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] was asking that that appropriation be increased, and they were telling us that the parasite thrived on the barberry bush, that that was its breeding place; that these barberry bushes must be destroyed; that they needed money from the Government to destroy them, and I voted for that appropriation gladly to give it to the people of the section of the country where those bushes grew. We are simply asking that this money be loaned for a few weeks, that is all, every dollar to be paid back, as was done when my friend from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] had a bill similar to this passed once before. He got a bill like this through two or three years ago when we were in distress. We passed it then, and he will bear testimony, as others will, to the fact that the Government got every dollar back; that it was not out one 5-cent piece. We rendered that great service to my section of the country—to the cotton-producing area of the United States—the only section that produces a great crop of short-staple white cotton in the world, which the boll weevil is eating up. We are asking for this simple measure of relief, and they tell us that they will not permit us to have the vote.

Mr. President, I challenge anyone in this body to show that I have ever cast a sectional vote. I voted for relief to the people of the North and of the West. I have voted for matters that I have thought were proper for all sections of the country. I remember when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had a bill here to get aid to destroy the corn borer of New England.

[At this point a whispered conversation took place between Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, who has the floor, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] or the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not yielded the floor and shall not do so for some time to come. I know that my friend from New Hampshire would like to speak, probably.

Mr. MOSES. No; I would like to vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to see him get a vote. I am very much in earnest about the thing I am fighting for. I am right, and right is right as God is God, and right will win the day or night.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator would stop, he might begin again after having a little rest.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am a little particular about that. This is the only bill before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. But this bill will be before us for some time to come.

Mr. HEFLIN. It might not be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Several of us want to speak a little on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will draw near to me a moment while I am still speaking in an audible voice, I will tell him something.

Mr. President, if our friends in power in the Republican Party had good fellowship and right feeling enough to get action on the measure at the other end of the Capitol, I will yield the floor.

[At this point a whispered conversation took place between Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. OVERMAN.]

Mr. MOSES. Now, Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire will not even let me get my breath. He is so charmed with the sound of my voice that I will have to keep on talking. Every time I stop speaking it seems to distress him, but I shall now proceed again.

Mr. President, I trust that my friends on the other side of the aisle will use their influence to get action on the measure in the House. I say frankly to the Senate and to the country, as I said a little while ago, that if this condition existed in the West nobody would be more active at the other end of the Capitol trying to get a vote to grant relief to those people than I would. I would feel it my duty, and I would be delighted to take that step. I hope that our Republican friends can move upon the leadership at the other end of the Capitol and try to bring about that relief.

I want to say something about the money power and about these interlocking interests. The Fertilizer Trust is one of the big agencies that has its headquarters in Wall Street. Its mighty stockholders reside there. They are speculators on the exchanges—the stock exchanges, the grain exchanges, the cotton exchanges. Whenever we touch their purse strings they set the wires to work. They put influences to work to stop legislation that touches their purse. They do not care how much hardship is imposed upon the people. They get pretty desperate, too, when we get after them.

The real reason for the murder of Caesar was not because they thought he wanted to be dictator. It was not because they thought he wanted a crown. It was because he abolished imprisonment for debt, and the money changers slew him. That is what brought about the death of Caesar. When he abolished imprisonment for debt the dungeon doors of Rome flew open at his edict and men wasting in cells were permitted to come out and breathe the air of heaven again. The mighty Shylocks said this man must be put down, and they set upon Caesar in the Roman Senate and at the base of Pompey's statue great Caesar fell.

What happened in Babylon? The farmers around about Babylon were the most prosperous people in ancient times. Their cattle grazed upon the plains. They were rich, prosperous, happy. They went into Babylon in order to get better educational facilities, to enjoy some of the comforts of the city, and drawing from the resources of their plantations and the cattle on the plains they were powerful in the financial circles of Babylon. Those who controlled the money powers said, "The only way to get possession of those plains, to own these herds by the thousands, is to contract the currency, reduce the volume of money, make money scarce, interest high, and make these people get in debt to us."

The farmers felt the pinch of deflation. They felt the gripping hand of contraction. What happened? Their plains were mortgaged; their chattels bartered. They lost their herds, their farms, their cattle and plains. Then what? The curse of God Almighty came upon Babylon, and the Bible tells us that the angel came down and sat upon the walls of Babylon and said, "The voice of harpers shall be heard in thee no more forever." Why was that? Babylon had forgotten the purpose of her existence, lost sight of the purpose of life. Groped in the gathering gloom, Babylon had become degenerate. Babylon, as Doctor Lee told us in his "Making of the man," had no man mentally endowed enough to give permanent mental setting to her civilization, and her faith, whatever it was, was lost and over her history sleeps the stillness of the desert and the gloom of eternal night.

That is another example of the contraction of the currency and the control of the money supply and robbing the people of a sufficient volume with which to carry on their business. Babylon was a crying example of the evil.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to put a statement in the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. It was held a little while ago that yielding for that purpose would take me off the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it has been done a number of times during the Senator's speech.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not for some little time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know how the present occupant of the chair would rule on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). What is the request?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from North Carolina wants to know if he can present a request to have something printed in the RECORD without taking me off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Oh, no; the Senator can not do that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope that the Senator will be able to get the article printed in the RECORD before morning, however.

What happened to old Pharaoh when the people came to buy grain? When the people came he said, "Bring your money." They said, "All right," and paid their money in and bought grain. The famine continued, and they came back. They said, "We want more grain." He said, "Where is your money?" They said, "We have not got any. It is in your treasury, O King." "Go back and bring your jewelry." They brought their trinkets and all the jewelry of their households, and Pharaoh got them. Then the famine continued, and they came again and said, "We must have grain or starve." Old Pharaoh said, "Go and bring your cattle and your horses," and they brought their cattle and their horses.

The famine continued and the grain was consumed and they came again. Pharaoh said, "Where are your cattle and your horses?" They said, "Grazing on your plains, O King." "Where are your lands? Go; bring the deeds to your lands," and they brought the deeds to their lands. They got grain again. But the work of Egyptian bondage was complete.

What happened in Rome? They contracted the currency, deflated the credit; Cæsar abolished imprisonment for debt, and Cæsar was murdered, and the people of Rome were divided into two classes, plebeian and patrician, and she fell down among her beautiful hills and died.

Mr. President, the same thing happened in France. France tried it, and a bloody revolution spoke with an awful voice denouncing it. England tried it, and bleeding Ireland told the sad tale. Wherever it has been tried misery has come upon the masses, hard times have afflicted the people. Governments that have tried it have lost prestige in the world, and once set upon the road, unless checked, it means inevitable ruin.

This Government tried it in 1920 and 1921. The ruin of deflation marks the operation of such a policy. Insane asylums filled by men driven mad tell the sad tale, as do bankruptcies in the South and West, broken-up homes, mortgaged farms, distress amongst the farmers of the country, 7,000,000 wage earners walking the street out of work, idle industries, a rich few clipping their coupons and accumulating money to buy political power and undertaking to run the Congress and guide the affairs of the Republic.

Thank God, a better day is coming—the promise of a brighter and better day.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I should be delighted to yield, but I understand a ruling has been made that I should lose the floor if I were to yield. I should like very much to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not now, but I will yield in a moment.

The Opelika Daily News, a newspaper which is published in my State, has had something very nice to say about me and my work here. It is so refreshing when so many newspapers delight to have something to say on the other side of the question that I thought it would have a very good effect to set this up as a jewel in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

"HEFLIN'S good work." That is the way this article is headed. There is no subsidized business about this.

HEFLIN'S GOOD WORK.

Almost day by day (Coue) information is reaching the people proving that one of the very best things ever happening for the good of the country was Senator TOM HEFLIN'S successful contest, ending in the dumping from the position of head of the Federal reserve banks of W. P. G. Harding.

HEFLIN stopped Harding's proposed expenditure of millions for new buildings for some of the big branch banks, the one at New York, for instance, that was to cost more than did all the public buildings on Capitol Hill at Washington; he exposed and has forever stopped the big branch banks from charging and collecting as much as 80 per cent interest from small country banks, and he finally succeeded in forcing the President to drop Harding from his high position as the head and dictator of our great Federal banking system. The numerous newspapers that devoted space to deriding and discrediting Senator HEFLIN all during the memorable contest he waged against the extravagance and iniquities of the board members gave the people very little of the evidence Mr. HEFLIN submitted to the Senate, and tried to discredit each and every authority he named.

Now that the Senator has won his fight, comes Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers Record, and makes public evidence he holds, proving that the heretofore secret records of the board show that Senator HEFLIN only knew and proved a part, and that not the worst part, of the underhanded acts of the board members (not all of them, but the advisory council of the class A directors) when deflation was first planned. Now that Mr. Edmonds has made public a long-concealed stenographic report of the secret meeting held May 18, 1920, showing that but 100 copies of this report were printed (for "insiders only"), and that then the type was destroyed and every member present bound not to divulge the proceedings, we expect (?) to see those always fair (?) newspapers do Senator HEFLIN tardy justice—hope at least that but 100 copies of this report were printed (for "insiders only"), service while exposing W. P. G. Harding and the "inner circles" of the ruling powers of the Federal Reserve Board.

Now, Mr. President, I wish an opportunity to go over to the other House and appeal to some of my Republican friends, and I am now going to yield the floor for awhile to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

COMPARISON OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. HARRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not wish to make a speech; I merely desire to place in the RECORD a statement comparing the appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 with those for the fiscal year 1923.

A few days ago when the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was discussing the deficiency appropriation bill he asked me if I had made a statement relative to the appropriations which had been made during the present session of Congress. In the same discussion the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had stated that the appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 were less than those for the fiscal year 1923. I have here a statement showing the amount carried in each appropriation bill, including the deficiency bills.

There have been four deficiency bills: First deficiency, $2,454,210.09; second deficiency, $74,925,774.14; third deficiency, $156,735,772.45; making a sum total of $234,115,756.68, and adding to this the amount carried by the fourth deficiency and the bonus bill, the latter carrying about $35,000,000, along with the general appropriations, makes a grand total for 1924 of $3,939,809,026.80, and deducting the total for 1923 from this shows an excess in appropriations for 1924 of $264,800,742.47 over the appropriations for 1923.

This statement shows a grand increase in appropriations for 1924 over 1915 of $2,832,500,336.80.

The statement which I submit was prepared by the Treasury Department and the clerks of the Appropriation Committees. I ask that the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. HARRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Calder	Dial	Hale
Bayard	Cameron	Dillingham	Harreld
Brandegee	Capper	Ernst	Harris
Brookhart	Couzens	France	Harrison
Broussard	Cummins	Frelinghuysen	Heflin
Bursum	Curtis	George	Johnson
Jones, Wash.	McKinley	Pittman	Sutherland
Keyes	McLean	Reed, Pa.	Wadsworth
King	McNary	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Ladd	Moses	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
La Follette	Myers	Shortridge	Warren
Lenroot	Norbeck	Smith	Watson
Lodge	Oddie	Smoot	Weller
McCormick	Overman	Spencer	Willis
McCumber	Pepper	Stanley
McKellar	Phipps	Sterling

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has been absent from the Senate since Wednesday on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if a vote could be had upon the pending question and the Senate could proceed to the consideration and disposition of the business before it, I would not claim the attention of the Senate at this time to speak. The conference report on the farm credits bill, the so-called Sweet bill, and a large number of measures pending upon the calendar of the Senate ought to receive consideration; and I want it distinctly understood that, so far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest disposition to contribute in any degree to a delay of business in the Senate of the United States because of the action or inaction of any other deliberative body. In saying this I merely express what I believe to be the opinion and attitude of a large majority of Senators, including those on this side of the Chamber. Since it appears, however, Mr. President, that under present conditions, for a time at least, no business can be done in the Senate, I have taken the floor for the purpose of submitting some remarks touching the work performed by the present Congress.

Before proceeding to a discussion of that subject, let me say that I hope the present difficulty will in some way be solved and the business of the Senate will proceed, so that measures of importance to which no Senator objects may have an opportunity of passage before the end of the session now so near at hand.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator speaks of "the present difficulty." What is the present difficulty? Does the Senator mean by that that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] intends to resume his speech?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I have no information as to what the purpose of the Senator from Alabama is.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield, with pleasure, to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall take pleasure in telling the Senator from Indiana what the difficulty is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator——

Mr. HARRIS. I want to tell him——

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I do not yield for a speech by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to explain——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Georgia can take the floor at the conclusion of my remarks, which will be in a very short time. Of course, I must assume that the Senator from Indiana understands, as all other Senators understand, that business in the Senate has been held up by a few Senators because of the failure of the body at the other end of the Capitol to dispose of a measure in which they and other Senators are interested.

Now, Mr. President, I want to address myself briefly to the failures of the present Congress.

Throughout the last year of President Wilson's administration an organized and persistent effort was made to destroy his popularity and to discredit the measures and policies of his administration. The Great War had recently closed. Restrictive and arbitrary legislation, deemed necessary for the successful carrying on of the war, proved increasingly irksome when the conflict had ended. Taking advantage of this fallow ground the leaders of the Republican Party and the partisan press deliberately sowed broadcast the seeds of suspicion and mistrust, with the result that irreconcilable and discontented elements combined and won an apparent victory by an overwhelming majority in 1920.

The present administration is now reaping a harvest of condemnation and repudiation. The legislative and executive policies advanced by President Harding have broken down. This is attributable to the reactionary character of the policies and to the irreconcilable factions existing within the Republican Party.

With the single exception of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act no important legislative achievement can be credited as a distinct administration triumph. All other important measures enacted during the Congress now expiring have been of a nonpartisan nature and have received the support of the Democrats in both Houses of Congress. This is notably true of the farm credits act, the good roads appropriation, the cooperative marketing statute, the export financing act, and the Agricultural Inquiry Commission.

Partisan spokesmen for the administration have solemnly published a long list of unimportant routine measures enacted by the Congress during the last two years, but the fact remains that in all major and important proposals for legislation which the Democrats have not supported there has resulted failure, and this failure is recognized by the leading Republican newspapers.

FAILURE OF PRESIDENT HARDING'S POLICIES.

Notwithstanding the overwhelming Republican majority in both Houses of Congress, the President's policies respecting the two most important subjects presented by him, excluding the British debt settlement act, have been openly repudiated by the Congress. I refer to the ship subsidy bill and the message recommending membership for the United States in the Permanent Court of International Justice.

COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

The President, one week before the end of this Congress, submitted a message urging that the United States seek membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice established by the League of Nations. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] sounded the battle cry in opposition, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] called for information, and immediately it was announced by administration representatives that the subject matter of the President's message would go over until the next session of Congress, which does not convene until the first Monday in December. If the court of international justice were not a creature of the League of Nations, if it were a conception of President Harding or Secretary Hughes or of Senator LODGE, the United States probably long ago would have been participating in its proceedings. As stated in an editorial published by a great metropolitan newspaper, the permanent international court has a secure place in a sane order of world conditions. There seems little ground for fear that it may prove subversive of any right that human welfare requires shall be conserved. It is regrettable that our Government in this critical period should be without any definite foreign policy and that hesitation and procrastination should mark our Nation's leadership in the face of mighty issues and equally great opportunities.

If the President had sent his message to the Senate early in the present session, so that an opportunity would have been afforded those who favor his proposal to force consideration of it, instead of waiting until the last days when everyone knows that the opposition of a few Senators would carry the subject over, he would have been in a position to complain of inaction by the Senate and to reenforce his position by arousing public sentiment.

This one thing which the Executive has sought to accomplish, calculated to disclose a disposition of helpfulness toward European nations in their present entanglements, has been buried by the leaders of the Republican Party in the Senate beneath the legislative débris of the expiring session.

This is on all fours with their action in declining to give the President the power to appoint a representative of the United States on the Reparations Commission. The treaty of peace with Germany estopped the President from making such an appointment without the consent of Congress. The President, in a letter to Senator LODGE, complained that this power had been denied him, and the Congress refused to grant the President's request. Between the contending factions in the Republican Party, the irreconcilables who oppose any attempt on the part of the United States to exercise its good offices in the solution of the economic and political problems which are disturbing the prosperity of American industries and threatening to engulf European civilization, and the more liberal wing of the party, led by Mr. Hughes, who really believe that this Government should enter the League of Nations, there has been a constant conflict. The President has attempted to stand between these contending factions with the result that he is being crushed as if between the upper and the nether millstones.

The administration's foreign policy is incomprehensible even to those responsible for it. The United States in former administrations took advanced positions in the promotion of arbitration and the establishment of orderly tribunals for the settlement of international disputes. Now we are in the humiliating attitude of facing backward and standing still while European peoples in the maze and confusion of financial and economic problems which threaten their undoing are stumbling and staggering forward.

SECRECY IN THE MANAGEMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

It is amusing to read addresses by great men like Mr. Elihu Root advocating that the American public shall be educated on questions of international politics and the foreign policy of this Government, while the administration, of which he appears to be an apologist, if not an ardent supporter, is keeping locked against the Senate and the general public every avenue of information respecting the foreign policy of the United States.

Until a few weeks ago it was not generally known that the United States has unofficial representation on the Reparations Commission. If the State Department knew of the policies advanced by Mr. Boyden, the so-called unofficial observer for the United States, and of the action which he has taken, it carefully withheld all information concerning the subject from the public.

Mr. Boyden, with a decisiveness which the Secretary of State has refrained from exhibiting, formulated and submitted a proposal which goes nearly to the root of the reparations problem and the economic disasters threatening Europe. The proposal has been withheld from the public and Senators are not at liberty to discuss it, although, in my opinion, not the slightest harm could come from full publicity concerning it. It has been called by the world press "the American plan of reparations," but Secretary Hughes in a moment of loquacity has told us it can not properly be so designated. If Mr. Boyden's proposal had been given publicity and had received the support of public sentiment and of the administration, it might have proved helpful in the highest degree; but apparently Mr. Boyden, after it became known that he had a plan, was instructed to be cautious, to refrain from attempting anything worth while, and to confine his activities to a sort of eavesdropping meddlesomeness belittling to the dignity of any nation.

Why should not the American public, why should not the Senate of the United States be taken into the confidence of Secretary Hughes? Why should our relationship to the distressed conditions in Europe, which have already reflected themselves in a loss of foreign markets to American producers, be treated as a matter concerning which the American people must be kept in dense ignorance? The only justification for enshrouding a foreign policy in solemn mystery is that publicity respecting it inevitably would force a change. It would compel the administration either to go in or stay out; either to mediate or to stand aloof. Experience has shown that firmness, not timidity, decisiveness, not hesitation, are essentials in the settlement of any class of controversies whether between individuals or nations.

As an illustration of the stupidity which characterizes the administration's course, it is currently stated that Secretary Hughes recently appeared before an organization of newspaper reporters in the city of Washington and delivered a lengthy address on the relations of the United States with foreign governments. The meeting was absolutely confidential. No press reports were ever published as to what was said.

Secretary Hughes declined to appear before the Committee on Foreign Relations and furnish information touching instructions given our unofficial observer on the Reparations Commission, the policy which he has pursued and the so-called American plan for the adjustment of the reparations questions, as well as the apparent opposition of the State Department to the request of the President for authority to appoint a member on the Reparations Commission.

It has come to a strange state, indeed, when the Secretary of State will furnish newspaper correspondents confidential information which he denies to the Senate.

THE SHIP SUBSIDY BILL DEFEATED.

The President convened Congress in extraordinary session last November for the express purpose of considering the ship subsidy bill. It has been almost constantly before the Senate throughout the session now about to close. The bill was never popular among Republicans in either House. But for the President's insistence it could not have commanded a majority in either branch of Congress. It was half-heartedly supported by many Republican Senators solely because of their desire to appear loyal to the President. Many who nominally indorsed the measure did not want a record vote. The ship subsidy bill never made any progress in the Senate. The amendments reported by the Commerce Committee permanently appropriating all sums to accrue in the merchant-marine fund, authorizing 15-year contracts, and expressly striking out the Madden amendment, adopted by an overwhelming majority in the House, would have received only a bare majority if the Senate had voted, and, indeed, it is doubtful whether any of them would have carried. Press reports indicate that the President has no intention of bringing the ship subsidy bill before the next Congress. This confirms the contention that the purpose in attempting to rush the bill through the present session was to obtain the advantage of the support of Senators and Representatives who were defeated by their constituencies on the issue and whose successors are opposed to such legislation.

The farm credits act is wholesome and probably will prove beneficial to the agricultural interests of the Nation. It provides intermediate credits between those supplied by commercial banking institutions and the Federal land banks and will probably facilitate production and better marketing conditions. The far more important subject, the restoration of foreign markets for farm and manufactured products, however, has received little attention. Unless conditions respecting foreign markets and foreign exchange are improved the early future must witness further distressing losses among farmers.

THE BONUS QUESTION KEPT IN POLITICS.

The Republicans won the election of 1920 on a pledge to enact adjusted compensation legislation. This pledge has been shamelessly repudiated. Now we learn of proposals to bring the subject forward again during the next session of Congress so as to dispose of it in time to secure political advantage for the Republican Party in the 1924 elections.

Mr. President, we heard the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], in an address delivered in the Senate to-day, denounce his party and the present administration for its failure to provide adequate hospital facilities for the sick and disabled veterans of the recent war. It is shameful that a subject affecting the interests of these men should be made the football of politics.

The bonus question ought to have been permanently settled shortly after it first arose in the Congress of the United States. Now we are told that after having twice defeated the legislation the managers and leaders of the Republican Party propose to pass an adjusted compensation measure so as to secure political advantage from that action during the next session of Congress.

THREATENED BREAKDOWN OF TRANSPORTATION.

The country is facing a breakdown of railway transportation facilities. Excessive rates, both as to freights and passengers, embarrass business. There may have been—indeed, there was, immediately following the armistice—justification for increased railroad charges.

In the Cummins-Esch Act the Congress sought to place the finances of the railroads on a secure basis. The problem presented great difficulties; and if the act had been applied by the railway executives in a friendly spirit, success might have resulted. Their course, however, has been calculated to arouse and stimulate public sentiment against the transportation act, so that if the measure were now to come before the Congress it could not command a majority in either House. There has been indifference to effecting essential economies in railway operations, with the result that the Nation's commerce is being strangled by excessive freight rates. No disposition has been manifested by the administration to force an issue respecting these conditions. Through special session and through regular session nothing has been done to afford relief. Throughout the South, Middle West, and West the return of prosperity is prevented by unfavorable transportation conditions. Little has been done to relieve the lack of transportation service arising from car shortage and bad-order condition of other equipment.

The principle underlying the Cummins-Esch Act is greater unification and cooperation in the management and operation of railway systems. There ought to be prompt and general reductions in transportation charges. Nothing else can avert the culmination in stringent legislation of the growing sentiment on this subject. With apparent blindness to the losses which thousands of shippers have experienced because of inability to procure cars, there has been no concerted action on the part of the railway managements to provide a remedy.

The difficulties connected with the subject are not to be minimized, nor should they be made the football of partisanship and prejudice. An efficient transportation system is essential, indeed indispensable, to the comfort and prosperity of the whole people. Without it enterprise will continue to languish. The demand for public ownership and operation—a policy in conflict with the fundamental principles of American institutions—is gathering volume. The people of the country are groaning under transportation conditions which have compelled them to suffer untold losses.

Those chargeable with the formation of policies in railway operations seem utterly unconscious of their responsibilities. They resist every effort of the public to secure relief.

To illustrate: The demand for interchangeable mileage books, at cost reasonably reduced below regular passenger rates, comes from many millions of travelers on railroads. Every technical obstruction of a legal nature is to be thrown in the way of the wholesome arrangement contemplated by interchangeable mileage books because the railway executives fear additional concessions will be exacted.

The Pullman surcharge, designed to discourage travel as well as to increase railway revenues, is still collected, and it has been impossible during the present short session to secure consideration of legislation to prevent this unjustified tax on comfort and convenience.

No effort whatever has been made by the administration to induce an effective arrangement among the railways for avoiding the losses resulting from car shortage. Adequate railroad facilities can not be furnished at rates which the public and shippers are justified in paying until the carriers recognize their mutual obligations to one another and their duty to the country to operate with some regard for the necessity of producing a national transportation system.

Neither the carriers nor the Government during the present administration have done anything to bring about conditions which will mean lower freight rates or better service.

TAX PROBLEMS.

The reductions in the higher surtaxes on incomes and the repeal of the excess-profits tax, justified on economic principles, have resulted in relieving the rich and prosperous, while through the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act the taxes paid by the masses have been enormously increased.

Thus failure, irretrievable failure, marks the record of the national administration throughout the last two years.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no disposition, Mr. President, to address the Senate if we may proceed to vote on the bill which is before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope that is the disposition of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have paused, as it were, to address this question to the Senators present. The Senator from Georgia, who has risen, perhaps can answer that question.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, when I get the recognition of the Chair I will then address the Senate just as I see fit, without any suggestion from anyone else. Am I recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Illinois.

CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I did not intend any discourtesy to the Senator from Georgia, nor did I make any suggestion to him.

I venture to rise to say a word upon the so-called child-labor amendment to the Constitution, although it can not be considered by the Senate during the remaining hours of this session.

The pending amendment to the Constitution——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do; of course.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure what the Senator is going to say about the child-labor amendment will be most interesting, but will not the Senator, before he takes his seat—because he is an authority within the Republican Party—attempt to answer some of these assertions of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas charging so many failures upon the part of this administration?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I am sorry to answer that I was reading the New York Nation during part of the Senator's address, and so, in order to know what he said, I will be compelled to read it in the RECORD.

The pending amendment to the Constitution to vest in the Federal Government power concurrent with that of the States to limit and prohibit the labor of children under 18 is the result of 25 years' agitation and the consequence of two decisions of the Supreme Court denying the power of Congress to prohibit, limit, or protect child labor. The amendment expresses the purpose of the whole people that the labor of children shall not be exploited to their injury and to the lasting and immeasurable hurt of the Commonwealth.

Child labor is at once the result and the cause of ignorance and of poverty. It injures the child permitted or compelled to labor; it injures the society which directly permits or indirectly compels the child to labor. Obviously, child labor can not be accepted as consistent with a system of education free, universal, or compulsory. Obviously, a child denied play and forbidden school is refused that physical and mental development so important to its citizenship in a democracy and so necessary to guarantee to it the free pursuit of happiness and the untrammeled enjoyment of life and liberty. Argument is not necessary in support of these assertions. They are accepted by the majority of the American people, as proven by the legislation enacted in many of the States and by those two acts of Congress declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. There are few who will contend that there are benefits which flow from child labor. The formidable opponents of the child labor amendment are those who hold that under our Federal system of government Congress ought not by constitutional amendment to be vested with police powers denied it by the decisions of the Supreme Court of June, 1918, and of May, 1922, and who maintain further that it is unnecessary to vest such powers in the National Government in view of the action taken already by many of the States.

During the decade prior to the last census Congress twice, in 1916 and again in 1919, attempted to limit child labor. The two acts, invalidated by the Supreme Court's decisions, were effective during only a third of that period. None the less, any careful study of the incomplete and imperfect statistics of child labor available will demonstrate the wide, beneficent influence of the legislation.

I do not propose to tax your time with tabulations of figures, but there are some for which any intelligent consideration of the question demands your attention. If you will study the census reports you will see that although the child population between 10 and 15 years of age, inclusive, increased 15.5 per cent during the period 1910–1920, the total number of working children reported decreased over 45 per cent. There was a corresponding decrease in the percentage of all children engaged in gainful occupations—from a little over 18 per cent in 1910 to a little over 8 per cent in 1920. Further, the census shows that despite the increase in the total number of children during the decade actually there was a smaller number of children employed in 1920 in each of the principal occupational groups excepting two which were unaffected by the Federal child labor tax law. This is the more striking since the total number of employed persons in each of these groups, of course, increased.

The Federal legislation furthermore served as a stimulus for action by the States. That is demonstrated by an examination of the statutes enacted by the States during the last decade, which indicate that employers the products of whose industries entered into interstate commerce and who were therefore subject to the limitations and penalties of Federal law sought similar regulation by the States for those other employers who were not yet reached by Federal law. More than this, the public conscience of many of the States, roused by devoted women, revolted against the exploitation of children. The long agitation resulted in the enactment by one-third of the States of laws which measured up to the standard established by the Federal legislation last declared unconstitutional. Since the decision of the Supreme Court there has been an increase in the number of child laborers in industry and a diminution in the number and effectiveness of the measures to safeguard them. Since they are no longer protected by the strong arm of the Federal Government there are children to-day toiling in the industries of this land for 10 hours a day six days a week; there are children 5 and 6 years old driven to labor who hold up their little bleeding hands to testify to the ignorant indifference of legislatures to the welfare of the Commonwealths and to the long, aching, anguished hours of the tiny toilers.

When the first measure to protect and to prohibit child labor was written upon the statute books of the United States, there were but two other countries in the world which threw comparable safeguards around their children. Now, almost all northern and western Europe has done that which the Congress of the United States had done, while by the court's decision we have been rendered impotent to continue so to do.

We do not seek to legislate. We seek for Congress the power to legislate, concurrently with the States. This amendment would not limit child labor. It would not prohibit child labor—or as the text reads, "the labor of persons under 18 years of age"—but it would vest in Congress the power to limit or prohibit conformably with the dictates of the public conscience, and the needs of the public welfare. We know that where child labor is prevalent, there also is prevalent illiteracy, and there also, the death rate is high. If it is tolerated in one section of the country, it injures all the people in every other section of the country. Unless Congress be empowered by a constitutional amendment to act, the evil which had been checked, will grow now. We have no recourse but to amend the Constitution for the sake of the children who otherwise will be driven into the mills of the country to their own injury and so to the hurt of their more fortunate and happier fellows. If the amendment be not submitted to the legislatures by this Congress, we know, sir, that it will be submitted to the legislatures by the next Congress. Thereafter, Congress in the name of the whole people will act to conserve the children of all the people—the children of America. When we have done our work it will not be possible anywhere in the United States, for a pittance, to buy or to sell the birthright of any child in this land.

MOTHER'S DAY.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I present a paper on the subject of Mother's Day, which I request may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOTHER'S DAY, SECOND SUNDAY IN MAY, ANNA JARVIS, PHILADELPHIA, FOUNDER.

It is doubtful if any movement of the times, in the way of a celebration, has such a strong and lasting appeal to persons of all races, creeds, and classes as has the Mother's Day celebration.

It is the most universal of all of our celebrations, for all of our religious and patriotic observances are not without prejudice of some class, race, or creed.

The word "mother" is the most potent of all words, wherever the foot of civilization has left its imprint.

This Mother's Day is not an idle sentiment. It is a great constructive movement of international interest. It is now celebrated annually around the globe.

The boardwalks at Honolulu and Atlantic City and Australia on the other side of the globe are just as enthusiastic for mother's day as any places one might mention.

In Japan, China, Africa, Palestine, European countries, etc., the work of Mother's Day has been established by its founder, Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia.

In the American Army and Navy mother's day is celebrated with tender enthusiasm by officers and men alike. Indeed, this celebration is thought to be of great benefit to the morale of our enlisted men. Certainly it is a cherished occasion. Nothing but good can come from the observance of any special occasion that gets a man closer to the heart of a good mother through his letter, or visit, or other remembrance of home.

Nothing but good can come from setting apart one day of the year in the Army and Navy, in our homes, in our official and business life, and in the life of the whole Nation to pay tribute to the memory of the beloved mothers and fathers whom have gone before or to show grateful affection to the living.

Our American homes are the glory of our Nation. Our mothers who gave to the Nation lives they loved more than their own—the lives of their beloved sons, husbands, brothers, and dear ones—are our inspiration.

One day of the year for remembrance of their sacrifices, their fidelity, their deeds, is not indeed a day lost.

Any movement that deepens home ties, that inspires better national life, that makes better sons and daughters is indeed constructive. Far be it from any thought of maudlin sentiment. And yet "sentiment" is part of the best and most gracious and ennobling things of life, especially that sentiment that clings to the words "mother" and "home."

SECOND SUNDAY IN MAY.

Mother's Day always comes the second Sunday in May.

It is unfortunate that so many other things are now trying to attach themselves to this movement because of its success.

This is unfortunate and unjust, because the founder of Mother's Day, Miss Anna Jarvis, has given the best part of her life to developing Mother's Day on high standards.

Her limited means have been devoted to the cause dear to her heart, in order that Mother's Day might be free from any money taint, and yet we all know the commercialism of flowers and trade, and now of other causes that is endeavoring to work on the public through this woman's labor, and contrary to all effort to prevent their greed.

It does seem that sons and daughters of all classes should cooperate with the founder of Mother's Day and keep it free from trade uses and those solicitations which in no way have any connection with it.

WRITE OR GO HOME.

One of the Mother's Day celebration features is "home going" and "writing home." Not any person is too poor or busy to at least write a message home.

Any mother would rather have a line of the worst scribble from her son or daughter than any fancy greeting card or scrawl of a telegram with her name misspelled, and arousing her from her sleep at a midnight hour as a death message of fear.

AMERICAN FLAG.

It will ever be to the glory of America that the first legislation for the general display of the American flag as a custom was a resolution that Miss Jarvis succeeded some years ago in getting Congress to pass.

Through this resolution it is now the custom for Old Glory to be displayed annually on Mother's Day (Sunday) from all public buildings, schools, homes, and other suitable places.

Is it not an inspiring thought that the mothers of the founders of our country, the mothers of our patriots, are thus honored by sons and daughters?

In all of the years of Mother's Day work there have not been drives nor solicitations. Therefore people little realize the immense labor that has been all of the year back of Mother's Day, year after year.

It has required funds for its clerical work incident to the answering of thousands of letters, the direction of the annual celebrations, office rent, stationery, educational leaflets, and so forth, just as are required by any cause that must be promoted. These expenses have been met practically by the founder of Mother's Day, in addition to the immense labor she has accomplished.

It hardly seems possible that now she would undertake more work, but she is planning the erection of a tribute to the mothers and homes of America in this city. This monument will be one that will remind you and me of the "mothers of our hearts," and it will be a tribute that will make the stranger of foreign lands who may visit this capital city think that American homes and mothers are the Nation's idol. Every son and daughter should aid Miss Jarvis in this new tribute to their mothers.

This monument will not be for what some persons may call "great mothers," nor for women seeking greatness through some ancestral line, but for your mother and mine.

Too long delayed has been a fitting tribute in this city of the National Capital to the mothers of the Nation's founders of its sons whose patriotism and sacrifices won our wars and whose wisdom has guided the Nation to its glory, prosperity, and righteousness.

The Mother's Day monument should be one worthy of a great family of sons and daughters as represented by our Nation.

MOTHER'S DAY INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PHILADELPHIA.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 425) authorizing the Attorney General of the United States to fix the salaries of United States attorneys and United States marshals of the several judicial districts of the United States within certain limits.

The message also announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 14351. An act to authorize bridging the Ohio River at Moundsville, W. Va.;

H. R. 14382. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.;

H. R. 14383. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Brule County and Lyman County, S. Dak.;

H. R. 14384. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak.; and

H. R. 14385. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Walworth County and Corson County, S. Dak.

Mr. HARRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. It is for unanimous consent that the Senate consider a bill which has passed the House and to which, I think, there will be no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Objection is made. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

IMPORTANCE TO COTTON FARMERS OF REVOLVING FUND.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] asked a question which I do not believe Senators on that side of the aisle and some on this side of the aisle understood. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] says a majority on this side of the Chamber are not in sympathy with the fight being made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and myself. I am responsible to the people of my State in my own conscience as to what I do here, without suggestions from anyone on either side of the Chamber, whether I am in the minority or in the majority. The fact that the Senator from South Carolina and I are the only Senators from the South who are helping the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] does not deter me. You may differ with the Senator from Alabama on some questions, but you can not deny that he is always helping the farmers and cotton growers of the South.

Nearly three weeks ago the Rules Committee of the House, on the request of the representatives of every cotton-growing State in the South, met and agreed unanimously to grant a rule for the House to consider and vote on what is called the revolving fund bill, which was passed unanimously by the Senate. The Senator from South Carolina and I also appeared before the Rules Committee at the same time. The Senator from South Carolina was author of the resolution providing for an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the Agricultural Department to buy sodium nitrate and sell to the farmers at cost. I amended the resolution to include calcium arsenate, which the farmer needs so much, and to sell to the farmers at cost. Mr. CAMPBELL, who has been presiding in the House, presided at the Rules Committee meeting.

Mr. CAMPBELL told Mr. POU, of North Carolina, the ranking Democratic member of the Rules Committee, that after the House passed the rural credits bill the revolving fund bill, which would be helpful to the southern cotton growers, would be voted upon. Mr. CAMPBELL and the Republican leaders of the House have broken their agreement and they have acted in bad faith. The legislation which will be passed before we adjourn is in charge of the Republican leaders of the Senate and House. There is yet time for the House to pass this measure which will help the southern farmer more than any measure before Congress this session, and the cotton growers have suffered greater loss than any farmers.

I have been in the Senate four years and I have never objected to a request of a Senator for unanimous consent at any time, and hope I may never be compelled to do so. I have taken up less of the time of the Senate than almost any other Senator. I do not think the long speeches made here change any votes, but they do retard business and injure the country by delaying the consideration of important measures, and I shall never be a party to such delay. But the only redress the minority has when the southern farmers are being treated so outrageously by the Republican House leaders is the way in which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and I are proceeding here to-night. We are making this fight alone. If we are defeated in our efforts to help the cotton growers it will be because some Senators from the South have opposed us and joined the Republicans. Those Senators from the South may be just as conscientious as we are. We are not asking anybody else on this side or the other side of the Chamber to assume any of the responsibility. We are responsible for our acts and we are not apologizing to anybody for them. Before I would apologize for fighting for justice for the farmers of my section I would resign from the Senate. Every child in my State now knows that the prosperity of all business, professions, and trades in the South depends upon the success of the farmer. If he can not produce cotton at a profit the business of the South stagnates, bank deposits fall, and every industry suffers.

In my opinion this bill would have passed the House long ago except for the fertilizer and calcium arsenate trusts. If this measure had become a law it would have greatly reduced the price of fertilizers and calcium arsenate, which would have helped all the farmers and everyone else in the South. Any suggestions from Senators as to what I should do or what I should not do are rather gratuitous from either side of the Chamber, and, I repeat, I am responsible to the people of Georgia for my acts in this body.

The leaders on the other side of the Chamber are perfectly able to bring about an agreement with the Republican House leaders for a vote on this measure. If the vote is not taken, that is their right; but the minority has the right to demand that something be done, and under the rules of the Senate we are making our protest against the high-handed methods of the House Republican leaders by holding up House bills. We have been passing other House bills here. I do not want to interfere with the passage of any of the other bills. I have been present at nearly every roll call, have not missed any except when at work on committees, and I am here always anxious to help the majority transact business. I have not heretofore interfered with the transaction of the business of the Senate, and I am now only delaying the passage of House bills, some of minor importance, until the House leaders will allow that body to vote on the bill which means more to the farmers and everyone else in the South than any measure before Congress.

We have voted at this session thousands and tens of thousands and millions of dollars for expenditures for agricultural matters in other sections of the country. The revolving fund is not a gift to the agricultural sections of my country, not one copper cent of it. Every dollar is to be paid back in cash. The Government runs no risk. The Government under a Democratic administration did this same thing about six years ago and got the sodium nitrate for us, sold it to the cotton growers at cost, and it saved to the farmers of the South millions of dollars. I believe that what is behind this whole matter and the reason for the delay is the influence of the Fertilizer Trust that kept the Muscle Shoals proposition back so long. The Fertilizer Trust keeps a lobby here all the time. The Federal Trade Commission report issued to-day shows that the price of fertilizers is controlled by a few companies. That is the reason why we can not get a vote in the House. That is my opinion of it. It is the opposition of the Fertilizer Trust. That is the reason why I am standing here to-night on my rights, proceeding in the only way I can to get justice for my people.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator please excuse me? After I get through with my statement I shall be glad to yield.

The Senate and House voted $500,000 as a gift to get rid of the barberry bush in the North and West, in a few States, because that creates rust in wheat and is dangerous to that cereal, and I voted for that appropriation, and voted for it cheerfully, but this bush does not cause 1 per cent of the damage done by the boll weevil. It has caused more damage than any pest in the history of the world. Every Senator who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations knows that when any meritorious measure is brought before the committee that will help the farmers of the West or the North or the East, I am one of the first to cast my vote in support of it, but I regret that it is more difficult to get appropriations for worthy measures in the South.

We know that our section of the United States gets less than other sections, and those of us here who have studied the question know that this small matter we are asking for will not cost the Government one copper cent in loss, it will save the southern farmers many millions, and it will give more relief to our people than anything else before the Congress. That is why I am taking the time of the Senate to-night and delaying the passage of House bills until the Republican House leaders will allow the House to vote on the bill as the Rules Committee promised. No Senator regrets as much as I do the necessity for this procedure. I have respect for every man in the Chamber and have never been lacking in courtesy to them. I know they are all trying to do their duty and I intend no adverse criticism of them when I differ with them. I am doing what I believe is my duty as I see it, and I shall continue in that course. I would not be worthy of the confidence of my people if I were not willing to make this fight for justice to the cotton producers of my section.

Mr. President, this bill passed the Senate many weeks ago and was favorably reported by the House Agricultural Committee and has been on the calendar all this time. The Rules Committee of the House promised the southern and western Representatives when the Senator from South Carolina and I appeared before them that the resolution would come to a vote—which promise they have not kept—providing for a revolving fund of $10,000,000 to purchase sodium phosphate and calcium arsenate. It is proposed that the Government shall buy in wholesale quantities and sell it to the farmers at cost, and that cash shall be paid, so that the Government will not lose anything. As I said, the last time the Government took such action it not only did not lose anything but I think it made out of the transaction. They charged 1 per cent for overhead expenses.

Senators from other sections of the country do not understand what damage the boll weevil has done and they do not understand what sodium nitrate and calcium arsenate mean in the raising of cotton. Both are absolutely necessary, and farmers can not afford to pay such exorbitant prices as now charged. Senators forget that it is the gold that has come to us from other countries to pay for the cotton which the South raises which has made the immense gold reserve in our Treasury. We have nearly half the gold in the world. It is this gold reserve that makes our financial condition better than that of any government in the world, and our Government owes the cotton raisers of the South a debt of gratitude. The greatest amount of gold which has been brought to this country for many years on account of exports has been paid for cotton. The cotton producer gets no protection from the tariff as do other sections of our country. A tariff duty of 100 per cent on cotton would not help the cotton grower one dollar. He must compete with the pauper labor of the world in growing cotton. If Congress would pass this measure and help the farmers of the South it would also be helping the New England cotton mills and every section of our country. It is not a sectional matter; it affects the Nation and the world. Cotton clothes are worn all over the world.

Here is what the boll weevil does, and this bill which is now in the other House would help us get rid of this menace. What I shall now read is from the Columbus (Ga.) Ledger, and is entitled "The boll weevil menace." It reads:

> Taking the position that the world faces a cotton famine, due to ravages of the boll weevil, and that the South can better stand the loss of its cotton crop than the world can its cotton, the Manufacturers' Record declares the cotton pest a menace to civilization.

Mr. President, the President of the United States the other day gave out an interview stating that this was a national problem, and here is the Congress of the country refusing to take action.

The article continues:

On the subject the Record says:

"Cotton is in many respects the most important single industry in the world, when we consider it from its production as a raw material to its manufacture and its wide ramifications in world trade. It represents an aggregate investment in lands, in mills, and cognate industries of $25,000,000,000 or over. The South alone has about $1,000,000,000 invested in cotton mills, knitting mills, and kindred interests, and many billions in its production.

"The development of the cotton industry during the first half of the last century was the greatest business achievement during that period in the world. Beginning with a production of a few bales in the early years of that century, cotton growing developed in the South to a point where it largely dominated the finances and politics of this country and of Europe.

"During the Civil War the famine in cotton endangered the welfare of millions of people in England. The poverty in the Lancashire district during that four-year period stands out as one of the awful records in the life of an industrial center. A few months ago one of the foremost cotton manufacturers of England wrote to an American friend that the inability of England to secure its usual supply of American cotton in any one year would cause greater distress in the Lancashire district than did the war."

Now, think of it! A small crop of cotton in the South will cause more distress in England than did the last war, which was the most horrible war that has ever been known in the history of the world, and I hope it will be the last great war.

Millions of people in Lancashire are wholly dependent on the manufacture of cotton.

That is also true, Mr. President, of New England. Take the cotton mills out of Massachusetts and Rhode Island and out of New England generally and that section will suffer. There will be tens of thousands of laborers out of work. The way to avoid that is to help get this bill providing for a revolving fund passed by the House of Representatives to help to get the cotton raised in order that the farmer may make a profit. Under the present circumstances he is not making a profit.

Millions of people throughout the world—hundreds of millions, indeed—are dependent for clothes upon the production, from the South's staple, of the finished cloth. Millions of people in this country are directly dependent upon the growing and handling of cotton, while the financial interests of the Nation would be shaken to their foundation by the loss of the cotton trade. The South could weather the storm better than any other section, because the South could turn its farm lands into the production of diversified agriculture, once more regaining the prosperity which never would have been lost if this section had not by force of circumstances unwisely centered its agriculture upon the production of cotton.

This great industry, without which the world could scarcely maintain its civilization—for without cotton clothes we would sink back into barbarism—is menaced by the boll weevil. This is not merely a menace to the South, for the South could stand the shock of its cotton crop being destroyed better than the world could stand the loss of cotton goods. It is a menace to the Nation—a menace to civilization itself.

It is, therefore, incumbent upon every agency of this Government and of all other civilized governments; upon chemical manufacturers, cotton manufacturers, and financiers to spend money with the utmost freedom in encouraging chemists and others to find a remedy for the boll weevil. Various remedies are being developed; some of them are more or less successful; but the task is very great. The danger of the destruction of the cotton industry is so vast that until the whole Nation realizes the extent and importance of that industry and the seriousness of the menace the task will not be tackled on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the problem to be solved.

The world faces a cotton famine; civilization may be at stake by the loss of cotton. But we believe a remedy will be found. We believe that this crop—in many respects the most important single crop ever given by a beneficent Providence to humanity—will be saved from the destructive power of the boll weevil, but we believe that the utmost energy of the Nation must be concentrated upon the solving of this great problem.

Mr. President, I have not taken much of the time of the Senate for several weeks, when business has been so congested, and I feel that I am entitled to a little time to-night. I want to read about the improvement in the census. If I may be pardoned a personal reference, I was Director of the Census at one time and am familiar with the work there. I think the present Director of the Census, who is a Republican, is one of the ablest and best business men I met in the public service. I think he and his predecessor, Mr. Samuel L. Rogers, a splendid business man, have saved the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars by their ability and devotion to duty. I want to read what has been done by them in handling the last census. In the past eight or ten years every investigation there has been made with a less amount of money and in a shorter length of time than ever before up until that time. I read a brief statement from the New York Evening Post, as follows:

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CENSUS.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

Few Americans have stopped to note that the completion of the census within three years, just announced in Director Steuart's annual report, is an unprecedented achievement. Never has a census been so promptly and thoroughly taken or its results so promptly published. Nor have most Americans stopped to notice the important changes in census policy just made or making. In growing degree the bureau's work, once almost wholly decennial, is becoming quinquennial, biennial, or continuous. Agricultural censuses have been taken every decade; now they will be taken every five years. The census of manufactures, which up to 1900 was taken every 10 years, and since then every 5 years, will now be taken biennially. New subjects are constantly being brought within the scope of inquiry. The last decennial census, for example, included for the first time data on home mortgages, while monthly publication of statistics of the sugar industry has just commenced.

Our censuses were long the plaything of politicians, with the result that some were a national disgrace, and the manifold errors resulting from their inaccuracy can never be overtaken. Every industry and profession now regards the census as an indispensable illuminant. The most important new demand for its expansion, that for a regular census of mercantile enterprises, is so commendable that Congress should make early provision to meet it.

Mr. President, here is a letter from Mr. Owens, of Atlanta. He is writing relative to a visit he recently made concerning the Franco-Belgian-German mix up. He says:

ATLANTA, GA., February 16, 1923.

HON. W. J. HARRIS,
United States Senator from Georgia, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HARRIS: Concerning all the Franco-Belgian-German mixup, I have during the last two months traveled over probably a dozen States—from Georgia to Maryland, and from Missouri to Texas. Have made it a point to engage in conversation every man at all inclined to talk, in day coaches, Pullmans, smoking rooms, hotels, etc.

One instance being a bunch on the Dixie Flyer going from Iowa, Kansas, and Colorado to Florida—this last lot being all Republicans—and in every instance they are cussing England and criticizing our own country for their apparent attitude unfavorable to France and Belgium.

Some grow eloquently profane in expressing themselves. They all believe Germany has been willfully and deliberately endeavoring to avoid paying for the devilment they brutally caused and intend to permanently evade paying for same.

They believe Germany's conduct now is defiantly disgusting and old men of the age of you and myself are ready to pull off their coats and join the French in marching into Berlin and leaving the country in the condition that Germany left France.

All one has to do is to hear the people talk. They are practically unanimous. Of course, I am only talking about 100 per cent Americans who believe in fair play.

I hope you will raise your voice loud and long, until our Government hears it. With kind regards.

Yours sincerely,

JNO. S. OWENS,
401 Haas-Howell Building.

Here is a letter from Capt. J. S. Slicer, president of the Colonial Trust Co., of Atlanta, Ga., who recently made a visit to Europe. He says:

COLONIAL TRUST CO.,
Atlanta, Ga., February 17, 1923.

Hon. WM. J. HARRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR:

* * * * * * *

I have just returned from Europe, and I was most deeply impressed with the fact that Germany is doing everything she can to keep from paying France anything; that she is also making every preparation possible for another war, and she does not deny that she expects to make war on France again as soon as she is in a position to do so.

I was immensely impressed with the wonderful work France has done in building herself up since the war, when you realize that one-eighth of her territory was destroyed, and that that one-eighth paid 30 per cent of all the taxes of the Government.

I think our Government has treated France very badly in withdrawing the troops and in withdrawing our support of France in making Germany pay for the reparation.

I certainly hope that you will see fit to say a word in behalf of France and give her your moral support.

France does not ask for any money, and she does not ask for any assistance except the moral support of the people in this country.

France would be able to pay us every dollar she owes us if she could only get from Germany a small portion of what Germany should pay her.

I think you would be amazed to find out how many people in this section of the country agree with me.

I inclose herewith an article which I published in the Atlanta Journal after coming back from my trip to Europe. I have interviewed at least 500 people since my return, and I have only found 1 per cent of the people who disagreed with my attitude.

I would certainly like to do something for France, and certainly hope that you will do something in her behalf in the Senate.

I went to France prejudiced against her on account of her keeping up such a large army, but I find that she is certainly warranted in keeping up this army and, as a matter of fact, should have a much larger army.

Hoping that you can see fit to do this, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

J. S. SLICER.

Mr. President, in connection with that I will read an article from the Atlanta Journal, entitled "That European mess," because that situation enters into the question which I am discussing. If Europe had the money with which to buy our cotton and the South could get the calcium arsenate to assist in raising the cotton, the whole country would prosper. The South spends its money in the East and the West and the North. There is no crop produced in this country from which the manufacturer of the East and the West derive so much money as they do from the cotton crop, and when the South prospers—and it can only prosper from production of cotton—the whole country is prosperous. I believe in helping every section. The article from the Atlanta Journal is one of the best I have read. I have not wanted to take up the time of the Senate heretofore. I have had the article on my desk for over a month, it having been published on January 23, but the Senate has been busy and I have not desired to take up its time. I will, however, read the article now:

THAT "EUROPEAN MESS."

A fool there was who stood full in the shadow of a smoking volcano and said, "We are damned glad America is out of this European mess." But "Colonel" Harvey is not the first of his kind, albeit he appears the foremost.

As far back as midsummer of 1919, when clear-visioned statesmanship was doing its utmost to secure thoughtful coworking for the settlement of world problems in which America was and still is materially concerned, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, was appealed to by the President in a letter running thus: "It is of so much importance to the business interests of the United States, as well as to the nations with which we are associated, that the United States should be represented on the Reparation Commission, and represented now—while the work of the commission is shaping, that I am taking the liberty of writing to ask you if you will not be kind enough to consult the committee with regard to this particular appointment, and say to them that I would very much appreciate their approval of my appointment provisionally of a representative of the United States to act upon the Reparation Commission."

And represented in a way that does not reflect credit on this country—

Issues now nearing a catastrophe were then but developing; perils now almost if not altogether beyond control were then preventable; American influence, now seemingly powerless to exert itself, was then predominant. The logic no less than the ethics of the situation argued for American representation on an international body which was to deal with matters of direct and momentous import to the people of this country, as well as to those of Europe and the world. But instead of following the lead of reason, Senator LODGE and his like kept sullenly to their cave or prejudice. They not only refused to accede to President Wilson's request at that crucial juncture, but also took pains to tie his hands for the future. "No persons," ran their subsequent resolution, "is or shall be authorized to represent the United States, nor shall any citizen of the United States be eligible as the member of any body or agency established or authorized by said treaty with Germany, except pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States providing for his appointment and defining his powers and duties." Having thus blocked their Government's participation in conferences having to do with questions that reached to the vitals of American prosperity as well as of world peace, the imperial Senators sat down to fiddle while the European flames burned smoulderingly but surely on.

It is well at this moment to glance back to the record of those decisive days, because the darkest problems and dangers of the present had a genesis there. We are much concerned over the billions of war debts owed us from abroad, which doughty Congressmen and Senators insist must be paid betimes. But when the international economic conditions that envelop those debts were being discussed and largely determined our Government was held rigidly aloof from the counseling.

We are sorely apprehensive lest a collapse of industry and trade in Europe, with the far-ranging depression if not disaster which that event needs must bring, shall overreach our factories and farms. But when constructive plans to prevent this very crisis were being undertaken, our Government was forbidden by its own Senate to lend counsel or aid. We censure France for going armed into the Ruhr to collect a debt which Germany says she can not pay. Yet we expect France to pay us, although she herself has received hardly a modicum of reparation. We call Europe selfish because her conduct menaces our own prosperity. Yet we did nothing to keep that conduct from the course to which it was fated when the great effort at international cooperation broke down for want of American support.

There once were hopes that when Republican leadership came into governmental responsibility it would cease obstructive and destructive tactics toward these vast issues, and would work out a foreign policy in some wise worthy of a great and liberal Republic. But the nearest that the present administration has come to that course, in so far as the country is informed, has been the appointment of "unofficial observers" at conferences where the scales trembled between reconstruction and anarchy. The ineffectual, not to say unheroic, rôle of a mere looker-on is the best that Washington's powers that be have attained. When Mr. Boyden, "unofficial observer" at the last all-important reparations conference at Paris, ventured a suggestion in his "unofficial" capacity, Secretary Hughes hastened to declare that nothing said upon that occasion should be considered as having the sanction of the State Department, for the excellent reason that the State Department itself had no saving idea, no sympathetic word, no helpful gesture to offer, but stood as ever stolidly aloof.

Grant that there is nothing which the administration now advisedly can do, and apparently there is not; grant, too, that there was nothing it well could do on the eve of France's stride into the Ruhr, except to offer high-minded advice, the moral effect of which would have been nil unless reinforced by some pledge of helpful action. Nevertheless, there was a time when the administration could have moved with dignity and power and effectiveness to save America and save the world from the ills now rumbling toward an outburst. The fundamentals of the situation were the same when Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes took office as they are to-day, and the same as they were when Senator LODGE and his colleagues tied the hands of a President who at least was trying to move toward constructive ends. Failure to act as those fundamentals of interest and of obligation required has cost dearly thus far, but who can say what the reckoning is yet to be? Colonel Harvey may content himself with being "damned glad that America is out of this European mess," but Americans who think know that we are fatefully in, and that the braying of a blind ass will never lead us out.

Mr. President, of course, they claim that we are obstructing business. The House yesterday had before it the rule granted by the Rules Committee for this revolving fund; and I want to read what the Republican Congressmen were saying over there, instead of giving attention to that matter and other matters. They are the ones who are responsible for the delay and the killing of any measures. It is the work that they have not done over there that is responsible for the whole business. If they had been legislating for the best interests of the country there would have been no trouble.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I regret that I can not yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator has no right to criticize the House of Representatives, and I make that point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I stated that I was going to read just what they were doing yesterday. If I said anything that infringes the rule I am glad to withdraw it, Mr. President. I did not know that I was criticizing them when I spoke of what was done and what was not done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, the Senator came very close to overstepping the rules.

Mr. HARRIS. Now, I will read the unimportant matters considered yesterday by the House when this important matter was not allowed consideration by the leaders. Here is the work they were doing:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana—

He is a good man. I like him. I am not criticizing him; but here is what he thinks is important business for the country. He says:

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

They granted that permission. After a pause the Chair said he heard no objection, and Mr. WOOD of Indiana put this in the RECORD:

Mr. Speaker, in a few hours the Sixty-seventh Congress will be numbered with the things of the past. What it has accomplished and what it has failed to accomplish will soon be a part of the annals of our country. If its success is to be measured by the economic and business conditions prevailing throughout the United States, its place in history will be an enviable one.

When this Congress was ushered in the country was perilously near a financial panic. Business generally was in a most deplorable state, and the number of idle men and women in the United States at that time was greater than ever before in the history of the country. Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, stated that on April 1, 1921, there were 5,000,000 men and women going up and down the highways and byways of the country seeking something to do. United States Government bonds were selling around 83, and all other corporate securities were at a very low ebb. What a change for the better has transpired in the last 24 months!

INDUSTRY AND TRANSPORTATION.

The unprecedented peace-time activity of our American industries would indicate that we are not only supplying the needs of our own people but the needs of outside nations.

That shows how important the work was in the House yesterday, when this measure, which means so much to the agriculture of the South, was before the body, and the Rules Committee had passed upon it, and two or three men in the House, overriding the wishes of the regular organized committee having control of business, would not let it come to a vote.

Speaking of the filled milk bill, I notice that Mr. HAUGEN, who is the chairman of the committee over there, and a man whom I like very much—he has been very considerate of me, and I am not making any criticism of him—said:

Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8086, with Senate amendments, and ask to agree to the Senate amendments.

Then, Mr. STAFFORD, one of my good friends, who goes out to-morrow, said:

Will the gentleman from Iowa explain the Senate amendments?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi said:

Mr. Speaker, I think before I begin to discuss this bill I ought to make some public apology to the majority leader for the nuisance I have made of myself for the past four weeks in endeavoring to get this bill up for consideration. I feel very deeply obligated to him for his patience and for the manifestation by him of that quality of leadership which finally put him in command here in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

And another thing before I say anything about the bill: A word about the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], the chairman of this Committee on Flood Control. He and I entered the House of Representatives together 20 years ago. It is a source of very great pleasure to me to have served with him during those years. That service has been rather more intimate than is usual between Members of the House.

We served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors together, and then we have been on this committee ever since its creation. It has been a source of very great personal regret to me, and I know it is to the House, that in a very few days he will retire from this House. [Applause.] But when he goes he will carry with him, I know, the very best wishes of all the Members who have served with him. [Applause.]

In a few minutes, when the glad tidings are carried over the wires down to the people of the Mississippi Valley that the Rodenberg bill has passed the House, I am authorized, I know, to speak for all the people behind the levees, and I do speak their voice when I say that when they hear these glad tidings they will join me in saying, "Billy, God bless you." [Applause.] I really think that that is the only explanation that this bill needs. [Laughter.]

The first paragraph of the bill simply continues the authorization as it now exists under the law for making appropriations for the Mississippi River, both for navigation and for flood control.

The second paragraph changes the existing law in this: Originally the Mississippi River Commission had jurisdiction of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio to the Head of the Passes for all purposes, navigation and flood control. Subsequently it was provided by Congress that money allotted for purposes of levee construction might be spent up as high as Cape Girardeau, and subsequently up to Rock Island. This paragraph provides that now the money allotted for flood control, whether for levees or otherwise, can be expended above the mouth of the Ohio as well as below the mouth.

Mr. RHODES. How far above?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Up to Rock Island, Ill. Then Congress decided that the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission should be extended to the tributaries of the river below the mouth of the Ohio in so far as they were affected by the flood waters of the river. This bill proposes to extend the jurisdiction of the commission to the tributaries north of the Ohio. It is agreed all around that it was a slip of the pen whereby the Senate put in the amendment when it extended the jurisdiction of the river to the tributaries, in so far as they were affected by the flood waters of the river, that somewhere they put in the words "below the mouth of the Ohio." That was explained before the House when the conference report was considered. It was intended to apply above as well as below. So this bill simply corrects that original error.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are any questions to be asked, I will be glad to answer.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Are you going to oppose this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then I will reserve the rest of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Mississippi River Commission has not only control over floods, over revetments and levees, but it has absolute control over the appropriation for navigation of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio down to the Passes of the Mississippi. The total authorization made for that work was $45,000,000. The balance of the $45,000,000 was appropriated in the War Department appropriation bill for the ensuing year, amounting to $5,990,000. That virtually completes the work of the flood control so far as the Mississippi River is concerned from Cairo to the mouth.

Last year—and here is the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the House—last year in the river and harbor authorization act the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission was extended from the mouth of the Ohio to Cairo and its tributaries, so far as the purpose of levee protecton and banks protection is concerned.

Last year—and here is the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the House—last year in the river and harbor authorization act the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission was extended from the mouth of the Ohio to Cairo and its tributaries, so far as the purpose of levy protection and banks protection is concerned. I think it is a wrong principle—and if I am in error I wish to be corrected by the gentleman who is the author of the flood-control legislation—it is a wrong principle to take out of the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers the authority over the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to Rock Island.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is not done by this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Under the present law the commission has full authority over the expenditure of the funds for making the Mississippi River navigable from the mouth of the Ohio to the Passes. Now you seek to give that same authority to the Mississippi River Commission from the mouth of the Ohio up to Rock Island.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language that the gentleman incorporates is not guarded like the authorization that was carried in the river and harbor organization act. Let me call attention to what that authority was. That authority conferring jurisdiction on the Mississippi River Commission was extended only so far as levee protection and bank protection was concerned.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What is the language of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. It extends the jurisdiction above the outlet of the Ohio to Rock Island.

In the War Department appropriation act a lump sum for the Mississippi River Commission is voted without any limitation as to its use. You attempt to give them complete control without the jurisdiction of the Corps of Engineers as to the improvement of navigation of the Mississippi from the mouth of the Ohio up to Rock Island. You do not say that the authority will be conferred only so far as levy protection and bank protection is concerned, but you give them full control.

I know something about levee protection—perhaps I would not if I had not been placed on the War Department subcommittee two years ago, but I have given it some consideration. Under that act we required the local municipalities, so far as levee protection is concerned, to contribute one part to the Goverament's two parts. Why did we not require the 50–50 contribution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to suggest that the Senator from Georgia is interrupting the conversation in this Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS (continuing reading)—

As Gen. Harry Taylor, Assistant Chief of Engineers, stated before the subcommittee, it was due to the fact that the local communities from Cairo down had previously spent so much money that it virtually amounted to 50–50 contributions. So there was placed in the law the provision that the local community from Cairo down should contribtue one part to the Government's two parts. As to that part of the river from Cairo to Rock Island, the local communities have not to any great extent expended funds for the protection of the banks. As far as they are concerned, they should be required to contribute 50–50.

I am opposed to this idea of extending the jurisdiction of levee protection to the tributaries of the Mississippi. It is necessary so far as the Mississippi is concerned, but when you give them authority over the tributaries of the river you assume State activities. Why, in Wisconsin to-day we have before the legislature a proposal to appropriate many thousands of dollars for that purpose. Wisconsin is not seeking any contribution from the National Government. Why should we prefer certain local communities on purely State streams from the burden of providing for their own flood protection? These are the two main objections I have to the bill in its present form. First, by the phraseology you are conferring on the Mississippi River Commission the same authority that it has south of Cairo north of Cairo as far as Rock Island.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The hearings disclose what we are satisfied would be the fact, that when we passed the flood control bill that the local interests have contributed more than 50-50 under the flood control act.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not dispute that position south of Cairo, but I do north of Cairo.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I said that since the passage of the flood control bill in 1917.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi two minutes of my time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The bill requires two-thirds of the money put into levee construction to be paid by the Federal Government, and the local interests shall provide the right of way, pay all damages, and take care of the maintenance.

Experience shows that that is more than 50 per cent. This bill does not extend any jurisdiction except above the mouth of the Ohio. Below the jurisdiction is already extended up the tributaries, but a very short distance, it is true "in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the river." In this last flood that meant 2,000,000 acres which were overflowed by back water. The other major objection is that we give the commission jurisdiction over navigation above the mouth of the Ohio, when the bill expressly limits jurisdiction above the Ohio to "purposes of flood control." The commission has jurisdiction for both purposes—navigation and flood control—south of the Ohio River and has had ever since its creation in 1879. North of the Ohio River moneys allotted for the purposes of flood control only can be spent, but not for navigation. The gentlemen can not fairly read that into the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in the voting of money for the Mississippi River Commission for purposes under the act of 1917 we vote the money not only for flood control but for navigation purposes. It is one lump-sum appropriation that is granted the commission to expend, and you can not construe this second section without construing it that you are going to take away from the Chief of Engineers authority over the improvement of the Mississippi, so far as navigation is concerned, between the mouth of the Ohio and Rock Island.

Let us get back to the question as to whether we should vote $10,000,000 for six years, as this bill proposes. The hearings before the Flood Control Committee disclose that $24,000,000 is the maximum amount that will be used to improve not only the Mississippi River, which is virtually completed, as far as protection of the bank is concerned, but all of the tributaries south of Cairo. You are proposing to vote $60,000,000 authorization, it is true, when even the hearings do not justify any such amount. All the hearings show is that they merely wish to have $3,000,000 each year for revetment and levee work. Why this policy of voting more money—$60,000,000—when only $24,000,000 can be utilized for levee protection revetment work?

Mr. MONDELL. But this is simply an authorization.

Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I regret that I can not yield.

Mr. KING. Not for a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I declined to be interrupted by some one on the other side, and I want to be equally as polite to them as to Senators on my side. I regret exceedingly——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will not ask, because I have declined to be interrupted by Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want the gentleman to make a speech here that will be quoted in the future in justification of larger appropriations for this purpose than ought to be made, and if the gentleman is not careful he will lay the foundation for extravagant appropriations

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no one will ever charge me in any Congress with having laid any foundations for an extravagant program. To continue, when I was fighting the proposal of $1,000,000 for a fine embassy building at the exposition grounds at Rio de Janeiro, and called attention to the fact that $500,000 was adequate because of the rate of exchange of 1 to 3 in favor of our country, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said, "You know this is merely an authorization," but the very next day or two the Committee on Appropriations came in with an appropriation for $1,000,000, and we find to-day that they have a surplus of $140,000 that they do not know what to do with. If we had made it $500,000, as I proposed, we would have had a pretty nice building there, and would not have made more money available than for an embassy in London or Paris.

THE LEGISLATIVE SITUATION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I object to the reading of the paper by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that when objection is made the question must be submitted to the Senate for a vote, without debate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if that is the rule of the Senate, of course, I do not wish to interfere with the rule in any way.

Mr. HEFLIN. A point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HARRIS. I have stopped reading from the paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KING and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is in order. It has been the custom; it has been done by every Senator who wanted to speak.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I know it has been the custom, but it is a violation of the rule. If the Senator from Georgia has stopped reading, I will not insist upon the point, but I say now that from this time on I shall object to the reading of a paper without the consent of the Senate being given. I withdraw the point, as the Senator has stopped reading the paper.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. I think the Chair inadvertently announced that the point of order was well taken, meaning thereby that the point of order was well taken that pending a decision, when a Senator is called to order, there shall be no further discussion. I do not understand that the Chair meant to decide as broadly as the words would imply with respect to the action of the Senator from Georgia, that the rule forbade the reading of a paper. As a parliamentary inquiry, I desire to direct the Chair's attention to the fact, so that it may not stand as a precedent, that the Chair has decided that a paper may not be read. I think the Chair intended only to decide that pending the decision of the question as to whether the Senator was proceeding in order no debate could be had.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the point of order has been withdrawn, and I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator will proceed and read on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I thought I was proceeding under my rights and in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is so proceeding.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not trying to proceed in any other way, and if what I was doing is against the rules of the Senate, I do not want to proceed in that way. In my four years as a Senator, as I said, I have not objected to any unanimous consent on the part of any Senator, and I expect to be courteous to every Senator in this body as long as that Senator is courteous to me, and even longer than that.

This was so interesting that I believe the Senate would like to have me continue it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we would like to have a ruling by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is that when there is an objection, the question of the reading shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, without debate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it has been the custom——

The VICE PRESIDENT. No debate is in order.

Mr. KING. Let the point of order be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senator from Georgia be permitted to read his paper? [Putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. PITTMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. McKINLEY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with that Senator. I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall permission be given to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the report of the proceedings of the House of yesterday?

Mr. LODGE. Let the vote be announced.

Mr. SMOOT. I was propounding a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. When the roll is being called nothing else is in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Nothing is in order before the announcement of the result of the roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. Not being able to secure a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Harris	La Follette	Sheppard
Bayard	Harrison	McKellar	Smith
Brookhart	Heflin	Myers	Stanley
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman
Dial	Kendrick	Pittman
George	King	Robinson

NAYS—42.

Bursum	France	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Gooding	Moses	Stanfield
Cameron	Hale	New	Sterling
Capper	Johnson	Norbeck	Sutherland
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Cummins	Keyes	Page	Warren
Curtis	Lenroot	Pepper	Watson
Dillingham	Lodge	Phipps	Weller
Edge	McCormick	Poindexter	Willis
Ernst	McCumber	Reed, Pa.
Fernald	McLean	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—33.

Ball	Gerry	Norris	Townsend
Borah	Glass	Owen	Trammell
Brandegee	Harreld	Pomerene	Underwood
Caraway	Hitchcock	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Kellogg	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Ladd	Shields	Williams
Elkins	McKinley	Simmons
Fletcher	Nelson	Spencer
Frelinghuysen	Nicholson	Swanson

So the Senate decided that the reading from the report of yesterday's proceedings of the House was not in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. Do I understand, under Rule XI, which reads—

When a reading of a paper is called for, and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, without debate—that the Chair submitted that question to the Senate when the Senator from Georgia had not asked to have it read at the desk?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Georgia yielded the floor?

Mr. HARRIS. I have not.

Mr. KING. My parliamentary inquiry has not yet been answered.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah then is out of order.

Mr. KING. I submit the Senator from Iowa is out of order. I appeal to the Chair for a ruling upon the parliamentary inquiry just suggested.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I would like to cite an authority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I read from Gilfry's Precedents. On March 21, 1914, the following occurred:

Mr. JONES asked for the reading of a statement taken from the Washington Post and an objection being made,

The VICE PRESIDENT (Mr. Marshall). The question is submitted to the Senate, Shall the paper be read?

Mr. JONES. I am not asking the Secretary to read the paper now; I am asking for recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT (Mr. Marshall). When an objection is made to a Senator reading a paper, it is the same as though objection were made to the Secretary reading it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have already stated that I do not think under our system of legislation it is competent for the Members of one legislative branch to attempt to control the action of the other legislative branch. I think that the proper construction of the national legislative scheme requires that each House shall have absolute control and determination of its own course touching the legislative action it may take. I do not approve of the apparent attempt of Members of the Senate to coerce the body at the other end of the Capitol into action upon any bill contrary to the will of that body. That body, under the Constitution and under any sound theory of our Government, has the right of absolute action free from any coercive influence on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield in just a moment. I think it would be detrimental in the long run to establish a precedent such as it appears is being attempted now.

I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator has partly answered what I first rose to ask him, but I also want to ask an additional question. Does the Senator think that under the rules of the Senate a Senator has the right to read a debate which has taken place in the House, especially in reflecting upon the action of the House?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think under the parliamentary practice that the proceedings of one branch of Congress can be called in question in the other branch of Congress. But I do not think that the rule which has been invoked, Rule XI, has any application to this case. I am perfectly sure that Rule XI applies only to the request of a Senator for the reading of a paper at the desk.

Aside from the question as to whether the Senator has the right to read the proceedings of the House of Representatives, if it were a paper other than the proceedings of the House of Representatives, I maintain that under the precedents of the Senate he is not precluded by Rule XI or the failure of the Senate to give consent. In supporting that conclusion I cite the precedent on page 406 of Gilfry's Precedents, which is as follows:

The consideration of H. R. 224, joint resolution for the relief of Mrs. Margaret P. Robinson, of Kentucky, being resumed, Mr. Sumner moved that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, and while engaged in debate upon that motion and while in the act of reading a paper having reference to the claim of one Esteban G. Montano he was called to order by Mr. Davis for the reason that the paper which Mr. Sumner was reading had no reference to the subject before the Senate, and, being irrelevant, was not in order.

The President (Mr. Pomeroy in the chair) overruled the question of order raised by Mr. Davis, and decided that the Senator from Massachusetts had the right to read the paper as a part of his remarks.

Mr. Davis appealed, and the decision of the Chair was sustained by a vote of the Senate.

That precedent establishes the fact that Rule XI can not be invoked to prevent the Senator from Georgia from reading a paper.

The question of the right to read the proceedings of the body at the other end of the Capitol is an entirely different question.

I think the better parliamentary practice is that it should not be permitted, because it frequently results in criticism and ill will between the two Houses.

In this connection may I be indulged to say, Mr. President, that I hope the Senate may be permitted to proceed with the consideration of the business before it? I have no disposition to criticize the action of any Senator, and no right to do so, but I desire to say that there are important matters to be decided by the Senate before adjournment to-morrow. There are conference reports; there are bills pending upon the calendar that ought to have consideration; and Senators who choose to take the responsibility of preventing their consideration must bear that responsibility without any sympathy or support from me.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEFLIN. If Democratic Senators from the South wish to take the responsibility——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah rises to a parliamentary inquiry, which he will state.

Mr. KING. The parliamentary inquiry I submit is this: Is not the question before the Chair the determination of the question raised by me in reading the rule and by the observations made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided that question in accordance with the precedent which was read by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. And the Senate has acted upon the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not unfamiliar with the precedent which was read by the Senator from Arkansas, but that was on a question of relevancy which was made long before the adoption of the present rule. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] speaks of important measures. There is nothing more important to the downtrodden and afflicted farmers of the South than this bill. Of course, those who want to relieve the Republican Party of the responsibility in either branch of Congress may do so, so far as I am concerned. If I am not going to be supported by Democrats from the South, I should like to have the South know it. If any Democrat has a bill which he prefers to get jammed through to giving this relief which means $35 a ton saved to the farmers of the South on nitrate of soda, let him take the responsibility, and I will give the facts to the country.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the bill to which the Senator from Alabama refers were before the Senate, I should be glad to join him in an effort to secure consideration and action upon it; but since the bill is before another body—the body at the other end of the Capitol—I can not understand why Senators should persist in defeating legislation in which their constituents are interested and try to force action by the other body, which, under our scheme of Government, is free to take its own course, just as the Senate is free to take its course.

There is on the calendar, for instance, a resolution referring to the Court of Claims approximately 300 claims on the part of cotton-oil mills against the Government for damages for alleged breach of contract. My judgment is that if that resolution could be reached it would be passed without opposition and the claimants would have their day in court. If the present course is persisted in, it will result in preventing the consideration of measures upon the calendar, amongst others the one which I have just mentioned. The Senator from Alabama may take his own course about the matter, just as I take my own course about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with these other measures, and I will stay here. We can turn the clock back until Tuesday.

Mr. ROBINSON. We can not do that.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can turn the clock back several hours to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. At 12 o'clock to-morrow we shall be compelled to adjourn.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; we can turn the clock back, and the RECORD will show that we have adjourned at 12 o'clock noon. That has been done a number of times; in fact, it is done nearly every time at the end of a short session of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT (and other Senators). Oh, no!

Mr. HEFLIN. I have seen it done in the House. Mr. President, we can get these matters attended to. I am fighting a hard battle here for the farmers who are scattered amongst 28,000,000 people of this Union; but if I am not going to be supported—and supported enthusiastically—by Democrats from the South, I want the RECORD to show that I have done my part, and I want the responsibility of the defeat of the legislation to be shifted from the Republican Party if anybody wants it to be shifted. It is now on that party. Let that party bear the responsibility. We have rights at this end of the Capitol; we have worked to accommodate the body at the other end; we work together; we cooperate; we pay respect to the wishes of the other House, and that House pays respect to the wishes of the Senate.

We are not trying to coerce the House. The House, I think, will pass the bill; the House wishes to pass it, I am told. It is not the House but two men in the House who are holding up this measure, so I am told. Should the Democrats from the South, either by their aid or by their opposition, help to throttle and kill this measure, which will benefit 28,000,000 people, for the purpose of serving the Fertilizer Trust? We had just as well let the truth be known. If this bill is killed, the Fertilizer Trust will profit millions of dollars and the farmers will be fleeced out of millions of dollars. That is the issue in a nutshell. I am fighting as God gives me the strength to fight for the farmer in every State in the cotton-growing section of the country. Of course, if the fight is not going to be cooperated in in the House, if the fight is not going to be cooperated in here, I may not be able to fight it out all by myself; but I may succeed by the aid of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and my good friend from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], who has been outraged to-night by a vote stopping him from reading what he wants to read. [Laughter.] I never saw that done before. You have permitted everybody to read everything they wanted to read. I have seen objection made when an article was sent to the desk, and you would make a Senator read it himself, perhaps in order to kill him physically, to break him down; but I never saw the rule invoked before that where a Senator wanted to read an article himself in his own remarks that he could not do so. However, I saw it invoked to-night by the Senator from Kansas. He is usually very clever. I can not understand why the Senator has no sympathy with our southern farmers.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I have sympathy with the southern farmers, but I have no sympathy on earth with this filibuster and this effort upon the part of the Senator from Alabama to coerce the other body of the Congress.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am satisfied you have not, and you will have less sympathy with it to-morrow morning than you have now. [Laughter.]

Mr. CURTIS. I can stand it as well as the Senator can.

Mr. HEFLIN. There will be several others aiding me before that time, and I will take a little nap and come back about 3 o'clock. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be silence in the galleries.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator says we are going to coerce the other body. I want to say again, lest there be a misunderstanding, that the other body wants to vote on this measure. The Speaker has the rule in his pocket, and a Member on the floor of the House announced to the Speaker that he had promised to recognize him and let them have a vote, and he never said anything. Now, I want to ask Senators if there is a unanimous report of the Rules Committee and Republicans as well as Democrats in the House want to vote, why should they not vote? Why should two men be permitted to pocket this measure, the failure to pass which will tax southern farmers $35,000,000 in the next three months? Can Senators answer that question?

Of course, the Fertilizer Trust wants this money. Of course, the Fertilizer Trust does not want this bill to pass, but I do not represent the Fertilizer Trust. I suppose I have infringed the rule in saying that, but I do not represent that trust. I know that the Fertilizer Trust does not want the bill passed, but I want it passed; my people want it passed; every farmer in the South wants it passed. Why can we not get it passed? If I could marshal the Democrats properly, I could whip those who are opposing this measure to a standstill, but we are going to whip them just the same.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. What is the business before the Senate?

Mr. HEFLIN. The business before the Senate is my speech.

Mr. MOSES. Let the Vice President answer the question, please.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I have made a parliamentary inquiry, and the Senator has to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 14222 is the business before the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry. How many times has the Senator from Alabama spoken on this question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the second time.

Mr. MOSES. He is now engaged in his second speech?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, is the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire satisfied? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOSES. Yes; but I think the Senator has spoken more than twice. The Senator will have to speak continuously from now on.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I am satisfied the Senator from New Hampshire would enforce that sort of a gag rule.

Mr. MOSES. It is not a gag rule; it is a standing rule of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has recently been made chairman of the campaign committee of the Republicans of the Senate and he is starting out well. He is invoking the tyrannical rule of shutting off debate. That is in keeping with the practice of his party. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already announced that there must be silence in the galleries.

Mr. HEFLIN. I submit, Mr. President, that there are so many amusing things occurring now with reference to the Republican Party that the people must laugh now and then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. "Laughter!" [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not catch the Senator's remark. What was the remark of the Senator from New York? I am informed that the Senator from New York said "Laughter." A few nights ago, Mr. President, when I was speaking and accusing the Republican Party generally of being in the control of Wall Street they sent my picture all over the country and said I had accused the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] of being the representative of Wall Street, although I had not said it. So the Senator from New York suggests "laughter." I want the notes of the reporter to indicate that there was laughter at two or three passages with the Senator from New York. [Laughter.] You may be able to suppress debate here, but not out on the hustings, where the people believe in free speech.

Now I want to announce another thing to the Senate, since the Senator from New Hampshire has been so very active. When I had spoken for three hours upon the subject a Senator came to me and told me that Senator MOSES, Senator LODGE, and Senator LA FOLLETTE, I believe, and himself were going over to the House and they thought they could communicate with the leaders and get favorable action. I tapered off my speech and closed in 18 minutes, relying upon that promise. I should like to know whether there has been anything done. Was that another piece of camouflage? Was that practiced on me to get me off my feet?

What sort of a performance were you carrying on with me? I was fighting honestly and enthusiastically. Was this done to make me think that something was going to be done favorable to the distressed farmers of my State and the other Southern States? Is that the sort of practice Senators would like to resort to in showing up to the country their subserviency to the special interests of the country? [Laughter.] Let the Senator from New York put that in his pipe and smoke it. I have had some very interesting letters from his constituents about that speech. If he would let me print them in the RECORD, they would be mighty wholesome reading to his constituents—that suggestion about Wall Street, and the like. Of course, I made no charge that the Senator was representing Wall Street. Of course, Wall Street is in his State. It is in all the States with its influence. It is the dominating power in the Republican Party to-day. No bill of any consequence can pass Congress without the O. K. of Wall Street.

I have here, in a book, a very interesting statement by Mr. Roosevelt, in 1912, when he said:

> I could name 46 Senators who secured their seats and held them by the favor of a Wall Street magnate and his associates in all parts of the country. Do you call that popular representative government?

He was once the President of your party. He said that when the Republican Party was in power. He said that 46 Senators in this body held their commissions by reason of the power of Wall Street; and when I said here a few days ago that I did not represent Wall Street, and that I did not represent the bond sharks and big financiers of Wall Street, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] rose and said that I was out of order, and that night the Republican Vice President ruled that I was out of order. Then, after the Republican Party had had time to sleep, you came in the next morning and cold-bloodedly voted, all but about eight of you, to sustain the rape of the rules and to suppress free speech.

What had I said to cause me to be taken off the floor and required to take my seat? Here was a Senator from a sovereign State, speaking for his people and for the best interests of the country, and talking about Wall Street, while these debts were being held back by the Government and Wall Street was collecting $1,700,000,000 from France and Great Britain, show the motives that Wall Street had for holding up all other measures while she collected her money, and I said: "I do not represent Wall Street. I am here to represent the people." They said, "You are out of order," and you had votes enough to sustain the ruling then; but, thank God! you will not have in the next Senate enough votes to sustain it. We have trimmed your majority down until it is exceedingly thin.

When the next Senate is organized I know that some of the progressives will stand by us. You will never be able to put over a ruling like that again. It will stand as a monstrous thing in the parliamentary proceedings in the history of the country. When we get in the majority, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] suggests, we are going to treat you decently. We will not put any gag rule on you. We will not have any cloture, either. A cloture rule in the Senate means death to free institutions. I never heard you invoke cloture when we were trying to revive the War Finance Corporation in 1921 to relieve a stricken people, pillaged and plundered by the leaders of your party. You never invoked it then. I never heard you invoke the cloture rule when we were trying to pass farm measures for the relief of agriculture. I never heard you invoke it for any measure that meant good to the common masses. Whenever you invoke it you invoke it for the special interests. That is what you invoke it for. Let the truth at least be told in the RECORD.

Mr. President, this statement of Mr. Roosevelt's is very interesting. I did not know he had said that; and after I made that speech, and the ruling was handed down, and I was halted in the debate, and we adjourned, everything stopped until morning, and you came in and voted to sustain that ruling. I have had letters from your States saying that they will preserve that roll call and meet you at Philippi next year when you run for office. I do not know whether you regard that situation as serious or not, but you broke down free speech in this body.

You stifled debate. You did violence to the rules. There is no such rule in the parliamentary procedure of this body. I got a letter, among other things on other lines, from a gentleman who said:

> Seeing what you said about Wall Street, I want to remind you of what Mr. Roosevelt said in 1912.

He told me where I could find it, and I sent over to the Library and got the book. I have received a number of interesting letters on this subject. They are going to be very interesting in the time to come, some of them along next December. I think probably we will be called in extra session about October. They will be interesting reading, and I am still getting them—hundreds and hundreds of them. The people resent this action by the Republican Party, claiming to be conservative, patriotic, preserving the institutions of the country, the ancient landmarks of the fathers, and coming in here with a ship subsidy bill that seeks to take out of the people's hands, out of the possession of the Government, three thousand million dollars' worth of ships and sell them for two hundred million dollars to the Ship Trust and beat the Government out of twenty-eight hundred million dollars. When that bill was up you threatened us with cloture. You threatened to cut off debate. You said: "We must have a vote," and you were undertaking to pass that bill by the aid of lame ducks, being appointed day by day to Federal jobs by a Republican President.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] said truly that it was an embezzlement of power. What right had you to call in these lame ducks? I have nothing against them personally. I am very fond of them personally, but I do not let my personal friendship for anybody interfere with my duty to my people and my obligations under my oath. They understand that. I fight for what I believe is right, and I mean no reflection on them personally. When a man has gone out to the polls in his home and the people, in solemn procession, marching to the ballot box, the ark of the covenant in our civic affairs, vote him out, and he comes back here sore with his constituents, as a rule, and he turns his eye toward the White House longingly, and the President calls him to come in, and when he walks in all is smiles between the two, and then an effort is made to get cloture to jam through a bill that you know you can pass under those conditions and that you know you can not pass after 12 o'clock to-morrow, when the new Senators come in, fresh from their constituents, equipped with commissions from their States, what right have you to force through a measure like that in the closing hours of the session? Yet you undertook to enforce cloture. You threatened it. You denounced freedom of debate.

I invite the attention of all of you who did not hear it to the able, eloquent, and unanswerable speech of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. He literally annihilated those who urged cloture in that debate. You sat and winced under the torrent of convincing logic that he poured into your ranks. Talk about preserving the landmarks, the ideals, and institutions of the Government! You are ready to tear down the bars and open this Chamber to quick, gag-rule action, so that Bolshevists and Socialists can take charge, and jam through without debate half-cooked legislation, and overthrow property rights and human rights in the Republic, and then you boast about your friendship for property rights and personal rights! Special interests crook their fingers and the leaders of the Republican Party proceed to dance. Special interests sound the bugle call and they come running to do their bidding.

Now, Mr. President, I want to state before I proceed to the discussion of this subject—— [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped for order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let the RECORD show that also. I do not want the Senator from New York saying that anybody interlined that. I just want a true record of events.

I want to say, Mr. President, that before I get into a discussion of this subject I am willing to yield for the passage of the farm credits bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield if it does not take me off my feet.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for the passage of the bill which is under consideration, which I think can be passed in five minutes?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not lose the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I can not promise what the parliamentary situation would be.

Mr. HEFLIN. I fear it would be very embarrassing for my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], because he wants to hear me speak three or four hours. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The present occupant of the chair will warn the galleries only once. Under the rules of the Senate, demonstrations are forbidden in the galleries, and if they are persisted in while the present occupant of the chair is presiding, the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will pardon me. If the Senator should yield for me to move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending bill, and that bill should be promptly passed and some other measure should be taken up, then the Senator from Alabama, of course, would be entitled to talk if he received recognition at the hands of the Chair, would he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would rule that in the event of the Senator yielding for the passage of a bill he would lose the floor in his present situation. If another measure is taken up, the Senator from Alabama, if recognized, can speak twice.

Mr. KING. I suggest, if the Senator will pardon me, that if he should yield for the consideration and passage of the bill and some other measure, of course, would promptly be brought before the Senate, he then could ask for recognition and resume his very interesting remarks.

Mr. HEFLIN. I fear, with the present occupant in the chair presiding, I would have difficulty in getting his eye. [Laughter.] He has a good eye, but I fear I should have difficulty in getting his eye if I should yield the floor, and while I have the floor and the present occupant is powerless to take me off the floor, I prefer to proceed for a while longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator from Alabama will permit me to ask another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would rather proceed now, having the floor. Mr. President, I dislike to see people interfered with when they see how the Republican Party is going on down to the demnition bow wows.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me one minute? If the Senator can yield to me without losing the floor——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this bill which the Senate practically passed unanimously and sent to the House could be put on as an amendment to the pending bill, and then could be taken up and concurred in or nonconcurred in, and this could be very quickly disposed of. As I understand, all these gentlemen ask is to have the privilege of the House acting on it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was about to say, Mr. President, that under Republican rule it has got to where people can not even approve anything from the galleries. People who come to this Capitol from all over the country, who come to look down upon this historic lawmaking body where men are pleading for right, for justice, for principle as eternal as the hills, find gag rules are employed, free speech is stifled, and when a Senator is speaking for the plain people and for common rights he is not allowed even to read from the RECORD speeches of those who fight battles in the same way at the other end of the Capitol.

Alas, alas, Mr. President, for the Republic. It is a glorious thing that another election is near at hand, when we can take you with your gag rules to the judgment bar of the people.

What sort of situation do we find ourselves in? Two or three men at the other end of the Capitol, they tell us, do not want a vote on this nitrate measure. I am not trying to coerce the House. I am trying to break down a secret filibuster on the part of somebody who will not let a vote be had by the Members who do want a vote. Why should I not be aided in a fight like that?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. STANLEY. I want to ask the Senator a question. How does the Senator think we can by any method in the Senate coerce action in the other body? What power have we, moral or physical, over the House of Representatives?

Mr. HEFLIN. None whatever.

Mr. STANLEY. I know the Senator is a profound constitutional lawyer, and I am asking this for information. It is my impression that it was the plain design of the framers of the Constitution that the two bodies should be absolutely independent——

Mr. HEFLIN. I know that. I can not yield for a speech from my friend, though I would be delighted to hear him.

Mr. STANLEY. One body shall not do anything to interfere with the other.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will pardon me, I am in thorough sympathy with his effort to help the farmer, and I want to make this suggestion as his friend and as a Democrat: The action on the part of certain persons on the other side of the Chamber may be and probably is as indefensible as he has described it. They are not of his political party, and the responsibility will be upon them if they have arbitrarily prevented legislation which is for the benefit of the farmer, and I hope he will let that blame rest right where it belongs; and while I have listened with great interest to his denunciation of abuses, if I am correct, I fear we can do nothing on this side to help matters, and we might delay some good legislation that ought to be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senator yielded for a question.

Mr. STANLEY. The question is asked.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield for any extended remarks, because I know the Chair wants to hear me proceed.

Mr. President, I am not a profound constitutional lawyer. I have not tried a law case in nearly 19 years; but I am profound in many of the things which pertain to the Government of the people. When I was first elected to Congress, in 1904, I dedicated my life to the service to which I had been called. I have devoted myself to the study of public questions. I have not studied anything outside of these questions. I have done my very best to represent the people. I have taken the people's view of things. I have tried to keep my Government in the right road. I have tried to ward off dangers that came to threaten it. I have tried to do that which I believed would bring about the greatest good to the greatest number. I have not represented any special interests. I have stood for the rule of the people and for the blessings and benefits I thought ought to flow to the masses. I do claim to be somewhat an authority on the subjects involved in that field.

I am not a profound constitutional lawyer. I never did claim to be, but I have seen a lot of fellows since I have been in Congress in the last 19 years who invoked the Constitution, never when a bill was up that affected the masses but only when something was about to be put over that would do justice by the masses against the classes. Then I have seen the profound constitutional lawyer come with his works, learned, too, and able and powerful debate would be made, although you had the votes and you had right on your side, to show that under the Constitution you could not lay the hand of regulation and control upon those interests which had grown up and become more powerful than the Government.

I hope to God I will never reach that proficiency in the knowledge of constitutional law where I will lose sight of the interests of the masses and go over bodily to support the interests of the special classes.

I want to say to my good friend from Kentucky that there is a way to get this action. We can bring this action inside of three hours if the Democrats on this side will rise up and fight as I am fighting. Does the Senator doubt that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas and other leading Senators over there, and some who think they are leaders who are not, could get action if they would go over and talk to the leaders in the House and say, "The only thing for us to do is to give them a vote"? We could accomplish our purpose inside of three hours' time. How are we going to accomplish it when Democrats are rising here and talking as if they are not in sympathy with this fight and undertaking, not intentionally, but, in fact, to relieve the Republicans of the responsibility that is on them?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just merely for a question. I do not want to yield the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor; I wish to answer his question. As the Senator has very graciously said, I have defended a filibuster, and I regard it at times as absolutely laudable and necessary. But the question I propounded to the Senator in all kindliness, and not in any sense of criticism, was this: We are not to blame for what happens on the other side of the Capitol. We are not responsible for it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I make the point of order that this is not a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just for a question. I want to proceed because it is getting late.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Alabama believe that under our form of government it is proper for one branch of our National Legislature to try to coerce the other branch by refusing legislation until the other branch acts?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I am not going that far. The other branch wants to act. I am fighting for the Members of the House who are living under the tyrannical rules passed by the Republican Party. They want to vote, but they can not vote. A Member on the floor this afternoon rose and told the Speaker that he promised him that they would give him a vote, and he did not say anything. The Members of the House want to vote. The Members of the House would pass the bill. I am not trying to coerce them. If they do not want to pass it, let them vote on it and kill it. All I want them to do is to have the agreement carried out, the faith to be kept, and the Speaker to do what he promised to do, when we have been letting bills pass for five days under that agreement. I would have started this fight five days ago but for my faith in the notice of that agreement. Now, because the faith is broken, I can not afford to stand here and permit two or three men to keep the other branch from voting, when Republicans and Democrats tell me they want to vote. Let us join here and get busy and let Republicans take the responsibility. We can pass all these bills. The President can call an extra session. If the bills are important and he considers the welfare of the people, it is his duty to keep us here for 10 days, until the calendar is cleared. If he does not want to do that, let him take the responsibility. I am waging a warfare against the bulwarks of the Republican Party and I am going to keep it up if I have to fight it by myself. I do not propose to yield to them. Let the responsibility go where it belongs.

Of course, they can get action. I am not trying to coerce the House. If the House does not want to vote, all right. The reason why I am fighting is that I am told by Republicans and Democrats that they would pass the bill if they could vote. The House wants to vote. I want the country to know, and this is the only way we can get it to the country, just what sort of rules they are operating under. When the majority stood ready to grant the relief one or two men with a rule in their pockets gagged the whole business and would not let them vote. That is the fight I am making. That is the fight in which I am entitled to have aid from every Democrat from the South. The very men who are holding it up have been defeated by their people at home. Does anyone think I am trying to coerce them? Not at all.

No, Mr. President; it is hard to make a fight against the odds I am fighting to-night. Thank God there is a judgment bar to which we can go, and that is to the people. I want the people to know and they shall know. They will know by this discussion that I have participated in to-day, that the Senator from Georgia has participated in, and that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] will participate in later on, as well as four or five other Senators. That is the only way the people can know it. Let the responsibility fall where it ought to rest. They can not say I did not do my best. They can not say I sat silent in the closing hours of this session and permitted that sort of thing to be worked on my people. They can not say that when I knew they voted through Congress the privilege of returning to the big rich of the country seventy-odd millions of dollars through the makeshift that they had paid in more than they ought to have paid in taxes. They can not say that I sat silent when my people were asking for a loan for about three months of $10,000,000 to be paid back in cash when the goods were delivered and the Government not lose a cent.

This is the only way. I repeat it is mighty hard on one or two or three or half a dozen to make a fight of this sort. Mr. President, the Democratic Party is a militant party. The Democratic Party stands for the people. The Democratic Party can not be manipulated by the interests. If that day ever comes I shall quit it. It is not going to come as long as I can have anything to do with it.

Mr. President, I was reading this afternoon——

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to comment briefly on the ruling that was made here, that a Senator could not read. The Senator from Kansas may rest a little while longer. I shall not take that up right now. I will give him a chance to make his point of order a little later on in the morning.

Sleepy Hollow, awakened by the reading of a speech of some virile Member in the House, says, "It is out of order; stop it." If there is anything on earth that this body needs, it is some virile fighting spirit in it. If there is anything on earth this body needs, it is a rejuvenation of it. We need a house cleaning in this body. There are a lot of fellows who ought to be out of it, in my judgment. Talk about changing the terms of Members of the House! For the convenience of the Members of the House I would not object, but, Mr. President, I have seen too many men with a six-year term in this body seem to lose interest in the masses of the people at home. I have seen them grow cold and careless about the interests of the masses; and when we begin to talk about moving up the terms of Members of the House for four years and Members of the Senate six years I would more likely favor giving a Member of the Senate four years and a Member of the House two years and keep both of them as close to the people as possible.

Now, we know, Senators, that it has been rumored in the past that when a man served here and got a little cold and indifferent to the people at home the special interests seek him out. They will have subsidized newspapers praise him to the sky. They get the people back home to thinking he is a wonder, a perfect marvel, a genius, a constructive statesman; but the fellow who dares fight them and their crooked interests is a different proposition, and they wonder how he got into the Senate and they commence saying he ought to be beaten. They fight to control this body. It has been called by some the millionaires' club. It has been called by some the rendezvous of privilege. I pray God that those expressions may never be true of it. I do not say that they are.

But I know that we have heard it said that these interests will go around and commence trying to pluck men off. Talk about the greatest battles that ever were fought, they have been fought here in Washington every week and month when Congress is in session. They are working in various ways to get men over and put the center of gravity in a man's nature on the side of the special interests. If they can do that and he tells them, "Well, I am liable to get beaten," they pat him on the shoulder and say, "That is all right, my boy. We will have the President appoint you to a fat office or we will employ you and give you a fine salary." Many a man has gone to sleep through that process in times past. Many of them will go to sleep.

I can not see anything wrong in my demanding that this body shall be responsive to the people. I can not see anything wrong in my demanding that certain legislation be enacted, especially when I hear that a majority stands for it.

The Senator from Kansas made the point of order when the Senator from Georgia, standing here fighting for his people, was reading what was said in the other branch of Congress, and we were told that was against our rules. I do not recall a week since I came into this Chamber in December, 1920, when some one has not read something from somebody's speech in the House. That is all right. We are not criticizing the Members of the House. We are reading something they said. They are Members of Congress, just Members of another branch. The Senator from Georgia stood up here and read, and the Senator from Kansas rose up and said that he is out of order. The Chair ruled that he was out of order. They stopped the Senator from Georgia from reading very interesting matter from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD presented by a Member of the House. I know that I can take a dozen Senators in this body and get action upon that bill—either that, or let them take the responsibility. I am not going to hold up the farm credits bill. I will yield the floor any minute to pass the farm credits bill. God knows the farmers need that aid, if there is any aid in it, and I am willing to give it a trial. I am willing to suspend my remarks to pass the farm credits bill. And I want the RECORD to show, if you force us to fight until 12 o'clock to-morrow noon, that I and those with me fighting for the struggling farmers of the cotton-growing States offer to yield at any time for you to pass that bill. You are not going to be able to say that we held that bill up. I state again that I will yield the floor for the passage of that bill. So far as I can now see the situation, that is the only bill for which I will yield. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] just said he would agree to that. Will the Senator from South Carolina agree to it?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. I want that bill to pass.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Georgia, and myself all make that statement. Each one of them has told me that he would agree to that. I state it again, that we are ready to suspend and let you pass the farm credits bill without debate and get that out of the way. So if that bill is held up the President will certainly call an extra session for at least 10 days or two weeks. Then we can clean up all these matters. Let us fight; that is the way to get action.

[At this point Mr. HEFLIN yielded to a parliamentary inquiry and debate ensued.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, under the dreadful drive of deflation I saw great industries of this country close and millions—not a few thousands, but millions—of laboring men turned out in the street, with nothing to live upon and no promise as to when the industry would again resume its activities.

Mr. President, that is a serious situation. I have known men hard pressed, with but little of this world's goods, sit down and bemoan their fate because they did not have enough to live on for 10 or 15 years. Think of the poor fellow with a family to support, and who supports them by his skill and genius and the strength of his arms, who sees the use of them taken from him by industrial conditions produced by the order of the speculating class in the country, which wants to gobble up the riches of the land. Behold him as he is turned out into the street go home at night and report to his family that he will not go back to work to-morrow. That happened in the case of 7,000,000 Americans under Republican deflation in 1920. Did anybody offer to loan money to those poor fellows at 2 per cent then as they are seeking to do to the Shipping Trust? Not one. Not only that, but they could not obtain a loan at any price. So they suffered and their families suffered. There was no occasion for it. There was no occasion for drastic deflation; nothing on earth to justify it. I received a letter from the president of the Reform Bankers' League of London, who had read a copy of my speech upon the subject of deflation. He said that it was strange that the two great countries in the allied ranks, the United States and Great Britain, should pursue the policy of deflation and bring financial embarrassment and distress upon the two countries, and that there was no excuse for it, as I had said. He agreed with me upon that question. Sir

Reginald McKenna, of the Bank of England, stated that that policy would enrich a few and impoverish the many. Well, that was the effect of it. It did that right here in the United States.

I have stated before, and I now repeat, that under the deflation policy the Wall Street speculators made more money than ever before. During the time that millions of laboring men were being driven from employment and their livelihood entirely taken from them; during the time that millions of farmers were being impoverished; during the time that half the mother herds on the western plains were being sacrificed they were making more money than ever before. They were reveling as did the company at Belshazzar's feast, while the cry of the people of the South and West went up in vain.

I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping. Somebody sent it to me. I do not know from what newspaper this editorial is taken, but it reads like the New York Journal of Commerce or the Wall Street Journal; and if I were a betting man, I should bet that it was taken from one or the other of those papers. Criticizing the President for not reappointing W. P. G. Harding as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, the editorial states:

> Governor Harding was not reappointed because he had refused to imperil the soundness of the Federal reserve system by favoring farming interests to the extent they demanded.

Because he would not "imperil the soundness of the Federal reserve system by favoring farming interests to the extent they demanded"! A more astounding untruth was never uttered.

Mr. President, the Federal Reserve Board declined to loan money to the farmers on cotton, though cotton is the finest security in the world. In normal times it gives to our country the balance of trade and brings to America every year more gold than the world's annual output, yet the Federal Reserve Board whispered the order down the line not to loan money on cotton. Then, what was the condition of the cotton farmer? He was left helpless in the market place and robbed of the fruits of his toil. The man who only a few days before, when cotton was falling down below the cost of production, had been able to go to the bank, present his warehouse receipt, borrow money on it, and thereby keep up the price and force the buying world to pay him a price that would cover the cost of production plus a profit, had that right taken away from him. He had then no way to keep his cotton off the market, but was forced to put it on the market regardless of market conditions, and the price went down and down and down.

It fell from 40 cents to 10 cents—and remember that it cost 30 cents a pound to produce it. The cold-blooded, selfish individual, whoever he was, who wrote this editorial had no sympathy for the farmer. What does he care about a human being who is trying to make an honest living? He was afraid we would imperil the soundness of the Federal reserve banking system by going to the rescue of the farmer? It is not so.

Mr. President, I helped to create the Federal reserve system, and I helped to have cotton recognized as eligible collateral. Cotton was made eligible as collateral at the Federal reserve banks. That did great good to our people; it was of great value to the farmers of the South; indeed, it was a great blessing to them; but the Federal Reserve Board stopped the loans on cotton and then turned to Wall Street and permitted the speculators there to borrow every dollar they wanted at 6 per cent.

What did we create the Federal reserve banking system for? What do we create any banking system for? What is the purpose of a banking system, if you please? It is to serve the business needs of the people. Mr. President, the Government ought not to give its sanction to the creation of an institution that will not do that. We do not establish banking institutions for the purpose of creating a great rich banking class and enabling that class to derive riches from the impoverishment of the other classes of our people—not at all. We want the banks to do well—I do, and I am sure that we all do—but primarily a banking system is set up as a part of the business machinery of the country; it is to supply the lifeblood of business, which is money and credit; and if the banking system does not do that it is a failure.

Did the farmer fail to work? If he did not break his ground and make a crop, he had nobody to blame but himself, if he could get credit and the means to enable him to do it; but I submit to the Senate and to fair-minded men and women everywhere that when the farmer goes out in the spring and breaks his soil and plants his crop and cultivates it and brings in the sheaves at the harvest time, he is entitled to have the money necessary to carry his business through to a successful and profitable conclusion, and the banking system that will not afford him that credit is a failure, and the Government that will not see that such a system is established is itself a failure.

I contend that this great American form of Government of ours is the greatest ever devised by the genius of man. Why is it, then, that we can not establish such a system? I will tell you why, Mr. President. It is because under Republican rule a few men in Wall Street control the legislative power upon that subject. It was not always thus and it will not always be thus. The Congress that is coming into power on the 4th of next March, in my judgment, will be more favorable to a fair and just credit system.

What were we told when we went with our collateral and asked for money at the banks during that period of deflation? We were told the Federal reserve banking system is not suited to that character of business. I deny the truthfulness of such a statement. The Federal reserve banking system answered every need of business until deflation was born in Wall Street and put into operation by the Federal Reserve Board. What more did we want? We could borrow money on cotton, which is our cash crop to-day, and when we could borrow on cotton, that served our purpose. The grain man could borrow on his grain; the cattleman could borrow on his cattle; and so everything was well until the word went out to stop loaning on cotton, grain, and cattle.

Mr. President, it is useless to try to dodge the issue. That was a plain holdup of the agricultural sections of the country. It struck down the cotton producers, it struck down the grain growers of the West, and it prostrated the cattle people of the country. When you did that you struck down the great productive enterprises of America, and a government that will permit a thing like that to be done is guilty of wrongdoing.

When these speculators in Wall Street made $150 on a bale of cotton by speculating they never owned a pound of cotton. When cotton was 40 cents a pound and Governor Harding and his board decided to deflate, and when they stated that we could not have loans on cotton, Wall Street speculators knew what that meant, and what did they do? They sold the market. They sold when cotton was 40 cents and the farmer could get no money or credit with which to keep his cotton off the market, and the price went down in a hurry to 10 cents a pound, and the fellow who sold cotton futures on the exchange took down $150 a bale, and the farmer lost it. It cost the farmer $100 more than he got for it to produce it, so he lost the cost of production and the $50 profit that he would have had. He is the man who had a family to support, children to educate, and to provide some of the comforts and conveniences of life, and he is stricken down, he is sacrificed, and the gambler flourishes in rank luxuriance in Wall Street. Nobody said anything about imperiling the banking system then. None of these high brows said anything about borrowing money for speculative purposes then. They never questioned one of them.

I have charged here, and offered to produce the proof by a former high official of the Government, that during that period one man, a prominent Republican, borrowed for speculative purposes on a dummy note in New York from a member bank $3,000,000.

Mr. President, those who think the people are going to forget these things are very much mistaken. The crime of '73 has never been forgotten by students of financial and economic history, by men and women who hate crime, pillage, and plunder. The crime of '73 pales into insignificance compared to the crime of 1920. It is the most colossal crime in all the history of our country. Here we were emerging from a world war with victory perched upon our banner, coming home victorious into the richest Nation in all the world; and these people who while the soldier was away fighting reveled in evil doing, taking advantage of their Government and selling it war supplies and material at all sorts of high prices, were not satisfied, and they proceeded to hatch and carry out a plan of deflation that spread a pall of gloom all over the country, paralyzed our industries, struck down agriculture, and turned seven millions of laboring men out of employment; and then they ask us to quit talking about that and forget it!

Mr. President, the little coterie of men who brought about that scheme are going to be punished. We have already in a measure punished some of them. We are going to punish more of them. We are going to keep up the fight until every one of them has branded upon his brow the scarlet letter of deceit and unfaithfulness to the American people. They might just as well get ready for it. This last campaign was a mere skirmish compared to what you are going to see two years from now. We did not have the opportunity to get the issue fairly before the country, but we are going to get it there in the next campaign.

The American people are going to see to it that this Government is not milked by a few people for their enrichment, for their vile and avaricious purposes. This Government—the money lords may not know it—was established for the good of all the people. It was set up here in order that we might adopt policies that would bring about the greatest good to the greatest number.

These purse-proud individuals, who think that they are going to control the politics of this Government and control legislative policies by the power of the purse, have another thought coming to them. They were unable in the recent campaign to control the ballots in many States, and more and more that condition is going to obtain. The people are going to see to it. The men and women of this Nation are realizing more and more the danger of permitting the moneybags of Wall Street to go out and control the election of a United States Senator, to buy it as you would cattle in the market place.

Why, one of these pompous fellows of considerable wealth told me, in talking about one of his Senator friends who had been defeated in the last election, "I went down in my pockets pretty strongly for him, and if I had known he was in any danger I would have gone down a good deal stronger." I had several right serious thoughts concerning him in my mind while he was talking to me; and after I went off I reflected, "That is that old fellow's conception of government and how officers should be selected—just go out and buy control of the agencies that in turn control the Government." He did not say that if he had known this friend of his was in danger he would have appealed to the judgment and conscience of the voters; that he would have tried to show them wherein they were wrong in opposing him; but, standing back, rather chestylike, he said, "If I had known that he was in any danger I would have gone down in my pocket a good deal deeper than I did."

Predatory interests are more active than ever in trying to control the Senate. We must preach a crusade against the corrupt use of money in politics. No one ought to be elected to a seat in this body except upon his merit, upon the things he really stands for, upon his moral courage, upon his ability and disposition to do that which is best for the people of his State and country. That is the yardstick that we ought to use in measuring those who aspire to seats in the Senate. When a man announces for office let the people ask, "What manner of man is he? Is he honest? Is he capable? Is he a man of courage? Are his sympathies with the masses? Would he stand, under fire, true to his convictions and true to the people?"

The agents of greed and avarice want you to take the base and vulgar view and ask "How much money has he got?"

They are not thinking of decency and honesty in politics. They are not considering the principles of fair play and justice in government, and they care nothing for the purpose or preservation of our free institutions.

Mr. President, I made a successful race in my State for the Senate, and I did not even have a State organization. I did not open State headquarters at all. The people of my State knew us all. There were some very clever gentlemen in the race with me. I would probably have supported nearly every one of them for anything except the office they were then running for, because that conflicted with my own desire and plans in the premises.

Mr. HARRIS. And with the best interests of the State.

Mr. HEFLIN. And with the best interests of the State, my friend from Georgia suggests. But, Mr. President, I want to mention in this connection an interesting incident in the life of old General Pettus, who served faithfully in this body for years. We reelected him to the Senate when he was 82 or 83 years old, and the only expense that he had was $1. He paid that to the secretary of state as the fee fixed by law for issuing his commission. I was the secretary of state at the time. He referred to the incident regarding the fee on the floor of the Senate. He was urging that money should not be used corruptly in campaigns, and he pointed with pride to his own beloved Alabama and pointed out how the people of his State had indorsed him and reelected him without it costing him one 5 cents in the campaign. He said, "I come from a State where they elect a man on his merit and not on his or anybody else's money. Why should there be a big campaign fund raised for a candidate for the Senate?"

Mr. President, special interests have encouraged that in order to prevent strong men of moderate means from becoming candidates and to get the candidate under obligations to them. I am going to speak on that subject one of these days.

Why should it cost a United States Senator more than $10,000 to make a race for the Senate? Why should a man be permitted to spend more for a seat in this body than his salary will be for the six years' term? We had an instance of that sort in the Newberry case, where the amount of money spent was many times more than the whole salary that the man would have drawn as a Senator. One of the purposes of this dollar aristocracy is to make these positions hard to get and to say to the poor man, it makes no difference how much merit he may have, "Why, you can not go into that; you have got to have a pile of money."

I had two or three gentlemen tell me, "It is a very costly thing you are going into; it will take a heap of money." That was when these particular gentlemen, for somebody else, were trying to keep me from running. They said, "You already have a seat in the House. You have no opposition in your district. You will not have any opposition. You can remain in the House, and why not just hold to what you have? It is going to cost you a heap of money to run for the Senate." They were trying to frighten me, it seemed, and I said, "No; it will not cost me much. I would not spend it if I had it, and I am not going to spend a dollar for any illegitimate purpose," and I never had a man in the State, not one, make a request of me for a dollar that was not for a legitimate purpose, proper in every way.

So I desire to add my testimony to that of the illustrious and beloved Pettus and say that I represent a State whose voting electorate, thank God, are not for sale.

Mr. President, the founders of this Republic never intended that the time should come when a fat purse would be the passport to an office in the Senate of the United States. The interests which have undertaken to carry on a propaganda of that sort have gone a long way with it. They have succeeded in electing a great many of those they wanted to fill places in this body. I am in favor of giving a fair deal to every interest, big or little, in the country. Mr. President, strange to say, the time has come in this country of ours when, if you come here and ask that justice be done to several millions of people engaged in the business of agriculture, you are called by the agents of predatory interests a Socialist or a Bolshevist. I am a Democrat myself, and I hold that the Democratic Party has the right solution for all these problems. The Democratic Party is free from entangling alliances with any special interest. There is not an interest in Wall Street, amongst the money lords of that locality, which can intimidate, coax, or coerce the Democratic Party.

That is why every now and then you see such an uprising of the people and their flocking over into the camps of Democracy. But the people are fooled every now and then, and the old standpatters will get them back in line and will get in for one term. Then the people soon see who controls that party when in power. Republicans undo the beneficial things the Democrats have done for the people; and when the people see what they do when tried, they come back home and put the Democrats back in power.

What has become of that 7,000,000 majority that the Republicans got in the fall of 1920? They used to stand on the other side and throw out their chests and boast about that 7,000,000 majority, and I reminded them of what Mr. Taft did; that he went in by a million majority and went out by unanimous consent. [Laughter.] I told them that was going to happen to them. Well, it did in several States. The people are coming to realize that if they would win, they must fight. They are thinking more and more of their individual responsibility. They are coming to realize more and more that this Government does not belong to that coupon-clipping crowd in Wall Street. They are perverting it from the ends of its institution. They are controlling it for their own selfish purposes and to the hurt and injury of a hundred million people, and the people are getting exceedingly tired of it. That is why you heard such rumblings around over the country in October and up to the 7th of November, when a terrible explosion took place and blew out of their seats several Republican Senators.

Mr. President, I want, and the Democratic Party wants, a fair deal for every State bank and for every member bank in the Federal reserve system. Those in and those out should be treated right. I am for sound banking and sound money; I am for preserving the Federal reserve banking system intact, and I am for having a Federal Reserve Board which will administer the act honestly and impartially and look after the interests of the whole people and not, as it did in 1920, serve the wants of Wall Street, the speculators of the East, and sacrifice the whole populations of the South and West. That is what they did then.

Ask any Senator here who has come fresh from the conflict in those States what the people were talking about in the recent campaign, and he will tell you they were talking about deflation. The people know what it means, and yet the de-flationists expected to be able to get off with it by saying it followed the war; it could not be helped; it just had to come. I know that that is not so, and everybody else of any intelligence knows it is not so.

As a reason for saying that is not so I point to the fact that the first year after a war is always the worst year, if you have hard times at all. But the first year after the great World War was the most prosperous year we had. Everything was lovely, money was easy, and all was well the first year following the war, and on into the summer of 1920. The deflation drive was made to order. I have heretofore stated that the bulletins of the Federal Reserve Board, published right up to that time, would read like this:

"No occasion for alarm. Business outlook good. Everything points toward a very prosperous year, and no disturbance to American prosperity is expected."

That was when the people were being committed to various undertakings in various enterprises. That was when they were making their plans for the year and assuming obligations of debt amounting to billions of dollars. That was when the Fertilizer Trust was unloading fertilizer on the farmers at tip-top prices. That was when the manufacturer was getting rid of his goods. The farmer, the merchant, and the country banker had obligated themselves for the year's business. They were tied up to the big manufacturer and he could not lose. Every dollar would be paid to him in the course of four or five or six years.

So deflation was deliberately planned. It was made to order. It was simply born in Wall Street, as I said, and put into execution down here, and the people in the country paid the dreadful penalty—poverty, pain, anxiety, want, and death.

Thousands killed themselves during that dreadful period, and those who conducted the deflation policy have on their hands and heads the blood of every man and woman who died under that merciless deflation drive. It is a serious thing to take a man's substance, all of his earnings, and sweep it all away in a few weeks' time. I have stood in the streets of a town where the fire had devoured its buildings, swept it clean, where nothing was left but chimneys and ashes to show where prosperous business houses had been.

Mr. President, in 1920 I saw whole communities, counties, and States in the South swept by the destroying demon of deflation. Business distress and financial disaster were seen on every hand. Peace and prosperity were taken from us and discontent and debts were left in their stead. Farm products, farm homes, and farm lands were sacrificed in the mighty maelstrom of deflation. Congress owes it to the farmers of America to provide currency and credit facilities sufficient to enable them to carry on their business in the first part of the year, at the planting time, when they are getting ready to make their crops; later on in the spring of the year, when they are cultivating them; in the summer time, in the fall time, and on until they dispose of them at a profit in the market place. That is what we should do. The American farmer should be equipped with credit and currency facilities that will go with him from the time he puts his plow in the ground in the fall or spring until he parts with the fruits of his toil in the market place. If the commercial banking system will not supply his peculiar needs, he must have a system that will. Agriculture is the basic industry of the Nation, and the Nation must see to it that the agricultural industry has a fair deal in the financial affairs of the Nation.

Mr. President, agriculture should be so recognized, appreciated, and supported that all of our banking institutions would welcome the opportunity to aid it. The Master himself when He was upon earth said the laborer is worthy of his hire. That is the doctrine that I want to see carried into effect. Let me bring to your attention the farmers' situation with regard to cowhides. There was no market at all for them during the deflation drive. The farmer could not buy a pair of shoes with the price of five steer hides. Just think of that. Five steer hides sold in the market, hides taken from five big, fat western steers, would not buy a pair of shoes for the farmer who sold the hides. He could not borrow money on them either. But make them into shoes and put them in the store of the big wholesale merchant and he could go to the bank and get all the money he wanted. The farmer could not borrow money on wheat, but grind it into flour and move it into a big wholesale store and the wholesale merchant could go to the bank and get money on it. The farmer could not borrow money on corn, but grind it into meal and put it in the big wholesale store and the wholesale merchant could go to the bank and borrow money on it. The farmer could not get money on cotton, but spin it into cloth and the big wholesale merchant could go to the bank and get money on it. The farmer and cattleman could not borrow money on cattle, but make them into beef and put them in the packer's plant and he could go and get thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars on the beef. That was the work of cruel and criminal deflation.

What sort of a system is it that will crush the man who is working the primary industry and is producing the things that you and I must eat and wear? Are we going to say to him, "We are not going to help you; that stuff you are producing is not eligible at the bank." Then suppose he should say, "I will quit producing it then. I can go down and work in the cotton factory or somewhere else and put money in my pocket, and I will not have to eke out the miserable existence you are forcing upon me on the farm." So he leaves the farm. How long would it be until we would hear the cry go up in America for the Government to do something to make farm life attractive and farming profitable?

All that I want done in this matter and all the farmer is asking is to provide banking facilities that will enable the farmer to have the currency and credit facilities necessary to make his business a success. He is entitled to that.

There are not only thousands but millions of farmers now in distress. I hold that it is the first duty of this Government to go to the rescue of the farmers and their wives and children and restore to them in some way that which deflation took away.

What became of Zaccheus when he climbed up into the sycamore tree that he might get sight of the Master as he marched along the road? When he came down and told the Master that he was ready to repent, the Master said to him, "Go and restore to them the money that you have taken and the usurious interest that you have charged." That was the saddest note that ever fell upon the ear of old Zaccheus. If we had any way of doing it, I would be in favor of marching into Wall Street by the edict of Congress and take the billions of which they robbed the people of the South and West in 1920 and 1921 and restore it to the farmers whom they have pillaged and impoverished in our country. But there is no way to do that, Mr. President. But we can prevent the recurrence of such a crime. They made out of the cotton crop in my State in 1920—they stole through their deflation process—$103,000,000 from the farmers of Alabama on a crop of 660,000 bales. Think of that. They stole $1,625,000,000 on that years' crop from the South, and hundreds of millions from the West on their cattle and grain. That is gone. Those people have it. We have no way of getting it back, but I will tell you what we are going to do. We are going to fix it so that thing can not happen again. Our purpose here is to see to it that that thing does not occur any more. If we do not see to it we are unfaithful to the trust that has been reposed in us.

Mr. President, the situation among our farmers is deplorable. Something ought to be done. Those of us who stand here and speak for the great agricultural sections of the South and West are greatly in earnest about this matter. Those who permitted Wall Street to clip her coupons and to coin her millions and her billions out of the deflation policy permitted by the Republican Party ought now to extend a helping hand to the sections that were literally held up and robbed during that period. Why, the deflated values in the South amounted to five or six billions of dollars the first year. Where did that money go? It went into the pockets of the speculators and the high financiers of Wall Street. They deflated the property values in the West, the cattle upon the plains, and the grain. Where did that money go? It went into the pockets of the grain speculators and the high financiers of Minneapolis, Chicago, and New York, amounting to six or seven billions of dollars. Now, when we come and tell you that farmer after farmer has his home mortgaged, the very rooftree under which his children were born mortgaged, and that he can not pay the mortgage; his cattle are mortgaged, as is the growing crop; the very bread and meat that he is producing to eat are mortgaged, and we are asking you to join us in a step to call an economic conference to better the condition of these people, and what do you do? Why, all the batteries of your party are brought to bear to defeat such a movement. God pity the leadership of the Republican Party!

Mr. President, my own conscience is clear. I helped to pass through the Senate the bill providing for the purchase of nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate to be used by our farmers in the South in producing cotton under boll-weevil conditions. If that bill could become a law it would be the means of saving to the farmers of Alabama and of the other cotton-growing States from $30 to $35 a ton on nitrate of soda. It would save to them on calcium arsenate poison with which to fight the boll weevil several million dollars. The farmers of the cotton-growing States and their real friends want it passed, but the Fertilizer Trust does not want it passed.

I sincerely trust that this very important bill will be permitted to pass the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can only yield for a question. If my friend wishes to ask me a question, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I will not take the Senator off the floor. The Senator has just exhibited a little generosity. I will ask him to yield while we take up for consideration, and we shall very promptly pass, House bill 14222.

Mr. HEFLIN. A little later on; I will think of that while I am standing here.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. HEFLIN. If I could get the Chair to agree to recognize me after that bill was voted on I might let Senators get the bill out of the way.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Would not the Senator from Alabama have a right to the floor if we should pass the bill referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and then some other matter should then come up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would not so hold.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Presiding Officer will allow me, the Senator from Alabama has a right to speak twice on the pending bill. If we should pass it, some other bill would then come before the Senate, and he would have a right to speak twice on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Provided he could secure recognition.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. "Provided he could secure recognition." Well, "under them heads," as Uncle Rastus says, I will proceed. I have already got the floor now, and the Chair was about to rule that I could not proceed on another subject, but the Senator from Mississippi made it so plain to him that he had to change that ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will suspend while the Chair requests him not to put rulings into the mouth of the Chair. The Chair was not about to rule in any sense as the Senator from Alabama has stated.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the Chair ruled that according to his judgment I would not be entitled to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate that is correct. If the Senator yielded for the passage of a bill he would yield the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly. Then the Senator from Mississippi asked if I could speak on the other matter, and the Chair ruled that according to his judgment I could not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled nothing of the sort. The Chair ruled that the Senator could proceed if he secured recognition.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I must respectfully ask for the Reporter's notes to be read from the time the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] rose and what the Chair said following that, because I want to be absolutely accurate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama again yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Alabama knows that he would receive recognition if he rose to address the Chair on any bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not certain of that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, the Senator has never been denied recognition.

Mr. HEFLIN. I must be very frank with the Senator from Iowa, even at the risk of being called down. I am not certain of the accuracy of the suggestion which he has made. I doubt very seriously whether or not I should get recognition. Candor compels me to make that answer. I already have the floor, and I will keep it.

Mr. President, I do not intend ever to surrender my rights in this body. I know what my rights are. Whenever the majority party wants to undertake gag rule in this Chamber let them proceed.

The ruling made here a few weeks ago against me was violative of every precedent of the Senate and without a parallel in the parliamentary procedure of this body. It reminds me more of what happened in the House of Burgesses when Patrick Henry was speaking and they stopped him, and when other colonial representatives were speaking and they stopped them. They denied the right of petition; they abolished legislatures.

What did you do here? You denied me the right of free speech; you stopped me from speaking when I was telling the Senate and the country that Wall Street had collected $1,700,000,000, while the Government had not collected a dollar except a little from Great Britain in interest. Then when I was saying I did not represent Wall Street, and so forth, I was called to order. Oh, Mr. President, we make history. These records will be read by somebody who will come here long after we are gone. I would not object to giving an opportunity to vote on the bill of the Senator from Iowa if he would see that I got recognition afterwards.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. Is it proper at this stage of the proceedings, with the consent of the Senator from Alabama, to submit a unanimous-consent proposition, to wit, that we proceed to the consideration of House bill 14222, consider it for 10 minutes, pass it, and then ask unanimous consent for the Chair to recognize the Senator from Alabama?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Alabama yields for the purpose of permitting the unanimous-consent agreement to be submitted, of course it may be submitted to the Senate. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah for the purpose indicated?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor, I will yield.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will ask the Senator from Utah again to state his unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 1220, and that upon the passage of that bill the Chair recognize the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Permit the Chair to state to the Senator from Utah that the bill to which he refers is now before the Senate, and the Senate is supposedly considering it. If the Senator from Utah frames his unanimous-consent proposal in a different form, probably it may be properly submitted.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may resume the consideration of calendar No. 1220, and that upon its passage the Chair shall recognize the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I would not object to that if the Senator will include in his request a provision that we may have an executive session for a few moments before some other measure is taken up.

Mr. SWANSON. I suggest to the Senator that the proposal be put in this form: That the Senate consider the measure for 10 minutes; that then, without further debate, we proceed to vote on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage, and that after the vote is taken, in 10 minutes, the Senator from Alabama will be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the Senator from Utah to reduce his request for unanimous consent to a form in which it may be accepted?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the multitude of advice, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. President, you see I am not to blame. I was willing to agree, but it looks as if the other side do not want me to stop. They seem to want me to go on.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not so far as I am concerned. I am very anxious——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question. I am in sympathy with the clever Senator from Iowa. I should like to help him out.

Mr. CUMMINS. My question is this: Will the Senator from Alabama consent, if the Senate will consent, to yield the floor until the passage of the bill now under consideration, at the end of that time the Senator from Alabama to be recognized upon any measure before the Senate?

Mr. HEFLIN. How long does the Senator think it will take to pass the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it can be passed in 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield under that condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to understand what the unanimous-consent agreement is? If it is limited to 10 minutes, I should not be willing to agree to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is not limited.

Mr. WILLIS. If it is a matter of opinion, very well. I have an amendment to offer, but I will not take very much time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 10, after the numerals "$1,0,000," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no insurance partnership, association, or corporation, against which any claim or claims may be filed by any citizen of the United States with the Alien Property Custodian within 60 days after the passage of this act, whether such claim appears to be barred by the statute of limitations or not, shall be entitled to avail itself of the provisions hereof until such claim or claims are satisfied.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR MYERS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as the Senate seems disposed to do nothing but talk this evening, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes. I am always willing to do my share. Mr. President, at noon to-morrow my service in this body will cease and I shall retire to private life. This is probably the last time I shall ever address the Presiding Officer and the Members of this body, and I take this occasion to bid adieu to my service here and to my esteemed associates and the officials and employees of the Senate.

My 12 years of service in this body have been busy years of unremitting, hard, and exacting toil, but they have had many pleasant features and have afforded me much enjoyment. During my 12 years of service I have endeavored to serve conscientiously the best interests of my country and to labor faithfully for the material welfare of my constituents. If I have measurably succeeded in those designs, I am quite satisfied.

I know I have gained much benefit from my service. I hope my country and my constituents have gained some. My service here has broadened my views, enlarged the scope of my vision, and enlightened me upon some vital things.

When I entered this body, a country lawyer and judge, I was very much of a political partisan, and, I think, rather a narrow one. I thought that about all the good things and good people were in my party. I had been reared and had lived in that atmosphere.

While I now believe as implicitly as ever in the principles of my party and believe as strongly as ever that they are the true and best principles for a republican form of government, since coming here I have realized as never before that there are good things, good principles, good people, good Americans in both of the major political parties. I have learned that we are all Americans, and that the great majority of the people in both of the major parties are good citizens who are aiming at the same ultimate end, good government, and that they differ only as to the methods to be used in attaining that end. We should all be Americans first, party men second, for I believe every good American citizen should belong to some party. I am a believer in government by party, but I believe Americanism and love of country should come first.

While I prefer the principles of my own party, I do not believe all the good things, all the good ideas, all the good people are in any one party. My service and observations here have caused me to respect the views, the sincerity, the honesty of conviction of others, and especially of political opponents, as I never did before. While I believe my views are right and correct, for if I did not I would not hold them, I am willing to concede to opponents the same sincerity of conviction that I claim for myself.

The associational features of my service here have been to me most pleasant, and I have greatly enjoyed them. In the United States Senate are some very fine men, some men of extraordinary ability, some most delightful gentlemen, some charming characters. It has been a pleasure to me to be associated with the Members of this body, and I have esteemed it a great honor to be one of its Members. The Senators come from widely separated sections of the country, hold widely divergent views, and represent constituencies of widely diverse interests. It is interesting, instructive, and beneficial to know them and to be associated with them.

During my service in this body, I am glad to say, I have, with some negligible exceptions, of little or no consequence, been uniformly treated by all of my associates with marked courtesy and kindness. They have accorded me every courtesy and consideration—far more, I know, than I have deserved. While generally receiving noticeable courtesy and consideration from all, many of the Senators have placed me under great and lasting obligations of gratitude to them by performing for me acts of very great and extraordinary kindness and helpfulness.

My observation is that those who extend courtesy and consideration to others are themselves generally treated with courtesy and consideration. I have always tried to be courteous and considerate in my intercourse and dealings with my fellow Senators. I know I have a few times been impatient with some of them and have spoken hastily, but I am sure it was always my fault when I did so.

I have formed on both sides of this Chamber some very warm and, to me, most delightful friendships, which I shall ever hold in affectionate remembrance. I take this occasion to thank the Presiding Officers, past and present, of this body during my service; my fellow Senators of this and preceding Congresses; the officials and employees, including the pages and humblest employees, past and present, of the Senate, one and all, for the very kind, courteous, and considerate treatment I have received at their hands. I shall ever have pleasant memories of my association with them.

The first instinct of Senators in their intercourse with each other generally is to be gentlemen; the second, I believe, of most of them generally is to gain some political advantage for their party and to put the opposition "in a hole." While I believe there is too much of the last-mentioned motive, while I believe there should be more legislation for the good of the country and less for party advantage, that does not keep men from being amiable companions, and human nature is such that much of it must be expected under a republican form of government, in which government must necessarily be by party. Party government necessarily begets partisans.

I believe that the large majority of Senators, practically all, are sincere in their views and want to do what is best. I think some have some extreme views and some unsound conclusions; some of them may think I have. I long ago, though, came to the conclusion that others have quite as much right to their views as I have to mine, and I am willing to concede to others the same sincerity of conviction in the holding of their views that I claim for mine.

During the last few weeks, the demands upon my time have been so great and pressing, on account of preparation for the termination of my service, with literally almost a thousand and one things pressing upon me for attention, in my earnest desire to close up and dispose of all matters intrusted by constituents to me and in an effort to leave a clean slate, that I have not been able to be much upon the floor of the Senate or to see so much as formerly of my fellow Senators, but that, I assure them, is not from any lack of esteem for them or lack of enjoyment of their company, but simply on account of sheer lack of time and because of an extraordinary pressure of business. With me, it has ever been business first, pleasure second. Nevertheless, pleasant memories of my associations here shall ever be with me, so long as life may last. From now until the end of the session I intend to be more regular in my attendance than I have been of late.

In bidding adieu to my fellow Senators, I wish for each and all of them much health, happiness, and good fortune for all time and many of the blessings of Divine Providence. May their highest material aim ever be their country's good. My best wishes and kindly interest abide with them; the same as to the officials and employees, one and all, of the Senate. I bespeak for my successor, at the hands of all of them, the same kindly courtesy and consideration as have been so generously extended to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is voluntarily retiring from service in the Senate. He has earned the confidence and respect of all his associates in this body. He has had the courage to speak and vote his true sentiments. We wish him good fortune throughout his life.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4280) to provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4637) for the relief of certain disbursing agents under the Department of Commerce.

The message further announced that the House had requested the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 3874) granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3580. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.;

S. 4631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across Sulphur River, at or near Paces Ferry, in said counties and State;

H. R. 14077. An act to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14435. An act making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed immediately to pass the first bill referred to in the message that has just been received.

Mr. CUMMINS. Question, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I submitted a request for unanimous consent. I think we can vote on that without debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator that I think we can finish this bill in five minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out, on line 5, page 14, the words "Alien Property Custodian" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "President." That is in conformity with existing law, devolving the responsibility on the President, as it should be devolved upon the President, rather than upon the Alien Property Custodian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "Alien Property Custodian" and insert "President," so that it will read:

Unless satisfactory evidence is furnished the President—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I accept the amendment, so far as I have the power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I offer the same amendment, to make it conform to the action already taken, on lines 22 and 23.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "Alien Property Custodian" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "President."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

RURAL-CREDIT FACILITIES.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present the conference report on Senate bill 4280, and for its present consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Senator can make his report.

Mr. McLEAN. I suggest that we suspend the consideration of this bill for a few minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that we will finish the bill in 10 minutes, probably in 5 minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And we are proceeding under unanimous consent, as I understand.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a right to present the report at any time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not objecting to the Senator presenting the report.

Mr. KING. Let the report be presented, and then we will proceed.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Connecticut presents the conference report on Senate bill 4280, to provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an individual amendment, but first I want to be certain as to the parliamentary status. Are we through with the committee amendments?

Mr. CUMMINS. The committee amendments have been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have been adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment first to section 20; and in order that the amendment may be understood with as little loss of time as possible, I ask that the Secretary read section 20 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section referred to.

The READING CLERK. Section 20 as amended reads:

That no money or other property shall be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered under this act to any agent, attorney, or representative of any person entitled thereto unless satisfactory evidence is furnished the President or the court, as the case may be, that the fee of such agent, attorney, or representative for services in connection therewith does not exceed 10 per cent of the value of such money or other property; but nothing in this section shall be construed as fixing such fees at 10 per cent of the value of such money or other property, such 10 per cent being fixed only as the maximum fee that may be allowed or accepted for such services. Any person accepting any fee in excess of such 10 per cent shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished as provided in section 16 hereof.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "10" and insert "1," so that it will read:

One per cent of the value of such money or other property.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I believe that the percentage fixed by the Senator from Ohio is unreasonably low, I am so anxious to get this bill into conference that I shall make no opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I shall take only a moment to express my view. I am grateful to the Senator from Iowa for accepting the amendment. I think it will help the bill somewhat.

First, as the Senator knows, I am not in favor of the bill. I think the bill, even if amended, ought not to pass. I have expressed myself upon that subject. I was led to offer this amendment because of certain testimony to which my attention has been drawn in going over the hearings. The question was propounded in the House hearings by one of the members of the committee. He said:

I have been advised, in a general way, that the German Government has made contracts with certain persons on a contingent fee basis for obtaining the return of this property. Do you know anything about that?

The answer of the witness is:

If there has been anything of that sort it has not been made known to me or either one of my associates. We are the attorneys only for a few of the claimants who are members of the German-American commercial organization called Deutsch-Amerikanisher Wirtschaftszerband, of Berlin, and we only represent private individuals, and in no case does our fee, even for the smallest amount of claim, amount to over 7 per cent, and it runs as low as 1 per cent.

I took the pains to compute what that would amount to; because, Mr. President, outside of this Chamber, and outside of the Chamber belonging to the body at the other end of the Capitol, the enthusiam for this bill has been aroused, in my judgment, in no small degree by the provision for attorneys' fees. A little computation on the amount involved will show that 1 per cent will make attorneys' fees of $440,000, 4 per cent will make $1,760,000, 7 per cent, as stated by the witness, makes $3,080,000, and if 10 per cent should stand, as was provided in the bill, it would make attorneys' fees amounting to $4,400,000.

I am glad the Senator has accepted my amendment. I have another amendment to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The same amendment is offered in line 10, and also in line 18.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer the same amendment clear through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, it is proposed to strike out all of section 23, lines 7 to 15, both inclusive.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, just a word of explanation of that amendment.

Section 23 is the one which provides that the dividends and income shall be paid over by the Alien Property Custodian to the original owner of the property. Of course, my view is that the original property itself, the substantive property, ought not to be paid over, and I certainly think the income ought not, particularly since it is claimed by those advocating this bill that this is for the benefit of the small holders. I think it is not wise to allow these large dividends to be paid over, and I therefore move to strike out the section.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is more question about the motion now made by the Senator from Ohio, but, for the reasons I indicated a few moments ago, I am willing to take it to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 1, to insert after the word "corporation" the words "was at such time and."

Mr. LENROOT. I have consulted with the Senator in charge of the bill, and I think he agrees that this amendment should go into the bill. I will be glad to explain it if he desires.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that the Senator from Montana, who was a member of the subcommittee that considered this bill, intended to offer this amendment, and I am perfectly willing to take it to conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is an amendment which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] wishes to offer.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the amendment is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 5, to add at the end of subdivision (11) the following proviso:

Provided, however, That this subdivision shall not affect the rights of any persons under subdivision (1) of subsection (b).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not believe the time has come yet when we should pass a bill for the return of this property. Furthermore, I question very much whether the rights of the United States are properly protected in the bill, and I shall therefore vote against it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a bill to pay as much as the sum of $10,000 to each national of Germany who had property seized as an alien during the World War.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. Some of them will get only $700. The maximum is $10,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Montana was not here when I explained the bill. There are 30,000 trust estates. Twenty-seven thousand of them amount to under $10,000, and the average of those under $10,000 is only $750.

Mr. MYERS. Would some of this money go to people who now are not only citizens but residents of Germany—people living in Germany?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. In so far as is concerned that part of this money which would go to people who are living in this country, if they were not obstreperous during the war and did not oppose this country in the prosecution of the war with Germany, and it could be plainly shown that the money or property was wrongfully taken from them and rightfully belonged to them, I would have no objection to it being paid back to them; but as to that portion of the money which will go to citizens of Germany now living in Germany, I do not see why we should concern ourselves with hastening the payment of money to people now living in Germany. I do not see any obligation resting upon us to do it. We have not been paid anything on account of damages resulting from the sinking of the Lusitania.

The people of this country have been paid nothing for the loss of life and the loss of property by the citizens of our country brought about by the German ruthless submarine warfare, and I do not see why we should begin at this time to enact legislation to be liberal with people living in Germany. I think some of the claims of the people of this country on account of the loss of life and on account of property destroyed when we were neutral, by the ruthless acts of Germany, in flagrant violation of the rules of international law and civilized warfare, should be paid before we begin paying money to people living in Germany. No sense of right or justice calls for it. I am not in favor of such generosity to Germany.

If Germany would pay her obligations under the Versailles treaty, which she bound herself to pay, and would thereby keep her plighted, solemn agreement, to which she put her official signature at the signing of the Versailles treaty; if Germany would pay the reparations to France and Belgium which she agreed to pay and has not paid, I would be more disposed to consider with some leniency the provisions of this measure; but I can not understand why, under the present circumstances, we should hasten to turn money and property over to people living in Germany. We have thousands of claims against Germany which are not paid, justly due the citizens of this country, American people, our own people. I think we should insist on Germany paying some of the claims she owes people of this country.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator was not here, probably, when the bill was up this morning. There are $350,000,000 of property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. It is believed by those who are familiar with the circumstances and who have testified with regard to it that there will be three times as much remaining in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian as will be sufficient to satisfy all the claims mentioned by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I am in favor of keeping it until the adjudication of the matter conclusively proves that that is true. I am a good deal like the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was awhile ago when he said he had the floor and he was going to keep it while he had it. We have the money now, and I am in favor of keeping while we have it. I am opposed to this bill and I shall vote against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WILLIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my paid and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I have been unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I am unable to secure a transfer, so I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent from the Chamber. I have a general pair with him, and I can not obtain a transfer. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—55.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. ASHURST conferees on the part of the Senate.

RURAL CREDIT FACILITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. By unanimous consent it was agreed that I was to be recognized upon the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is the case, the Chair recognizes that Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the farm credits bill, which has just come over from the House. I will take my chance on losing the floor in order to get that bill passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the bill (S. 4280) to provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agencies for the United States; and for other purposes.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4280) to provide for the incorporation and supervision of corporations formed for the purpose of making agricultural and live-stock loans; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

TITLE I.—FEDERAL INTERMEDIATE CREDIT BANKS.

SECTION 1. That section 1 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE I.—FEDERAL FARM LOANS.

"SECTION 1. That this act may be cited as the 'Federal farm loan act.' Its administration shall be under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board hereinafter created."

SEC. 2. That the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new title, to read as follows:

"TITLE II.—FEDERAL INTERMEDIATE CREDIT BANKS.

"ORGANIZATION.

"SEC. 201. (a) That the Federal Farm Loan Board shall have power to grant charters for 12 institutions to be known and styled as 'Federal intermediate credit banks.'

"(b) Such institutions shall be established in the same cities as the 12 Federal land banks. The officers and directors of the several Federal land banks shall be ex officio officers and directors of the several Federal intermediate credit banks hereby provided for and shall have power to employ and pay all clerks, bookkeepers, accountants, and other help necessary to carry on the business authorized by this title.

"(c) Each Federal intermediate credit bank shall have all the usual powers of corporations, and shall have power to sue and be sued both in law and equity, and for purposes of jurisdiction shall be deemed a citizen of the State where it is located.

"(d) Federal intermediate credit banks, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall act as fiscal agents of the United States Government and perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(e) Upon default of any obligation any Federal intermediate credit bank may be declared insolvent and placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and proceedings shall thereupon be had in accordance with the provisions of section 29 of this act regarding national farm-loan associations.

"(f) The charters to such Federal intermediate credit banks shall be granted upon application of the directors of the Federal land banks, which application shall be in such form as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall prescribe.

"DISCOUNTS AND LOANS.

"SEC. 202. (a) That Federal intermediate credit banks, when chartered and established, shall have power, subject solely to such restrictions, limitations, and conditions as may be imposed by the Federal Farm Loan Board not inconsistent with the provisions of this act,—

"(1) To discount for, or purchase from, any national bank, and/or any State bank, trust company, agricultural credit corporation, incorporated live-stock loan company, savings institution, cooperative bank, cooperative credit or marketing association of agricultural producers, organized under the laws of any State, and/or any other Federal intermediate credit bank, with its indorsement, any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other such obligation the proceeds of which have been advanced or used in the first instance for any agricultural purpose or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of live stock;

"(2) To buy or sell, with or without recourse, debentures issued by any other Federal intermediate credit bank; and

"(3) To make loans or advances direct to any cooperative association organized under the laws of any State and composed of persons engaged in producing, or producing and marketing, staple agricultural products, or live stock, if the notes or other such obligations representing such loans are secured by warehouse receipts, and/or shipping documents covering such products, and/or mortgages on live stock: Provided, That no such loan or advance shall exceed 75 per centum of the market value of the products covered by said warehouse receipts and/or shipping documents, or of the live stock covered by said mortgages.

"(b) No paper shall be purchased from or discounted for any national bank, State bank, trust company, or savings institution under this section, if the amount of such paper added to the aggregate liabilities of such national bank, State bank, trust company, or savings institution, whether direct or contingent (other than bona fide deposit liabilities), exceeds the amount of such liability permitted under the laws of the jurisdiction creating the same; or exceeds twice the paid in and unimpaired capital and surplus of such national bank, State bank, trust company, or savings institution. No paper shall under this section be purchased from or discounted for any other corporation engaged in making loans for agricultural purposes or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of live stock, if the amount of such paper added to the aggregate liabilities of such corporation exceeds the amount of such liabilities permitted under the laws of the jurisdiction creating the same; or exceeds ten times the paid in and unimpaired capital and surplus of such corporation. It shall be unlawful for any national bank which is indebted to any Federal intermediate credit bank upon paper discounted or purchased under this section, to incur any additional indebtedness, if by virtue of such additional indebtedness its aggregate liabilities, direct or contingent, will exceed the limitations herein contained."

(c) Loans, advances, or discounts made under this section shall have a maturity at the time they are made or discounted by the Federal intermediate credit bank of not less than six months nor more than three years. Any Federal intermediate credit bank may in its discretion sell loans or discounts made under this section, with or without its indorsement.

(d) Rates of interest or discount charged by the Federal intermediate credit banks upon such loans and discounts shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. On the majority vote of the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board any Federal intermediate credit bank shall be required to rediscount the discounted paper of any other Federal intermediate credit bank at rates of interest to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

"ISSUANCE OF DEBENTURES.

"SEC. 203. (a) That Federal intermediate credit banks, when chartered and established, shall have power, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to borrow money and to issue and to sell collateral trust debentures or other similar obligations with a maturity at the time of issue of not more than five years, which shall be secured by at least a like face amount of cash, or notes or other such obligations discounted or purchased or representing loans made under section 202: Provided, That no Federal intermediate credit bank shall have power to issue or obligate itself for debentures or other obligations under the provisions of this section in excess of ten times the amount of the paid-up capital and surplus of such bank.

"(b) The provisions of Title I relating to the preparation and issue of farm-loan bonds shall, so far as applicable, govern the preparation and issue of debentures or other such obligations issued under this section; but the Federal Farm Loan Board shall prescribe rules and regulations governing the receipt, custody, substitution, and release of collateral instruments securing such debentures or other obligations, the right of substitution being hereby granted. Rates of interest upon debentures and other such obligations issued under this section shall, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be fixed by the Federal intermediate credit bank making the issue, not exceeding 6 per cent per annum.

"(c) The United States Government shall assume no liability, direct or indirect, for any debentures or other obligations issued under this section, and all such debentures and other obligations shall contain conspicuous and appropriate language, to be prescribed in form and substance by the Federal Farm Loan Board and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, clearly indicating that no such liability is assumed.

"DISCOUNT RATES.

"SEC. 204. (a) That before making any discounts under the provisions of this title each Federal intermediate credit bank shall establish and promulgate a rate of discount to be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Any Federal intermediate credit bank which has made an issue of debentures under the provisions of this title may thereafter establish, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, a rate of discount not exceeding by more than 1 per cent per annum the rate borne by its last preceding issue of debentures.

"(b) No organization entitled to the privileges of this title shall, without the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be allowed to discount with any Federal intermediate credit bank any note or other obligation upon which the original borrower has been charged a rate of interest exceeding by more than 1½ per cent per annum the discount rate of the Federal intermediate credit bank at the time such loan was made.

"(c) A Federal intermediate credit bank may, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, buy in the open market at or below par for its own account and retire at or before maturity any such debentures or obligations issued by it.

"CAPITAL STOCK.

"SEC. 205. That for the purpose of exercising the powers conferred by this title each Federal intermediate credit bank shall have a subscribed capital stock of $5,000,000. Capital stock of such amount shall be divided into shares of $5 each and shall be subscribed, held, and paid by the Government of the United States. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe to such capital stock on behalf of the United States, such subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by directors of the said banks upon 30 days' notice to the Secretary of the Treasury and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to take out shares as called and to pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"APPLICATION OF EARNINGS.

"SEC. 206. (a) That the Federal Farm Loan Board shall equitably apportion the joint expenses incurred in behalf of Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, and Federal intermediate credit banks, and shall assess against each Federal intermediate credit bank its proportionate share of the expenses of any additional personnel in the Federal Farm Loan Bureau made necessary in connection with the operation of this provision.

"(b) After all necessary expenses of a Federal intermediate credit bank have been paid or provided for, the net earnings shall be divided into equal parts and one-half thereof shall be paid to the United States, and the balance shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank, and that thereafter 10 per cent of such earnings shall be paid into the surplus. After the aforesaid requirements have been fully met the then net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax. The net earnings derived by the United States from Federal intermediate credit banks shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used to supplement the gold reserve held against outstanding United States notes, or shall be applied to the reduction of the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Should a Federal intermediate credit bank be dissolved or go into liquidation, after the payment of all debts and other obligations as hereinbefore provided, any surplus remaining shall be paid to and become the property of the United States and shall be similarly applied.

"LIABILITY OF DEBENTURES.

"SEC. 207. That any Federal intermediate credit bank issuing debentures or other such obligations under this title shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of the coupons for interest payments due upon any such debentures or obligations issued by any other Federal intermediate credit bank and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of the other Federal intermediate credit bank. Any Federal intermediate credit bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of debentures or obligations so issued as are not paid after the assets of such other Federal intermediate credit bank have been liquidated and distributed. Such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed by the Federal Farm Loan Board against solvent Federal intermediate credit banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of capital stock, surplus, and debentures or other such obligations which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment. Every Federal intermediate credit bank shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on debentures and other such obligations as provided in this section.

"EXAMINATIONS AND REPORTS.

"SEC. 208. (a) That in order to enable each Federal intermediate credit bank to carry out the purpose of this title the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of any Federal intermediate credit bank, (1) to furnish for the confidential use of such bank such reports, records, and other information as he may have available relating to the financial condition of national banks through or for which the Federal intermediate credit bank has made or contemplates making discounts, and (2) to make through his examiners, for the confidential use of the Federal intermediate credit bank, examinations of organizations through or for which the Federal intermediate credit bank has made or contemplates making discounts or loans: Provided, That no such examination shall be made without the consent of such organization except where such examination is required by law: Provided, That any organization, except State banks, trust companies, and savings associations, shall, as a condition precedent to securing rediscount privileges with the Federal intermediate credit bank of its district, file with such bank its written consent to its examination as may be directed by the Federal Farm Loan Board by land bank examiners; and State banks, trust companies, and savings associations may be in like manner required to file their written consent that reports of their examination by constituted authorities may be furnished by such authorities upon request to the Federal intermediate credit bank of their district. Each Federal intermediate credit bank shall be examined and audited at least once each year by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the results of such examination and audit shall be made public by the board.

"(b) Every Federal intermediate credit bank shall make to the Federal Farm Loan Board not less than three reports during each year as requested by the board and according to the form which may be prescribed by the board, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president, or secretary, or treasurer, of each Federal intermediate credit bank and attested by the signature of at least three of the directors. Each report shall exhibit, in detail and under appropriate heads, the resources and liabilities of the Federal intermediate credit bank at the close of business on any past day specified by the Federal Farm Loan Board within five days from the receipt of a request or requisition therefor from the board, and in the same form in which it is made to the Federal Farm Loan Board shall be published in a newspaper published in the place where such Federal intermediate credit bank is established, or if there is no newspaper in the place then in the one published nearest thereto in the same county, at the expense of the bank, and such proof of publication shall be furnished as may be required by the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Federal Farm Loan Board shall also have power to call for special reports from any particular Federal intermediate credit bank whenever in its judgment the same are necessary for a full and complete knowledge of its condition.

"(c) Land bank appraisers are authorized, upon the request of any Federal intermediate credit bank and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to investigate and make a written report upon the products covered by warehouse receipts or shipping accounts and the live stock covered by mortgages which are security for notes or other such obligations representing any loan to any organization under this title. Land bank examiners are authorized, upon the request of any Federal intermediate credit bank and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to examine and make a written report upon the condition of any organization, except national banks, to which the Federal intermediate credit bank contemplates making any such loan.

"(d) The Federal Farm Loan Board shall assess the cost of all examinations made by the examiners of the board under the provisions of this title upon the bank, trust company, savings institution, or organization investigated, in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the board.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS.

"SEC. 209. That the Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as it deems necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this title.

"TAX EXEMPTION.

"SEC. 210. That the privileges of tax exemption accorded under section 26 of this act shall apply also to each Federal intermediate credit bank, including its capital, reserve, or surplus, and the income derived therefrom and the debentures issued under this title shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government and shall enjoy the same tax exemptions as are accorded farm loan bonds in said section.

"PENALTY PROVISION.

"SEC. 211. (a) That any officer, director, agent, or employee of a Federal intermediate credit bank who embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of such bank, or who, without authority from such bank, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such bank with intent in any case to injure or defraud such bank or any other company or person, or to deceive any officer of such bank or the Federal Farm Loan Board, or any agent or examiner appointed to examine the affairs of such bank; and every receiver of such bank who with like intent to defraud or injure embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or assets of such bank, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, director, agent, employee, or receiver in any violation of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States shall be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"(b) Whoever makes any statement, knowing it to be false, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any other person, firm, corporation, or association any advance, or extension or renewal of an advance, or any release or substitution of security from such bank, or for the purpose of influencing in any other way the action of such bank, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"(c) Whoever willfully overvalues any property offered as security for any such advance shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"(d) Any examiner appointed under this act who shall accept a loan or gratuity from any organization examined by him, or from any person connected with any such organization in any capacity, or who shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of such organization, without first having obtained express permission in writing from the farm loan commissioner or from the board of directors of such organization, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment of not exceeding one year, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office as an examiner under the provisions of this act. No examiner while holding such office shall perform any other service for compensation for any bank or banking or loan association or for any person connected therewith in any capacity.

"(e) Whoever, being an officer, director, employee, agent, or attorney of a Federal intermediate credit bank, stipulates for or receives or consents or agrees to receive any fee, commission, gift, or thing of value, from any person, firm, or corporation for procuring or endeavoring to procure for such person, firm, or corporation, or for any other person, firm, or corporation any loan from any such corporation or extension or renewal of loan or substitution of security, or the purchase or discount or acceptance of any paper, note, draft, check, or bill of exchange by any such corporation, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction thereof be imprisoned for not more than one year and fined not more than $5,000, or both.

"(f) Any person who shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any debenture, coupon, or other obligation in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of the debenture, coupon, or other obligation issued by any Federal intermediate credit bank, or any person who shall pass, utter, or publish or attempt to pass, utter, or publish any false, forged, or counterfeited debenture, coupon, or other obligation purporting to be issued by any such bank knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or any person who shall falsely alter or cause or procure to be falsely altered or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such debenture, coupon, or other obligation or who shall pass, utter, or publish as true any falsely altered or spurious debenture, coupon, or other obligation issued or purporting to have been issued by any such bank knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

"(g) Any person who shall deceive, defraud, or impose upon or who shall attempt to deceive, defraud, or impose upon any person, partnership, corporation, or association by making any false pretense or representation concerning the character, issue, security, contents, conditions, or terms of any debenture, coupon, or other obligation issued under the terms of this title, shall upon conviction be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not to exceed one year, or both.

"(h) All corporations not organized under the provisions of this title are prohibited from using the words 'Federal intermediate credit bank' as part of their corporate name, and any violation of this prohibition shall subject the party charged therewith to a civil penalty of $50 for each day during which the violation continues.

"SEC. 212. That no Federal intermediate credit bank shall charge or receive any fee, commission, bonus, gift, or other consideration not herein specifically authorized."

TITLE II. NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATIONS.

FORMATION.

SEC. 201. That corporations for the purpose of providing credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to be known as national agricultural credit corporations, may be formed by any number of natural persons not less in any case than five. Such persons shall enter into articles of association which shall specify the object for which the corporation is formed. Such articles of association shall be signed by the persons intending to participate in the organization of the corporation and be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency to be filed and preserved in his office.

REQUISITES OF ARTICLES AND CERTIFICATE.

SEC. 202. (a) That persons signing such articles of association shall make an organization certificate which shall specifically state the name of the corporation to be organized, the place where its office is to be located, the State or States in which its operations are to be carried on, the amount of its capital stock, and the number of shares into which the same shall be divided, and that the certificate is made to enable the subscribers to avail themselves of the advantages of this title.

(b) The name of each corporation organized under this title shall include the words "national agricultural credit corporation."

(c) The organization certificate and articles of association shall be acknowledged before some judge of a court of record or notary public, and shall, together with the acknowledgment thereof duly authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall file, record, and carefully preserve the same in his office.

(d) Upon making and filing the articles of association and organization certificate with the Comptroller of the Currency, and when the Comptroller of the Currency has approved the same and issued a written permit to begin business, the corporation shall be and become a body corporate, and shall have power—

(1) To adopt and use a corporate seal.

(2) To have succession for a period of 50 years unless sooner dissolved by the act of shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock or by act of Congress or unless its charter shall be forfeited for violation of law.

(3) To make contracts.

(4) To sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court of law or equity, and for purposes of jurisdiction shall be deemed a citizen of the State where it is located.

(5) To elect or appoint directors and by its board of directors to appoint such officers and employees as may be deemed proper; to define their authority and duties; to fix their salaries; in its discretion to require bonds of any of them and to fix the penalty thereof; and to dismiss at pleasure any of such officers or employees.

(6) To prescribe by its board of directors by-laws not inconsistent with law or the regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency defining the manner in which its general business may be conducted, its shares of stock be transferred, its directors and officers be elected or appointed, its property transferred, and the privileges granted to it by law be exercised and enjoyed.

(7) To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this title and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business for which it is incorporated, within the limitations prescribed by this title, but such corporation shall transact no business except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization until authorized in writing by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business under the provisions of this title.

(8) The affairs of each National Agricultural Credit Corporation shall be managed by not less than five directors, who shall be elected by the stockholders at a meeting to be held at any time before the corporation is authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business, and afterwards at meetings to be held on such day in January of each year as may be provided in the articles of association. The directors so elected shall hold office for one year, and until their successors are elected and have qualified. Every director and other officer of the corporation shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath before a notary public or other official having a seal and authorized to administer oaths, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office. Such oath shall be in such form as may be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, and shall be filed in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Any vacancy in the board shall be filled by appointment by the remaining directors, and any director so appointed shall hold his place until the next election.

SEC. 203. (a) That each National Agricultural Credit Corporation shall have power, under such rules and regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe—

(1) To make advances upon, to discount, rediscount, or purchase, and to sell or negotiate, with or without its indorsement or guaranty, notes, drafts, or bills of exchange, and to accept drafts or bills of exchange, which—

(A) Are issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, or the proceeds of which have been or are to be used for an agricultural purpose;

(B) Have a maturity, at the time of discount, purchase, or acceptance, not exceeding nine months; and

(C) Are secured at the time of discount, purchase, or acceptance by warehouse receipts or other like documents conveying or securing title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products, or by chattel mortgages or other like instruments conferring a first and paramount lien upon live stock which is being fattened for market.

(2) To make advances upon or to discount, rediscount, or purchase, and to sell or negotiate with or without its indorsement or guaranty, notes secured by chattel mortgages conferring a first and paramount lien upon maturing or breeding live stock or dairy herds, and having a maturity at the time of discount, rediscount, or purchase not exceeding three years.

(3) To subscribe for, acquire, own, buy, sell, and otherwise deal in Treasury certificates of indebtedness, bonds or other obligations of the United States to such extent as its board of directors may determine.

(4) To act, when requested by the Secretary of the Treasury, as fiscal agent of the United States, and to perform such services as the Secretary of the Treasury may require in connection with the issue, sale, redemption or repurchase of bonds, notes, Treasury certificates of indebtedness, or other obligations of the United States.

(5) To purchase, hold, acquire, and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any corporation organized under the provisions of section 207 of this title, in an amount not to exceed at any time 20 per centum of its paid in and unimpaired capital and surplus.

(6) To purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others:

(A) Such as shall be necessary for its accommodation in the transaction of its business.

(B) Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security for debts previously contracted.

(C) Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of loans or advances made or debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings.

(D) Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the corporation or shall purchase to secure debts due to it.

(7) To act as custodian, trustee, or agent for holders of notes, drafts, or bills of exchange sold or negotiated under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of this section or under section 207.

(8) To issue, subject to such regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe, collateral trust notes or debentures, with a maturity not exceeding three years, and to pledge as security for such notes or debentures any notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities held by the corporation under the terms of this title. The regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe the form of notes or debentures, and of notes, drafts, bills of exchange, warehouse receipts, chattel mortgages, or other instruments which may be pledged as security therefor, the provisions which may be made with regard to release, substitution, or exchange of such securities, and with regard to protection, supervision, inspection, and reinspection of the agricultural commodities or live stock pledged or mortgaged as security therefor.

(b) The United States Government shall assume no liability, direct or indirect, for any debentures or other obligations issued under this title, and all such debentures and other obligations shall contain conspicuous and appropriate language, to be prescribed in form and substance by the Comptroller of the Currency and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, clearly indicating that no such liability is assumed.

(c) Any obligation referred to in paragraphs (1) or (2) of subdivision (a) of this section, which is secured by chattel mortgage upon live stock of an estimated market value at least equal to the face amount of such obligation, may be additionally secured by mortgage or deed of trust upon real estate or by other securities, under such regulations as may be made by the Comptroller of the Currency.

LIMITATIONS.

SEC. 204. Except as hereinafter provided in section 207 of this title, no national agricultural credit corporation shall incur liabilities, whether direct or contingent, in excess of ten times its paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus; nor shall any such corporation make advances to or hold notes or other direct obligations of any person or corporation, or have outstanding acceptances for any person or corporation, in an amount exceeding 20 per centum of the paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus of such corporation, unless such advances, notes, acceptances, or other obligations are adequately secured by warehouse receipts representing readily marketable and nonperishable agricultural commodities, in which event the amount of such advances to, or notes or other direct obligations of, or acceptances for, such one person, association, or corporation shall not exceed 50 per centum of such paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus. No such corporation shall purchase, own, or deal in any live stock except live stock taken in the course of liquidation of obligations held by it.

INTEREST RATES.

SEC. 205. (a) Any national agricultural credit corporation may charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidence of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State in which such corporation is located.

(b) The taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by subdivision (a), when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt carries with it or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. In case the greater rate of interest has been paid, the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representative, may recover back in an action in the nature of an action for debt twice the amount of the interest thus paid from the corporation taking or receiving the same, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious interest was collected.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 206. (a) That no national agricultural credit corporation shall be permitted to commence business with a paid-in capital of less than $250,000; and no permit to begin business shall be issued to any such corporation by the Comptroller of the Currency until there shall have been filed with him a certificate signed by the president or treasurer and by individuals comprising a majority of the board of directors of such corporation showing that at least 50 per cent of the authorized capital stock of such corporation has been paid in in cash; and the remainder of the capital stock of such corporation shall be paid in installments of at least 10 per cent each on the whole amount of the capital, and the entire authorized capital stock shall be paid in within six months from the date upon which such corporation shall be authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business. The payment of each installment shall be certified to the Comptroller of the Currency under oath by the president or cashier of such corporation.

(b) The capital stock of any such corporation may be increased at any time with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency by a vote of two-thirds of the holders of its issued and outstanding capital stock, or by written consent of all of its shareholders without a meeting and without a formal vote; and may be reduced in like manner: Provided, That in no event shall such capital stock be reduced to an amount less than one-tenth of its then outstanding indebtedness, direct or contingent, or to an amount less than $250,000, nor without at the same time reducing proportionately outstanding liabilities. No national agricultural credit corporation, except as herein provided, shall withdraw or permit to be withdrawn, either in the form of dividends or otherwise, any portion of its paid-in capital; and section 5204 of the Revised Statutes, prohibiting the payment of unearned dividends or the withdrawal of capital of national banks, shall be held to apply to national agricultural credit corporations.

(c) The provisions and limitations contained in section 5139 of the Revised Statutes, relative to transfer of the shares of the capital stock of national banks, shall apply to national agricultural credit corporations.

(d) Whenever any shareholder or his assign fails, upon demand of the Comptroller of the Currency, to pay his subscription or any part thereof on stock of any national agricultural credit corporation subscribed to by him, the directors of the corporation, after 15 days' notice, shall proceed in the manner prescribed by section 5141 of the Revised Statutes for the collection of unpaid subscriptions to stock of national banks.

(e) Section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, which relates to the right of shareholders of national banks to vote by proxy, shall be held to apply to shareholders of national agricultural credit corporations.

REDISCOUNT CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 207. (a) That national agricultural credit corporations having an authorized capital stock of $1,000,000 or over may be organized under the provisions of this title, to exercise all the powers enumerated in section 203, except that in lieu of the powers conferred in paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of such section, such corporations shall have power—

(1) Upon the indorsement of any national agricultural credit corporation, or of any bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal reserve system, to rediscount for such corporation, bank, or trust company, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and acceptances, which conform to the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (a) of section 203. Such indorsement shall be deemed to be a waiver of demand notice and protest by such corporation as to its own indorsement exclusively.

(2) To discount or purchase notes, drafts, or bills of exchange issued or drawn by cooperative associations of producers of agricultural products, provided such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange are secured at the time of discount or purchase by warehouse receipts or other like documents conveying or securing title to nonperishable and readily marketable agricultural products and have a maturity at the time of discount or purchase not exceeding nine months.

(3) To sell or negotiate with or without recourse any note, draft, or bill of exchange discounted or purchased hereunder.

(b) National agricultural credit corporations organized under the provisions of this section shall not be subject to the limitations contained in section 204, but the Comptroller of the Currency may, by general regulations, from time to time prescribe the amount of indebtedness, direct or contingent, which such corporations may incur, and the aggregate amount of paper of different types which such corporations may rediscount for any one corporation.

(c) Corporations with powers limited, as provided in this section, shall not be subject to the requirements as to deposit of bonds or other obligations of the United States, as provided in section 208 of this title.

PERMIT TO BEGIN BUSINESS.

SEC. 208. (a) That no national agricultural credit corporation, except corporations with powers limited as provided in section 207, shall commence business until it has deposited with the Federal reserve bank of the district wherein it has its place of business, bonds or other obligations of the United States in an aggregate face amount of at least 25 per cent of its paid-in capital stock. Each such corporation shall at all times keep on deposit with such Federal reserve bank an amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States at least equal in face value to 7½ per cent of the aggregate indebtedness of such corporation, direct or contingent, said amount to include the 25 per cent deposited as hereinbefore by this section provided. Except as hereinafter provided, such bonds or other obligations shall be held by such Federal reserve bank, subject to the direction and control of the Comptroller of the Currency, in trust for the equal and pro rata protection and benefit of all holders of notes, debentures, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances upon which such corporation may be directly or contingently liable. Upon receipt of proper evidence that the amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States so deposited exceeds 7½ per cent of such aggregate indebtedness, the Comptroller of the Currency may release such excess, provided that the amount remaining on deposit shall in no event be reduced below 25 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such corporation. Under such regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe, a Federal reserve bank may, upon request of the corporation which deposited the same, sell any such bonds or obligations for account of such corporation and permit such corporation to use the proceeds thereof for the protection or preservation of any property pledged or mortgaged as security for obligations owned or indorsed by the corporation. If by reason of such sale the face amount of such bonds or other obligations of the United States remaining on deposit with such Federal reserve bank shall be less than 7½ per cent of such aggregate indebtedness of the corporation, no further advances shall be made, or notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted, rediscounted, accepted, or purchased, by such corporation until sufficient additional bonds or other obligations of the United States have been deposited to make good the deficiency.

(b) In determining whether to grant permission to do business to any National Agricultural Credit Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall take into account the extent to which the laws of the State or States in which the corporation will do business afford adequate protection to advances made upon the security of warehouse receipts covering agricultural commodities or chattel mortgages upon live stock with respect to (1) bonding, licensing, and inspection of warehouses; (2) recordation of chattel mortgages or deeds of trust on live stock; (3) recordation of brands or other identifying marks on live stock; (4) reporting and recording of interstate shipments and slaughter of live stock; and (5) right of mortgagee to release a portion of the mortgaged property without prejudice to the priority of lien as against junior lienors or other creditors of the mortgagor.

MISCELLANEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 209. (a) That all National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall be charged with the execution of all laws of the United States relating to the organization, regulation, and control of such corporations. The Comptroller of the Currency shall exercise the same general power of supervision over such corporations as he now exercises over national banks organized under the laws of the United States.

(b) In addition to the two Deputy Comptrollers of the Currency now provided for by law, there shall be in the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency a third Deputy Comptroller of the Currency who shall be appointed in the same manner and shall take a like oath of office and give a like bond as the deputy comptrollers now provided for by law. Under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, such additional deputy comptroller shall have charge of the administration of the provisions of this title relating to the organization and operation of national agricultural credit corporations and shall perform such other duties as shall be assigned to him by the Comptroller of the Currency. The Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to employ such additional examiners, clerks, and other employees as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to assign to duty in the office of his bureau in Washington such examiners and assistant examiners as he shall deem necessary to assist in the performance of the work of that bureau. The salaries of the Deputy Comptrollers of the Currency and of such additional examiners, assistant examiners, clerks, and other employees shall be fixed in advance by the Comptroller of the Currency. The salaries of the two deputy comptrollers now provided for by law and of all national-bank examiners and assistant examiners assigned to duty in the office of the bureau in Washington in connection with the supervision of national banks shall be considered part of the expenses of the examinations provided for by section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and the salaries of such additional deputy comptroller and of all examiners, assistant examiners, clerks, and other employees appointed under the terms of this title and assigned to duty in connection with the administration of this title shall be considered part of the expenses of the administration of this title: Provided, however, That the salary of the additional deputy comptroller provided for by this subdivision shall be considered partly an expense of the administration of this title in proportions to be determined from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency with a view to a fair apportionment of such expense, until such time as it shall be necessary for such additional deputy comptroller to give his full time to the administration of this title. The Comptroller of the Currency shall have power to levy semiannually upon the national agricultural credit corporations operating under the provisions of this title, in proportion to their total assets, an assessment sufficient to pay the expenses of the administration of this title for the ensuing half year, together with any deficit carried forward from the preceding half year. Each such corporation shall pay the amount so assessed against it to the Treasurer of the United States subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency to be disbursed by the comptroller in payment of expenses incurred in the administration of this title.

(c) The Comptroller of the Currency shall have power to appoint and fix the compensation of examiners to examine National Agricultural Credit Corporations or to use national bank examiners for this purpose. All examiners appointed by him shall be subject to existing provisions of law relating to national bank examiners and to the provisions of the Federal reserve act which prohibit national bank examiners from performing any service for compensation for any bank or officer and from disclosing the names of borrowers or the collateral for loans without obtaining the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, and such provisions shall be held to apply to examiners appointed to examine corporations organized under the provisions of this title.

(d) The expense of all of the examinations of National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency upon the corporations examined in proportion to assets or resources held by the corporations upon the dates of examination of the various corporations: Provided, That a minimum charge of $50 shall be made for each such examination.

(e) The provisions of the Federal reserve act which prohibit any member bank from making loans or granting a gratuity to any national bank examiner shall be applicable to National Agricultural Credit Corporations.

(f) National Agricultural Credit Corporations shall be required to make reports to the Comptroller of the Currency at the time and in the manner required by sections 5211 and 5212 of the Revised Statutes, and shall be subject to the provisions, so far as the same may be held by said comptroller to be applicable of section 5213 of the Revised Statutes.

(g) The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent to inspect live stock as a basis for loans. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him under this subdivision whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given to the licensee, the Secretary shall determine that such licensee is incompetent, or has knowingly or carelessly made false or erroneous inspection reports with respect to any live stock, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has in any other manner shown himself to be unfit to act as a live-stock inspector. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems it necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without a hearing. It shall be unlawful for any person other than a holder of a license duly issued under this subdivision, or any person whose license has been suspended or revoked under the terms of this subdivision, to represent that he is a Federally licensed live-stock inspector, and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

(h) Any inspector licensed under the provisions of subdivision (g) who makes any statement in any inspection report or to any person for the purpose of obtaining for himself, or any other person, any advance on the security of the live stock inspected, knowing the same to be false, or who willfully overvalues any security by which an advance is secured, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(i) The Comptroller of the Currency shall allot to the Department of Agriculture from time to time such sums as may be estimated to be necessary for the administration of the functions vested in that department by this title, and may ratably assess the same from time to time against national agricultural credit corporations.

BANKS MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM MAY BECOME STOCKHOLDERS.

SEC. 210. That any member bank of the Federal reserve system may file application with the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to invest an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 10 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus in the stock of one or more of the national agricultural credit corporations, and upon approval of such application may purchase said stock. The Comptroller of the Currency shall have discretion to approve or reject such application in whole or in part.

TAXATION.

SEC. 211. That taxation by a State of the shares in national agricultural credit corporations, or of dividends derived therefrom, or of the income of said corporations, or real estate owned by them, shall be such only as is or may be authorized by law in the case of national banking associations; and taxation by a State of the debentures or other obligations of such corporations shall not be at a higher rate than the rate applicable to other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens thereof.

DEPOSITS.

SEC. 212. That the moneys of national agricultural credit corporations may be kept on deposit subject to check in any member bank of the Federal reserve system.

CONVERSION OF CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 213. (a) That any agricultural or live-stock financing corporation incorporated by special law of any State or organized under the general laws of any State and having an unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national agricultural credit corporation may, by the vote of the shareholders owning not less than 51 per centum of the capital stock of such corporation, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, be converted into a national agricultural credit corporation under this title, with any name approved by the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That the said conversion shall not be in contravention of the State law.

(b) In such case the articles of association and organization certificate may be executed by a majority of the directors of the corporation, and the certificate shall declare that the owners of 51 per centum of the capital stock have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to change or convert the corporation into a national agricultural credit corporation. A majority of the directors, after executing the articles of association and the organization certificate, shall have power to execute all other papers and to do whatever may be required to make its organization perfect and complete as a national agricultural credit corporation. The shares of any such corporation may continue to be for the same amount each as they were before the conversion, and the directors may continue to be directors of the corporation until others are elected or appointed.

(c) When the Comptroller of the Currency has given to such corporation a certificate that the provisions of this title have been complied with, such corporation, and all its stockholders, owners, and employees, shall have the same powers and privileges and shall be subject to the same duties, liabilities, and regulations, in all respects, as shall have been prescribed by this title for corporations originally organized as national agricultural credit corporations.

CONSOLIDATION OF CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 214. (a) That any two or more national agricultural credit corporations, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, may consolidate into one corporation under the charter of either or any of the existing corporations on such terms and conditions as may be lawfully agreed upon by a majority of the board of directors of each corporation proposing to consolidate, such agreement to be ratified and confirmed by the affirmative vote of the shareholders of each of such corporations owning at least two-thirds of its capital stock outstanding, at a meeting to be held on the call of the directors after publishing notice of the time, place, and object of the meeting for four consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in the place where the said corporation is located, and if no newspaper is published in the place, then in a paper published nearest thereto, and after sending such notice to each shareholder of record by registered mail at least 10 days prior to said meeting: Provided, That the capital stock of such consolidated corporation shall not be less than $250,000 paid in if the corporations consolidated are organized to exercise the powers covered by section 203, or less than $1,000,000 paid in if the corporations consolidated are those organized under section 207.

(b) When such consolidation shall have been effected and approved by the Comptroller of the Currency any shareholder of either of the corporations so consolidated who has not voted for such consolidation may give notice to the board of directors of the corporation in which he is interested, within 20 days from the date of the certificate of approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, that he dissents from the plan of consolidation as adopted and approved, whereupon he shall be entitled to receive the value of the shares so held by him, to be ascertained by an appraisal made by a committee of three persons, one to be selected by the shareholder, one by the directors, and the third by the two so chosen; and in case the value so affixed shall not be satisfactory to the shareholder, he may within five days after being notified of the appraisal appeal to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall cause a reappraisal to be made, which shall be final and binding; and if said reappraisal shall exceed the value affixed by said committee, the corporation shall pay the expense of the reappraisal, otherwise the appellant shall pay said expense; and the value so ascertained and determined shall be deemed to be a debt due and be forthwith paid to said shareholder by said corporation, and the shares so paid shall be surrendered and after due notice sold at public auction within 30 days after the final appraisement provided for by this title.

(c) Where corporations consolidate under the provisions of this title, all of the rights, franchises, and interest of said corporations shall be consolidated in and to every species of property, personal and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, and shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in the corporation into which it is consolidated without any deed or other transfer, and the said consolidated corporation shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights of property, franchises, and interest, in the same manner and to the same extent as they were held and enjoyed by the corporations so consolidated therewith.

INSOLVENCY, RECEIVERSHIP, AND LIQUIDATION.

SEC. 215. (a) That whenever any national agricultural credit corporation shall be dissolved and its rights, privileges, and franchises declared forfeited as prescribed in the preceding section, or whenever any creditor of any such corporation shall have obtained a judgment against it in any court of record and made application accompanied by a certificate from the clerk of the court, stating that such judgment has been rendered and has remained unpaid for the space of 30 days or whenever the Comptroller of the Currency shall become satisfied of the insolvency of such corporation, he may, after due examination of its affairs in either case, appoint a receiver who shall proceed to wind up the affairs of such corporation. The receiver so appointed shall exercise the powers and be subject to the restrictions of receivers of national banks; and the Comptroller of the Currency shall have the same powers and duties in connection with the administration of such receivership as he has in reference to the receivership of national banks.

(b) Shareholders' agents for shareholders of national agricultural credit corporations may be appointed in the manner prescribed by section 3 of the act of June 30, 1876, as amended, and shall have the same general powers and duties and be subject to the same restrictions as shareholders' agents of a national bank.

(c) Any national agricultural credit corporation may go into liquidation and be closed by the vote of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock. Whenever a vote is taken to go into liquidation it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause notice of this fact to be certified under the seal of the corporation by its president or cashier to the Comptroller of the Currency and publication thereof to be made for a period of two months in a newspaper published in the city or town in which the corporation is located, or if no newspaper is there published, in the newspaper published nearest thereto, that the corporation is closing up its affairs and notifying the creditors to present their claims against the corporation for payment. All such claims shall be presented to and approved by a liquidating agent to be appointed by the board of directors of such corporation, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the affairs of such corporation shall be liquidated by such agent and under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

PENALTY PROVISIONS.

SEC. 216. (a) That any officer, director, agent, or employee of a national agricultural credit corporation who embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of such corporation, or who without authority from the directors draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such corporation with intent in any case to injure or defraud such corporation or any other company or person or to deceive any officer of such corporation or the Comptroller of the Currency or any agent or examiner appointed to examine the affairs of such corporation; and every receiver of such corporation who with like intent to defraud or injure embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or assets of the corporation, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, director, agent, employee, or receiver in any violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction in any district court of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

(b) Whoever makes any statement, knowing it to be false, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or for any other person, firm, corporation, or association any advance, or extension or renewal of an advance, or any release or substitution of security, from a national agricultural credit corporation, or for the purpose of influencing in any other way the action of such corporation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

(c) Whoever willfully overvalues any property offered as security for any such advance shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

(d) Any examiner appointed under this title who shall accept a loan or gratuity from any organization examined by him, or from any person connected with any such organization in any capacity, or who shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of such organization, without first having obtained express permission in writing from the Comptroller of the Currency or from the board of directors of such organization, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment of not exceeding one year, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office as an examiner under the provisions of this title. No examiner while holding such office shall perform any other service for compensation for any bank or banking or loan association or for any person connected therewith in any capacity.

(e) Whoever, being an officer, director, employee, agent, or attorney of a national agricultural credit corporation stipulates for or receives or consents or agrees to receive any fee, commmission, gift, or thing of value from any person, firm, or corporation for procuring or endeavoring to procure for such person, firm, or corporation, or for any other person, firm, or corporation any loan from any such corporation or extension or renewal of loan or substitution of security, or the purchase or discount or acceptance of any paper, note, draft, check, or bill of exchange by any such corporation, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both.

(f) Any person who shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any debentures, coupons, or other obligations in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of the debentures, coupons, or other obligations issued by any national agricultural credit corporation, and any person who shall pass, utter, or publish or attempt to pass, utter, or publish any false, forged, or counterfeited debenture, coupon, and other obligation purporting to be issued by any such corporation knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, and any person who shall falsely alter or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such debenture, coupon, or other obligation, or who shall pass, utter, or publish as true any falsely altered or spurious debenture, coupon, or other obligation issued or purporting to have been issued by any such corporation knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

(g) Any person who shall deceive, defraud, or impose upon or who shall attempt to deceive, defraud, or impose upon any person, partnership, corporation, or association by making any false pretense or representation concerning the character, issue, security, contents, conditions, or terms of any debenture, coupon, or other obligation issued under the terms of this title, shall be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned not to exceed one year, or both.

(h) All corporations not organized under the provisions of this title are prohibited from using the words "national agricultural credit corporation" as part of their corporate name, and any violation of this prohibition shall subject the party charged therewith to a civil penalty of $50 for each day during which the violation continues.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND.

SEC. 217. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal the provisions of this title is hereby expressly reserved.

TITLE III.—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

SEC. 301. That the second paragraph of section 3 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"Said Federal Farm Loan Board shall consist of seven members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be a member and chairman ex officio, and six members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the six members to be appointed by the President, not more than three shall be appointed from one political party, and all six of said members shall be citizens of the United States and shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal Farm Loan Board; they shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses. One of the additional members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, hereby provided for, shall be appointed for a term expiring August 6, 1929, and one for a term expiring August 6, 1931, and thereafter the terms of all members of the Federal Farm Loan Board shall be as in this section otherwise provided for."

SEC. 302. That the eighth paragraph of section 3 of the Federal farm loan act is amended and divided into three paragraphs to read as follows:

"The salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and farm loan registrars and examiners authorized under this section shall, after June 30, 1923, be paid by the Federal and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets, as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall, prior to June 30, 1923, and each six months thereafter, estimate the expenses and salaries of the Federal Farm Loan Board, its officers and employees, farm-loan registrars, deputy registrars, the examiners and reviewing appraisers, and apportion the same among the Federal and joint-stock land banks in proportion to their gross assets at the time of such apportionment and make an assessment upon each of such banks pursuant to such apportionment, payable on the 1st of July or January next ensuing. The funds collected pursuant to such assessments shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to be disbursed in payment of such salaries and expenses on appropriations duly made by Congress for such purpose.

"If any deficiency shall occur in such fund during the half-year period for which it was estimated, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall have authority to make immediate assessment covering such deficiency against the Federal and joint-stock land banks upon the same basis as the original assessment. If at the end of the six months' period there shall remain a surplus in such fund, it shall be deducted from the estimated expenses of the next ensuing six months' period when assessment is made for such period. Land-bank appraisers shall receive such compensation as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall fix and shall be paid by the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks which they serve in such proportion and in such manner as the Federal Farm Loan Board shall order."

SEC. 303. That the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish in each Federal land-bank district a Federal land bank, with its principal office located in such city within the district as said board shall designate. Each Federal land bank shall include in its title the name of the city in which it is located. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, any Federal land bank may establish branches within the land-bank district. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of this act are extended to the island of Porto Rico and the Territory of Alaska; and the Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in Porto Rico, and a Federal land bank which is hereby authorized to establish a branch bank in the Territory of Alaska. Loans made by each such branch bank shall not exceed the sum of $10,000 to any one borrower and shall be subject to the restrictions and provisions of this act, except that each such branch bank may loan direct to borrowers, and, subject to such regulations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may prescribe, the rate charged borrowers may be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank with which such branch bank is connected: Provided, That no loan shall be made in Porto Rico or Alaska by such branch bank for a longer term than 20 years."

SEC. 304. That the twentieth to twenty-fifth paragraphs, inclusive, of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act are amended to read as follows:

"The board of directors of every Federal land bank shall be selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of seven members. Three of said directors shall be known as local directors and shall be chosen by and be representative of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies; three shall be known as district directors and shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board and represent the public interest. The term of office of local and district directors shall be three years.

"Within 30 days from the date of passage of the agricultural credits act of 1923, and thereafter at least two months before each election, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall divide each land-bank district into three divisions, as nearly equal as possible, according to the number of borrowers and the voting strength of national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies, and the farm loan commissioner shall thereupon notify each association and agency in writing that an election is to be held for one local director from each of said divisions and requesting each association and agency to nominate one candidate for each division. Within 10 days of receipt of such notice each national farm-loan association and borrower through agencies shall forward nominations of residents of their respective divisions for one director for such division to said farm loan commissioner. The farm loan commissioner shall then prepare a list of candidates for local directors, consisting of the 10 persons receiving the highest number of votes from national farm-loan associations and borrowers through agencies for each division.

"At least one month before said election the farm loan commissioner shall mail to each national farm-loan association and to each borrower through agencies the list of candidates for their respective divisions. The directors of each national farm-loan association shall cast the vote of said association for one of the candidates on said list and shall forward said vote to the said farm loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. In voting under this section each association shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to the total voting strength of the stockholders in association meetings, and each borrower through agencies shall be entitled to cast one vote for each share of stock held by him in the Federal land bank not exceeding 20 shares, and shall forward said vote to the said farm loan commissioner within 10 days after said list of candidates is received. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes in his division shall be declared elected as local director of the Federal land-bank district from his division. In case of a tie, the farm loan commissioner shall determine the choice. The nominations from which the list of candidates is prepared, and the votes of the respective associations and borrowers through agencies for such candidates, as counted, shall be tabulated and preserved, subject to examination by any candidate, for at least one year after the result of the election is announced.

"The Federal Farm Loan Board shall designate one of the district directors to serve until December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. After their first appointment each district director shall be appointed for a term of three years. At the first regular meeting of the board of directors of each Federal land bank the local directors shall designate one of their members to serve till December 31, 1924, one to serve till December 31, 1925, and one to serve till December 31, 1926. Thereafter each local director shall be chosen as hereinbefore provided and shall hold office for a term of three years. Any vacancies that may occur in the board of directors shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner provided herein for the original selection of such directors. At the same time that the associations and borrowers through agencies nominate the candidates for the local directors, each association and each borrower through agencies shall also nominate one candidate for director at large for the entire district, and from the three persons having the greatest number of votes for nominee for director at large the Federal Farm Loan Board shall select a director at large, whose term of office shall terminate on the 31st day of December, 1925, and every three years thereafter. Such seventh director may be removed by the Federal Farm Loan Board for neglect of duty, incapacity for the work, or malfeasance in office after charges duly preferred and a hearing had thereon, and in such cases the associations of the district shall in like manner nominate candidates for another director at large to fill the vacancy, for whom the Federal Farm Loan Board shall in same manner select a successor, but any person who is removed can not be nominated to succeed himself. The board of directors thus selected shall, upon qualification, immediately take over the management of each bank.

"Directors of Federal land banks shall have been, for at least two years, residents of the district for which they are appointed or elected, and a local director shall be a resident of his division when elected. No district director of a Federal land bank shall, during his continuance in office, act as an officer, director, or employee of any other institution, association, or partnership engaged in banking or in the business of making or selling land-mortgage loans.

"Directors of the Federal land bank shall receive, in addition to any compensation otherwise provided, a reasonable allowance for necessary expenses in attending meetings of their boards, to be paid by the respective Federal land banks. Any compensation that may be provided by boards of directors of the Federal land banks for directors, officers, or employees shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board."

SEC. 305. That the fourth paragraph of section 7 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding thereto the following: "No such secretary-treasurer shall engage in the making of land-mortgage loans eligible at a Federal land bank through or for any other land-mortgage company or agency, and the making of any such loan by any secretary-treasurer shall forthwith work a forfeiture of his office."

SEC. 306. That subdivision (d) of paragraph "Fourth" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged, incurred for agricultural purposes, or incurred prior to January 1, 1922."

SEC. 307. That paragraph "Seventh" of section 12 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. The amount of loans to any one borrower shall in no case exceed a maximum of $25,000, nor shall any one loan be for a less sum than $100, but preference shall be given to applications for loans of $10,000 and under."

SEC. 308. That section 21 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof 12 new paragraphs to read as follows:

"Whenever it shall appear desirable to issue consolidated bonds of the 12 Federal land banks and to sell them through a common selling agency, and the Federal land banks shall, by resolution, consent to the same, the banks may issue and sell said bonds as hereinafter provided.

"Every bond so issued shall be signed by the Farm Loan Commissioner and attested by the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and their signatures may be either written or engraved thereon and shall recite in the face of the bond the fact that it is the joint and several obligation of the 12 Federal land banks, and shall in all respects be governed by the provisions of the Federal farm loan act not inconsistent herewith.

"The consolidated bonds issued under this provision shall be made payable at any Federal land bank, and may be made payable at any Federal reserve bank or banks designated in the face of the bond.

"Each Federal land bank on whose behalf consolidated bonds shall be issued under this provision shall in all respects be bound by the act of the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board in executing such bonds.

"Every Federal land bank, before participation in a consolidated issue, as herein provided, shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on Federal farm loan bonds as provided in this section and be bound by the action of the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board in executing the same.

"Every farm loan bond issued hereunder shall contain on the face thereof a certificate signed by the Farm Loan Commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of Title I of the Federal farm loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by national, State, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security consisting of obligations of the United States Government, or indorsed first mortgages on farm lands, at least equal in amount to the bonds issued; and that all Federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond.

"When any Federal land bank shall desire to participate in a consolidated issue of farm loan bonds it shall make application to the Federal Farm Loan Board for the approval on its behalf of such issue and tender to the registrar approved farm mortgages, or obligations of the United States Government, as security therefor, and no banks shall participate in such consolidated issue until such application has been approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Each bank shall pay when due, without notice, all bonds and coupons issued on its behalf hereunder.

"If any Federal land bank shall fail to pay its proportion of interest or principal as herein prescribed, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall immediately call upon the other Federal land banks for the amount necessary to make said payment, the assessments to be made in proportion to the capital stock of each, which assessments shall be forthwith paid by said banks.

"The presidents of the 12 Federal land banks shall constitute the bond committee of the Federal land banks and shall select a chairman from among their number. The vice president may act in place of the president on the president's request or in case he fails to act.

"When an issue of consolidated bonds is contemplated, the bond committee shall determine the amount of such issue, the rate of interest which it is to bear, and the participation of the several banks therein, and submit their recommendations to the Federal Farm Loan Board for approval. When approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board the bonds shall be executed by the Farm Loan Commissioner and the secretary of the Federal Farm Loan Board, as herein provided.

"The expenses of the bond committee and of the sale of bonds shall be charged against the several land banks in proportion to their participation in the proceeds.

"The presidents of the Federal land banks shall receive no additional compensation for their services as members of the bond committee, but shall be paid necessary traveling expenses."

SEC. 309. That subdivisions (a) and (b) of the eighth paragraph of section 22 of the Federal farm loan act are amended to read as follows:

"(a) To pay off farm loan bonds issued by or in behalf of said bank as they mature.

"(b) To purchase at or below par Federal farm loan bonds."

SEC. 310. That section 25 of the Federal farm loan act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 25. That if there shall be default under the terms of any indorsed first mortgage held by a Federal land bank under the provisions of this title, the National Farm Loan Association through which said mortgage was received by said Federal land bank shall be notified of said default. Said association may thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to make good such default, either by payment of the amount unpaid thereon in cash or by the substitution of an equal amount of Federal farm loan bonds, with all unmatured coupons attached."

SEC. 311. That section 29 of the Federal farm loan act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Upon liquidation of any national farm-loan association, the stock in the Federal land bank held by such association shall be canceled and the Federal land bank shall thereupon issue to the borrowers through such association an amount of stock in the Federal land bank equal to the amount of stock held by such borrowers in the liquidated association, such stock to be held by the bank as collateral to the loans of such borrowers and to be paid off and retired at par in the same manner as stock held by borrowers in farm-loan associations, and the Federal land bank shall pay to the borrowers holding such stock the same dividends as are paid to national farm-loan associations by such bank. The personal liability of the stockholders in such liquidated association to the association shall survive such liquidation and shall be vested in the bank in that district, which may enforce the same as fully as the association could if in existence."

TITLE IV.—AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

SEC. 401. That the ninth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal reserve act is amended to read as follows:

"No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal reserve bank unless (a) it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provision of the national bank act, or (b) it possesses a paid-up, unimpaired capital of at least 60 per cent of the amount sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the national bank act and, under penalty of loss of membership complies with rules and regulations which the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe fixing the time within which and the method by which the unimpaired capital of such bank shall be increased out of the net income to equal the capital which would have been required if such bank had been admitted to membership under the provisions of clause (a) of this paragraph: Provided, That every such rule or regulation shall require the applying bank to set aside annually not less than 20 per cent of its net income of the preceding year as a fund exclusively applicable to such capital increase."

SEC. 402. That the second paragraph of section 13 of the Federal reserve act is amended and divided into two paragraphs to read as follows:

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the Federal Reserve Board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act. Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount, and the notes, drafts, and bills of exchange of factors issued as such making advances exclusively to producers of staple agricultural products in their raw state shall be eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States. Notes, drafts, and bills admitted to discount under the terms of this paragraph must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days, exclusive of days of grace.

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice, and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, and subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, any Federal reserve bank may discount or purchase bills of exchange payable at sight or on demand which are drawn to finance the domestic shipment of nonperishable, readily marketable staple agricultural products and are secured by bills of lading or other shipping documents, conveying or securing title to such staples: Provided, That all such bills of exchange shall be forwarded promptly for collection, and demand for payment shall be made with reasonable promptness after the arrival of such staples at their destination: Provided further, That no such bill shall in any event be held by or for the account of a Federal reserve bank for a period in excess of 90 days. In discounting such bills Federal reserve banks may compute the interest to be deducted on the basis of the estimated life of each bill and adjust the discount after payment of such bills to conform to the actual life thereof."

SEC. 403. That the fourth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal reserve act is amended to read as follows:

"Any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances of the kinds hereinafter described, which have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than 90 days' sight, exclusive of days of grace, and which are indorsed by at least one member bank: Provided, That such acceptances if drawn for an agricultural purpose and secured at the time of acceptance by warehouse receipts or other such documents conveying or securing title covering readily marketable staples, may be discounted with a maturity at the time of discount of not more than six months' sight, exclusive of days of grace."

SEC. 404. That the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end of section 13 a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 13a. Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, which shall be deemed a waiver of demand, notice, and protest by such bank as to its own indorsement exclusively, any Federal reserve bank may, subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, or based upon live stock, and having a maturity, at the time of discount, exclusive of days of grace, not exceeding nine months, and such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange may be offered as collateral security for the issuance of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of this act: Provided, That notes, drafts, and bills of exchange with maturities in excess of six months shall not be eligible as a basis for the issuance of Federal reserve notes unless secured by warehouse receipts or other such negotiable documents conveying or securing title to readily marketable staple agricultural products or by chattel mortgage upon live stock which is being fattened for market.

"That any Federal reserve bank may, subject to regulations and limitations to be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, rediscount such notes, drafts, and bills for any Federal intermediate credit bank, except that no Federal reserve bank shall rediscount for a Federal intermediate credit bank any such note or obligation which bears the indorsement of a nonmember State bank or trust company which is eligible for membership in the Federal reserve system, in accordance with section 9 of this act.

"Any Federal reserve bank may also buy and sell debentures and other such obligations issued by a Federal intermediate credit bank or by a national agricultural credit corporation, but only to the same extent as and subject to the same limitations as those upon which it may buy and sell bonds issued under Title I of the Federal farm loan act.

"Notes, drafts, bills of exchange or acceptances issued or drawn by cooperative marketing associations composed of producers of agricultural products shall be deemed to have been issued or drawn for an agricultural purpose, within the meaning of this section, if the proceeds thereof have been or are to be advanced by such association to any members thereof for an agricultural purpose, or have been or are to be used by such association in making payments to any members thereof on account of agricultural products delivered by such members to the association, or if such proceeds have been or are to be used by such association to meet expenditures incurred or to be incurred by the association in connection with the grading, processing, packing, preparation for market, or marketing of any agricultural product handled by such association for any of its members: Provided, That the express enumeration in this paragraph of certain classes of paper of cooperative marketing associations as eligible for rediscount shall not be construed as rendering ineligible any other class of paper of such associations which is now eligible for rediscount.

"The Federal Reserve Board may, by regulation, limit to a percentage of the assets of a Federal reserve bank the amount of notes, drafts, acceptances, or bills having a maturity in excess of three months, but not exceeding six months, exclusive of days of grace, which may be discounted by such bank, and the amount of notes, drafts, bills, or acceptances having a maturity in excess of six months, but not exceeding nine months, which may be discounted by such bank."

SEC. 405. That section 14 of the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(f) To purchase and sell in the open market, either from or to domestic banks, firms, corporations, or individuals, acceptances of Federal intermediate credit banks and of national agricultural credit corporations, whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall declare that the public interest so requires."

SEC. 406. That section 15 of the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositories for and fiscal agents of any national agricultural credit corporation or Federal intermediate credit bank."

SEC. 407. That the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act," approved April 13, 1920, is repealed.

TITLE V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

AMENDMENTS TO WAR FINANCE CORPORATION ACT.

SEC. 501. That the time during which the War Finance Corporation may make advances and purchase notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities under the terms of sections 21, 22, 23, and 24 of the War Finance Corporation act, as amended, is further extended up to and including February 29, 1924: Provided, That if any application for an advance or for the purchase by the War Finance Corporation of notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities is received at the office of the corporation in the District of Columbia on or before February 29, 1924, such application may be acted upon and approved, and the advance may be made or the notes, drafts, or other securities purchased, at any time prior to March 31, 1924.

SEC. 502. That the second paragraph of section 12 of Title I of the War Finance Corporation act, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"The power of the corporation to issue notes or bonds may be exercised at any time prior to January 31, 1927, but no such bonds or notes shall mature later than June 30, 1927."

SEC. 503. (a) That the third paragraph of section 15 of Title I of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out at the beginning of such paragraph the words "beginning July 1, 1923," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "beginning April 1, 1924."

(b) The fourth paragraph of such section, as amended, is amended by striking out at the beginning of such paragraph the words "After July 1, 1923," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "After April 1, 1924."

INDEBTEDNESS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

SEC. 504. That section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Eighth. Liabilities incurred under the provisions of section 202 of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, as amended."

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE.

SEC. 506. (a) That a joint committee be appointed, to consist of three members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, to be appointed by the President thereof, and five members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

(b) The joint committee is authorized to inquire into the effect of the present limited membership of State banks and trust companies in the Federal reserve system upon financial conditions in the agricultural sections of the United States; the reasons which actuate eligible State banks and trust companies in failing to become members of the Federal reserve system; what administrative measures have been taken and are being taken to increase such membership; and whether or not any change should be made in existing law, or in rules and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, or in methods of administration, to bring about in the agricultural districts a larger membership of such banks or trust companies in the Federal reserve system.

(c) The committee is authorized to sit at any time during the sessions or recesses of the Congress, to conduct its hearings at Washington or at any other place in the United States, to send for persons, books, and papers, to take testimony, to administer oaths, and to employ experts deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk, and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, such stenographer's services to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The expenses of such committee shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives in proportion to the membership of such committee from each House.

(d) The committee shall from time to time report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and may prepare and submit bills or resolutions embodying such recommendations, and the final report of said committee shall be submitted not later than January 31, 1924.

SEPARABILITY PROVISION.

SEC. 507. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment is rendered.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 508. That when used in this act the term "Federal farm loan act" means the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and the term "Federal reserve act" means the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, as amended.

SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 509. That this act may be cited as the "Agricultural credits act of 1923."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE P. MCLEAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with, as it is a very long report and it would take an hour to read it.

Mr. HEFLIN. There will be no objection to that course.

Mr. McLEAN. And I ask that the report of the conference committee be agreed to.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought, in justice to the Senate, to make a very brief explanation.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a long report. I do not think there is any necessity for reading it.

Mr. McLEAN. The Capper bill was incorporated in every substantial feature. The House did eliminate several important provisions, but they were all reinstated by the committee of conference by unanimous vote. It also contains the Lenroot bill in substance. I think it is satisfactory to the authors of both the Capper and the Lenroot bills. It also contains certain provisions of the Strong bill for the administration of the Farm Loan Board, increases the number of members of the board from five to seven, and provides for the payment of the members out of the proceeds of the system. There were a few other administrative features which were incorporated. Those changes were approved by members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate.

I will say to the Senator from Utah that any attempt to go into a detailed explanation of the bill would be useless at this time, and I hope the Senator will not press for any long explanation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, while there is one provision in the conference report that I fear will very greatly interfere with the full functioning of one portion of the bill, I am satisfied that it can be remedied at the session next December, and I hope the report will be agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, there will not be a record vote on the conference report, and therefore I want the RECORD to show that I am not in favor of it. I accepted the two bills as they went out of the Senate, but they were hardly worthy of support at that time. It is admitted now that they are not quite as good as they were, and I want the RECORD to show that I am against them.

I want to say to those on the other side of the Chamber who may undertake to claim credit for the passage of the legislation that they are entitled to all the credit they may claim. They will not be claiming so much credit a year from now. A credit system that refuses to lend money to a farmer and makes it almost impossible for a banker to lend to the farmer can not be much of a political advertisement for either party.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I shall then move to return to legislative session as soon as the executive business is disposed of.

Mr. HEFLIN. May I ask the Senator how long he thinks we will be in executive session?

Mr. LODGE. I think it will be a very short executive session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 45 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

BLATTMANN & CO.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the State Department and a report from the Alien Property Custodian relative to the bill (S. 3701) for the relief of Blattmann & Co.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 26, 1922.

The Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 8, 1922, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 3701) for the relief of Blattmann & Co., and requesting on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate any comments or suggestions in regard thereto which I may desire to make.

The only information which the department has concerning this case is that contained in a note of October 29, 1919, from the minister of Switzerland at Washington, a copy of which, with its inclosures, is transmitted for your information.

Upon the receipt of this note, the department transmitted a copy to the Alien Property Custodian with a request for a detailed report of the facts in the case.

A subsequent inquiry as to the status of the matter having been received from the Swiss Legation, the department on January 9, 1920, again requested the custodian to furnish the desired report and informed the legation of the action taken. No further communication has been received from the legation.

Since no report appears ever to have been received by the department from the custodian, I am to-day requesting him to submit a report. I am also requesting the Attorney General to inform me of his records in the case. In the absence of the custodian's report, I am not in a position to discuss the case on its merits. However, I beg to submit the following comments for your consideration in connection with the bill:

It is observed that the amount which the present bill contemplates appropriating in compensation of Blattmann & Co. for losses sustained through the seizure of the devitalized gluten by the Alien Property Custodian, is $145,526. It appears from the minister of Switzerland's note of October 29, 1919, that the Attorney General on October 15 had ordered the payment to Blattmann & Co. of the sum of $65,894.14, the proceeds of the sale of this gluten, and that the firm claimed, in addition to this amount, the sum of $61,839.84. It is not clear, therefore, why the present bill is for an amount over twice the latter sum.

Section 7 of the trading with the enemy act as amended by the act of November 4, 1918 (Public, No. 233), provides:

"The sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any money or other property heretofore or hereafter conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him, shall be that provided by the terms of this act, and in the event of sale or other disposition of such property by the Alien Property Custodian, shall be limited to and enforced against the net proceeds received therefrom and held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States."

In the case under consideration it is claimed that the net proceeds of the sale of property taken over were insufficient to provide adequate compensation to the owner. It is possible that a like condition will be found to exist in other cases of seized property, and that foreign governments may present other diplomatic claims on behalf of their nationals for losses arising from the seizure of property by the Alien Property Custodian, and in doing so take the position that, as to the amount of the claim, they can not accept the limitation provided by the act of November 4, 1918. I beg to commend to your consideration the view that where property taken over and sold by the custodian as enemy property is shown to have been owned by a national of a State other than one with which the United States was at war compensation should not be limited to the net proceeds of the sale if the claimant is able to show that he has suffered as a result of the seizure a loss greater than this amount.

The Attorney General and the Alien Property Custodian may be in a position to furnish you with information in regard to the matter, or comments on the bill, should you desire to communicate with them.

I am, my dear Senator LODGE,
Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM PHILLIPS, Acting Secretary.

[Inclosure: From Swiss Minister, October 29, 1919, with inclosures.]

LEGATION OF SWITZERLAND,
Washington, D. C., October 29, 1919.

His Excellency Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the following:

On or about the 22d day of May, 1918, the Alien Property Custodian seized in the hands of the National City Bank of New York City negotiable warehouse receipts held for the account of Blattmann & Co., a Swiss copartnership, and representing 1,057,100 pounds of devitalized gluten then in storage at the Terminal Warehouse Co., New York City, without in any way notifying the Swiss firm interested or the legation.

On August 26, 1918, at New York City, the Alien Property Custodian sold, again without notice being given Blattmann & Co. or the legation, at auction the said warehouse receipts, the net proceeds of the sale—that is to say, the proceeds from which had been deducted the custodian's expenses, etc.—amounting to the sum of $65,894.14.

Blattmann & Co. began exporting gluten from the United States to Switzerland in the year 1910. In 1914 Mr. Blattmann visited the United States and entered into a number of contracts for future deliveries of gluten running for a period of years. When in that year shipping conditions became congested, due to the outbreak of war, Blattmann & Co. instructed the concerns from whom the gluten was being received to store the material in the Bush Terminal Warehouse, Brooklyn, N. Y. Deliveries of the gluten as aforesaid began in November, 1914, and continued up until September, 1917. In this way a total of 1,071,100 pounds were received at Bush Terminal.

In January, 1917, however, one of the original sellers bought back 14,000 pounds, leaving a balance of 1,057,100 pounds in storage. The amount of the invoices representing this gluten, as set forth in a legalized statement hereto attached and hereafter referred to, was $88,368. In addition, as will be shown from the statement, there were additional charges for storage, insurance, banking expenses, etc., totaling $16,955.10, and interest up until the 30th day of September, 1919, of $22,410.88. To summarize:

Net amount of invoices	$88,368.00
Storage, insurance, etc.	16,955.10
Interest	22,410.88
Total	127,733.98

This amount, then, represents the investment of Blattmann & Co. in the gluten, based on the actual invoice price of the material, plus storage, insurance, and interest—that is to say, $127,733.98.

In August, 1919, Mr. H. Blattmann, representing the firm, came to the United States, and on or about August 15 filed pursuant to law a notice of claim against the Alien Property Custodian for all the proceeds of the sale aforesaid, and at the same time, and likewise pursuant to law, filed an application with the Attorney General of the United States requesting that the proceeds of the sale should be paid over to Blattmann & Co.

After due investigation the Attorney General ordered the payment of the proceeds of the sale, to wit, $65,894.14, over to Messrs. Blattmann & Co., and on October 15, 1919, I, acting as attorney in fact for Blattmann & Co., received a check in that amount for the account of Blattmann & Co.

The action of the Attorney General in paying to Blattmann & Co. the proceeds of the sale is clearly a finding that the original determination of the custodian that the property was enemy alien in character was a wrongful determination. The result is that Blattmann & Co., a Swiss concern, has suffered a loss of the difference between $127,733.98 and the amount received, $65,894.14, or a total loss of $61,839.84.

The applications to the Alien Property Custodian and the Attorney General, as aforesaid, were made pursuant to section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended.

Having followed the procedure outlined in the trading with the enemy act for the recovery of wrongfully seized property it would appear that Blattmann & Co. exhausted its purely legal remedies. The fact remains, however, that this concern, composed solely of fellow countrymen of mine who have always resided in Switzerland, has without fault on its part suffered not only inconvenience and annoyance but also a monetary loss of $61,839.84, through an apparently entirely unjustified seizure of its property, without first being given opportunity either directly or through the intermediary of the legation to defend its interests.

While I will admit that extraordinary times require extraordinary measures, I am confident your excellency will agree with me that the American Government can not permit this genuine Swiss firm, a partnership composed of only my fellow countrymen, Henry Blattmann and his wife, citizens and residents of a nation entirely friendly to the United States, to suffer this loss. While it is true that the strict letter of the law does not provide a remedy for the wrong done Mr. Blattmann, I nevertheless take the liberty of laying this case before your excellency, and, trusting to the spirit of justice and fairness which has always governed the United States in its relations with the Swiss Confederation, request that some adequate disposition be made with a view to indemnifying Blattmann & Co. for the loss sustained at the hands of your Government through no fault or negligence on their part, a loss which would have been averted had the firm or the legation been notified when the goods in question were seized by the Alien Property Custodian. The action taken by the Attorney General in delivering to Mr. Blattmann the proceeds of the auction sale of his goods plainly indicates that the property of Blattmann & Co. so sold should not have been taken over by the Alien Property Custodian.

I may add that I shall gladly furnish any further proof or documents deemed necessary by your excellency in connection with the action to be taken by your department.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

———,
Minister of Switzerland.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN,
Washington, March 2, 1923.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Re Senate bill 3701, for the relief of Blattmann & Co.

DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: I have read the proceedings of the Senate in connection with this matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 28, on pages 4843 and 4844. The discussion would seem to indicate that, as the head of this office, I have acted in a discourteous manner, not only toward some Members of the Senate but toward the Department of State as well, in neglecting to answer the communications sent this office with regard to this case.

I am inclosing you copies of a letter sent to the Secretary of State under date of August 28, 1922, signed by the general counsel of this office, and a subsequent letter to the same department dated September 26, 1922. I have letters in my files from the Department of State acknowledging these two communications. These facts would seem to dispose of the assertion that I have refused to answer the Department of State.

On January 15, 1923, the House Committee on Claims reported this measure favorably, the same being House Report No. 1406, followed on January 23, 1923, by a favorable report from the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, being Senate Report No. 1060, filed by Senator NEW. On February 2, 1923, there was received at my office a letter from you and an answer was immediately prepared for my signature. Simultaneously, former Senator Hoke Smith presented additional evidence before me, and I therefore withheld sending you my answer, so that I might see you. This was at the time of your illness and absence from the Capitol, and I called up your secretary, asking him to please note on your correspondence that I had called and was taking the matter up with Senator NEW personally, who I understood was the ranking member of the Senate subcommittee next to you. I personally went to the Capitol several times to see Senator NEW, and it was my understanding with him that in view of your absence my interviews with him would be considered as an answer to your communication. Inasmuch as the respective committees of both Houses reported this measure favorably before this office was called on for information and their views were expressed in two favorable reports, and the bill was on the calendar, I deemed it perfectly proper to explain the matter to Senator NEW, the acting chairman of the subcommittee, the position that this office would be willing to take following the submission by the claimant's attorneys of additional evidence, which evidence was not in the possession of this office at the time the letters to the State Department were sent, under date of August 28, 1922, and September 26, 1922. The matter rested there until Senator NEW met me several days ago and informed me, much to my surprise, that you had criticized me for ignoring your letters. I then planned to call upon you, but my time at the Capitol the entire week has been devoted to conferences with your colleagues in connection with the administration's alien property bill, which has been favorably reported to the Senate and is on the calendar.

I trust you will understand me when I say that it is exceedingly distressing to see this matter aired on the floor of the Senate in this manner, and I certainly am not guilty of the negligence or discourtesy imputed either to the State Department or individual Senators. It has been my policy during my two years' service in this office to answer communications from the Senate or the House, or from the Members thereof, immediately and without delay. I trust you will understand this letter in the spirit in which it is written, and I am taking the liberty of handing a copy of same to your colleagues, Senators WALSH of Montana, NEW, and HITCHCOCK.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS W. MILLER,
Alien Property Custodian.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1922.

In re claim 1569.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to your letter of August 25, your file No. So 311, 545 B 61/2, I beg to give you the following report upon the funds of Blattmann & Co., as shown by the records of this office.

Under report No. 19359, trust No. 19510, the National City Bank of New York reported warehouse receipts covering 7,549 bags of devitalized wheat gluten stored in the Bush Terminal for the account of Blattmann & Co., Waedenswil, Switzerland. This office was informed that Blattmann & Co. were trading with Germany and maintained a branch in Berlin. The French authorities reported the branch in Berlin, but stated that they had no evidence of any transactions on the part of Blattmann & Co. since the beginning of the war which might be regarded as suspicious. A. S. Hoyt & Co., in a letter dated April 3, 1918, stated that Blattmann & Co. informed Mr. Hoyt that while his concern sold throughout Europe, the bulk of sales were in Germany, where they had a branch office in Berlin. The United States Food Administration advised under date of April 5, 1918, that an export license could not be obtained, as it was necessary that the manufacturer certify that the goods were not ultimately to go to Germany. This license could not be obtained, as the manufacturer had been told by Mr. Blattmann that these goods were destined for Germany ultimately.

It appears, therefore, to the office of the custodian that the property of Blattmann & Co. was properly seized under the trading with the enemy act. This property was sold at public auction to Armour & Co., the highest bidder, at a price of 6¼ cents per pound, and the net proceeds amount to $65,894.14. This property consisted of the devitalized wheat gluten above mentioned. This sale was made on the 26th day of August, 1918. The gross selling price was $67,320. The expense of the sale included storage, which accounts for the difference between the selling price and the net proceeds. Blattmann & Co. filed a claim, dated August 15, 1919, for the return of the proceeds derived from the sale made by the custodian. This claim was allowed by the Attorney General under an order dated August 22, 1919, upon proof being submitted that the claimant was a partnership composed exclusively of Swiss citizens. The return of such proceeds was made by the Alien Property Custodian through the minister of Switzerland, and a receipt and release of all claim in connection with such property was executed by the minister of Switzerland on behalf of Blattmann & Co.

The records of this office show that the original cost of this property was $88,368; that the sum of $16,955.10 had been paid for storage and insurance. This office has no means of knowing why the sum of $145,526 should be fixed as the amount to be covered by the bill introduced in the Senate.

Should you desire any further information I will gladly add anything to the information contained herein which I am able to furnish.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM W. WILSON, General Counsel.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

SIR: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 21, 1922, your file No. 311.545 B 61/6.

In answer to your request I am inclosing herewith a copy of extracts from the files of the Alien Property Custodian, giving you such information as is found in our files concerning the market price and the manner in which the sale was made. With regard to the bid of A. S. Hoyt & Co., of 15 cents per pound it appears that this bid was made subject to certain conditions which would permit Hoyt & Co. to withdraw only such amounts as they had previously obtained a sale for at a profit to themselves.

I am also inclosing a photostatic copy of the release executed by the Minister of Switzerland upon the return to him of the proceeds of the sale.

Respectfully,

SEWALL W. ABBOTT,
Acting General Counsel.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN,

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Re Senate bill 3701, for the relief of Blattmann & Co.:

DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: This letter is in accordance with a request you made of me at the Capitol this morning, and additional to my letter of this date with reference to the same subject, which I ask to be considered as accompanying this communication. You requested information of this office on this matter by letter dated February 2, 1923, after both the respective Senate and House committees had favorably reported this bill, with the apparent concurrence of the State Department. Under date of August 25, 1922, the State Department requested information from the files of this office, and their request was complied with under date of August 28, a copy of which I transmitted with my earlier letter of to-day's date, and a part of which is printed in House Report 1406, page 8, Sixty-seventh Congress, being a favorable report of the House Committee on Claims. After the receipt of your letter of February 2, I found that the respective Senate and House committees had already acted favorably on the bill in their reports to their respective Houses dated some weeks before; this with the apparent approval of the State Department.

This matter was never before this office, except to the extent of the seizure and sale of the property. The return of the proceeds of the sale was ordered by Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, under an order dated August 22, 1919, upon proof being submitted that the claimant was a partnership composed exclusively of Swiss citizens. The return of the proceeds was ordered by the Department of Justice, without reference to the then Alien Property Custodian. I therefore find that the House and Senate committees had access to considerable evidence that was not in this office, and that this office never had the opportunity to know.

The property was seized because it was reported that Mr. Blattmann had said that a part of this property was destined for resale in Germany, and that Blattmann & Co. were doing business in Germany. It did not appear, however, in the files of this office that these alleged remarks were made in 1914, before the World War was begun. Such, however, now seems to be the fact, if, in fact, the remarks were ever made at all. Mr. Hoyt, to whom it was reported to this office the remarks were made, denied that they were ever made to him.

In my opinion, this claim is in a class by itself. The property seized was, as now appears, the property of a friendly neutral, and the claim initiated through diplomatic channels. The property was ordered for return by the Attorney General on the representation of the State Department. No evidence that I know of has ever developed against this claim, except the original report, which, while sufficient upon which to base a seizure, is not sufficient to impair the justice of Blattmann & Co's. claim.

In view of the favorable reports of the two congressional committees that have considered this claim, the apparent recommendation of our State Department, and the findings of the Attorney General, all of which were based on information and evidence much fuller than that to which this office had access, I do not desire to be placed in an attitude of opposition to the favorable action of your body on this measure. I reiterate my request that my earlier letter of to-day's date be considered as accompanying this later communication.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS MILLER,
Alien Property Custodian.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 287) creating the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services.

VIOLATION BY JAPANESE OF FEDERAL FISHERY LAWS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to present a matter in order that it may attract the attention of the Attorney General.

For a number of years, during the two administrations preceding the present one, I have from time to time presented to the then Attorney Generals of the United States evidence which had been presented to me by a constituent of mine, Capt. Miller Freeman, publisher of a number of trade journals called the Freeman Publications, of the violation of the fishery laws of the United States by the Japanese on the Pacific coast. As I am about to retire from the Senate and probably will not have an opportunity to again call this matter to the attention of the present Attorney General, I want to put into the RECORD a brief statement on the subject, and hope that it will reach the eyes and elicit the active consideration of the present distinguished and efficient head of the Department of Justice. I understand that he has directed the United States attorney for the southern district of California to investigate this matter and that it is now under inquiry.

I submitted it to a distinguished citizen of California, Mr. V. S. McClatchy, publisher of a very virile and widely circulated newspaper in that State, the Sacramento Bee. I submitted it to him because I knew of his interest in the Japanese question on the Pacific coast. I am not going to discuss that question at this time. It is a vital question, a fundamental one, and Senators on the other side of the Chamber are familiar with the principle involved because of the great problem which has been the essential feature of the economic and social problems of the great section of the United States which they represent. The people of the Pacific coast, who are alert to the dangers of this question, are undertaking to stop in the beginning the growth of another problem of that kind in that part of our country.

Mr. McClatchy, in response to a request which I made of him that he give his attention to this question, and that the great influences in the State of California which I know are interested in the question of Japanese economic penetration direct their attention to it, wrote me the following letter. I ask that the Secretary read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE SACRAMENTO BEE,
San Francisco, Calif., February 24, 1923.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: Replying to your letter of February 14 making inquiry as to violation of the Federal law by Japanese fishermen in the southern part of this State:

This matter has repeatedly been called to the attention of the Attorney General's office in Washington, both by direct correspondence from California and by representations made through Representatives in Congress and United States Senators as well.

As an indication of what has been done in this matter, note inclosed copy of letter from Senator James D. Phelan of March 17, 1920, addressed to the Attorney General, calling his attention to the deliberate and frequent violations of section 4311 of the Revised Statutes by Japanese fishermen.

In the report of the State board of control of 1920, on page 106, you will find a brief statement of the manner in which the Japanese were at that time persistently violating the law.

In the brief prepared on behalf of the Japanese Exclusion League and presented to the Secretary of State at Washington, October, 1921, by the combined congressional delegation from California, at pages 60 to 61, you will find mention of this matter, with reference to a number of exhibits.

The excuse offered by the Department of Justice at one time was that there was no penalty provided for violation of the law. Another suggestion was that it was perhaps unwise to enforce the law because of possible injury to the canning interests. As a matter of fact, no attempt was made to enforce the law and no notice was given to the Japanese that they were violating the law. It is probable that such notice, even in the absence of a penalty provided by the statute, would have secured obedience to the Federal law.

Repeated appeals were made to the administration at Washington for action and protection of the fishing interests and against these Japanese. The Los Angeles newspapers, particularly the Los Angeles Examiner, exposed the situation in its columns, all of which went to the proper officials at Washington.

Finally a bill was introduced by Chairman GREENE, of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House, amending the statute and providing a penalty in this case. That, however, was a year and a half or two years ago, and nothing has been done with that bill in the way of pushing it, and repeated appeals to Chairman GREENE have been without avail, either because he could not or because he would not do anything in the matter.

The State of California, meeting with this lack of success in inducing the administration at Washington to enforce the laws on its statute books against alien fishermen, have sought in the State legislature of 1921 to pass a State law similar to the law now operating in Washington and also in Oregon, but it was defeated through the efforts of the canning interests. This bill, if it becomes a law, will prevent fishing only within the 3-mile limit. It will not be effective in preventing fishing by alien fishermen outside the 3-mile limit, nor prevent their bringing their catch into the harbor, unless the Federal statute, section 4311, is enforced by the Federal Government.

Those who are interested in this matter and familiar with the facts have views concerning the lack of action at Washington, where they have all necessary information as to the violation of the Federal statutes made and provided, which are unfit for publication.

You will find inclosed under separate cover a copy of the State board of control report, as well as a copy of the brief.

Sincerely,

V. S. MCCLATCHY,
Per M.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask leave in the same connection to print in the RECORD a letter from the former Senator from California, J. D. Phelan, referred to.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1920.

To the honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Department of Justice.

MY DEAR MR. PALMER: It has come to my attention that among the many other atrocities of the Japanese aliens in California they are guilty, in the fishing industry in American waters, of grossly violating United States statutes.

Section 4311, Revised Statutes, provides that only enrolled and licensed vessels shall be deemed vessels of the United States and entitled to the privileges of vessels employed in the fisheries. Section 4312 provides that for the enrollment and license of vessels the same qualifications shall exist as in the case of the registration of vessels. Section 4131, Revised Statutes, as amended, provides that no vessel shall enjoy the privileges of a vessel of the United States unless wholly owned by a citizen of the United States and commanded by a citizen of the United States.

It is therefore entirely clear that no vessel can engage in the fishing trade, being of 5 tons or over, without a license, and that a license will be only granted where the vessel is owned by citizens of the United States and the master and officers thereof are citizens of the United States.

On the face of things, therefore, the law of the United States is apparently being grossly violated, and I desire to request that you have this matter investigated at once, and if it is found upon a thorough investigation that there is circumvention of the law being practiced I desire to request that you prosecute the violators to the full extent of the law.

Yours very truly, JAMES D. PHELAN.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The report referred to in Mr. McClatchy's letter I will furnish for the RECORD later.

RECLASSIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I present the conference report on H. R. 8928, to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

On page 4 of the amendment, line 17, after the word "classes," insert the following: "In performing the foregoing duties, the board shall follow as nearly as practicable the classification made pursuant to the Executive order of October 24, 1921."

On page 7, line 15, after the word "thereof," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

On page 7, line 21, after the word "ratings," insert the following: ", to the next higher rate within the salary range of the grade."

On page 8, line 11, after the word "shall," strike out the following: "have powers of."

On page 8, line 12, strike out "revision over" and substitute the words "may revise"; and following the word "established" insert the words "or to be established."

On page 8, line 21, after the word "dismissal," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

On page 9, line 6, after the word "dismissals," insert the words "for inefficiency."

On page 10, beginning line 6, strike out everything following the word "board" to and including the semicolon in line 10.

On page 18, line 10, strike out everything after the word "work" to and including line 3, on page 20.

On page 20, strike out everything following the word "judgment," in line 11, to and including line 6, on page 22.

On page 22, strike out everything following the word "operations," in line 17, to and including line 9, on page 25.

On page 25, strike out everything following the word "difficulty," in line 21, to and including line 3, on page 28.

On page 28, strike out everything following the word "work," in line 16, to and including line 4, on page 31.

On page 31, strike out everything following the word "work" in line 20, to and including line 4, on page 34.

On page 34, strike out everything following the word "work" in line 17, to and including line 19, on page 36.

On page 47, line 4, strike out the following: "$2,940, $3,180, $3,420, and $3,660," and insert "$3,000, $3,100, $3,200, $3,300, $3,400, $3,500, and $3,600."

On page 47, strike out the remainder of section 13 beginning with line 5.

On page 47, strike out section 14 and insert the following:

"SEC. 14. That the estimates of the expenditures and appropriations set forth in the Budget to be transmitted by the President to Congress on the first day of the next ensuing regular session shall conform to the classification herein provided, and that the rates of salary in the compensation schedules shall not become effective until the first day of the fiscal year estimated for in such Budget."

THOMAS STERLING,
REED SMOOT,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
EUGENE BLACK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STERLING. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

RIO GRANDE RIVER BRIDGE, TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report from the Committee on Commerce and ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12378, granting the consent of Congress to maintain a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Citizens Bridge Co., a corporation, and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande River at or near the city of Del Rio, State of Texas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the authority hereby granted shall terminate and end on the 1st day of July, 1925, if within that time the Del Rio & Las Vacas Bridge Co., a copartnership organized and entered into under the laws of the State of Texas, shall construct and complete a bridge at or near said location in accordance with the authority given to said copartnership by the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico," approved July 1, 1922: Provided further, That nothing herein shall operate to extend the time within which said Del Rio & Las Vacas Bridge Co. are required by the act approved July 1, 1922, to begin and complete said bridge.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER, MINN.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill (H. R. 14428) granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak., which was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill (H. R. 14429) granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of an existing bridge across the Red River between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., which was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill (H. R. 14351) to authorize bridging the Ohio River at Moundsville, W. Va., which was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Marshall-Belmont Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation near the central portion of the city of Moundsville, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF REVENUE ACT OF 1921.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 1264, the bill (H. R. 13770) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be reported.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 13770) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gains and losses, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in explanation of my request I want to say not more than five sentences. The bill is intended to provide that deductions from income tax shall not exceed the rate of 12½ per cent on capital losses. Congress has already given to the taxpayer the privilege of limiting his tax to 12½ per cent on capital gains. The bill puts the same restriction on savings by capital losses. An investigation of 50 taxpayers' returns last year showed that more than $5,000,000 was lost to the Government in the taxes of those 50 persons alone, due to what is called in Wall Street slang "registering losses," which is in many cases a fraud on the Government.

The bill passed the House, was unanimously reported by the Finance Committee, and I do not believe there will be any objection to its passage by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Finance asked me to bring the bill up to-night if possible and I am very glad the Senator from Pennsylvania asked the Senate to take the course it has. I want to indorse every word the Senator from Pennsylvania has said in relation to the object of the bill.

In the act of 1921 there was a limitation upon capital profits of 12½ per cent. The result of the amendment has been that there have been more sales than there were before showing capital gains on sales of stock, but in the act of 1921 the capital loss was not changed as was the case with capital gains, so no matter what the capital loss is the taxpayer receives full credit for it upon his return. In other words, we will take an instance of the purchase of 5,000 shares of a given stock at $100 per share. Suppose the stock was sold at a profit of $100,000; under the act of 1921 the taxpayer pays a tax upon but 12½ per cent, or $12,500; but if there is a loss of $100,000, he would take full credit of $100,000, and not 12½ per cent as in the case of capital gains. The pending bill limits the taxpayer to a credit of but 12½ per cent on the capital loss, just the same as the act of 1921 limit of 12½ per cent on capital gain is in force to-day. It is estimated that it will save $100,000,000 a year in taxes to the Government alone for a few years to come.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not believe the bill ought to be taken up for consideration at this time. It is a very important measure. It has not been considered by the Finance Committee. It has not received the unanimous indorsement of the members of the committee. There has been no report from the Finance Committee regarding it. The bill came over here about two days ago and there was an attempt made to poll the committee. When the matter came to me I declined to sign the favorable report and at that time expressed my belief that the bill should not pass. It is a very important matter, and involves very much more than was indicated by either of the two distinguished Senators who have just been discussing it.

There is in the provision of the law itself a gross discrimination between those who have incomes above $32,000 a year and those who have incomes below that amount. When an income reaches the sum of $32,000 a year, that is the point where the average tax is 12½ per cent upon the total income after making allowance for exemption, after making allowance for the 4 per cent of normal tax and the varying percentages of surtax.

Under the present law the man who has an income under $32,000 gets absolutely no benefit of the limitation of 12½ per cent or a deduction on his income tax by reason of the capital loss. There is a gross discrimination. If a man has an income under $32,000 a year his taxes are not reduced. If he sells a piece of property and makes a gain, regardless of the percentage of that gain, the whole of it must be accounted for in his return and paid the rate precisely as if there were no modifications whatever. With the man having an income above $32,000 a year, if he makes a capital gain, then he can in no event be charged upon that capital gain in excess of 12½ per cent.

I have not given the bill careful study, but under the law we will say as it exists now it is provided that if there was a capital loss, the capital loss might be deducted from the income whether the income was great or small. That is the law, as I understand it now. The bill proposes to limit the allowance which may be made on account of capital loss to 12½ per cent of the capital loss. That means that if a man has an income under $32,000 a year, if he makes a capital gain, he must pay his taxes upon the full amount of it. If he makes a capital loss, under the provisions of the bill, he is only allowed 12½ per cent.

Another thing, Mr. President. I do not believe the matter of adjustment is fair. It may be. The reasons presented for the bill, if I understand, are that those having incomes above $32,000 a year are only taxed 12½ per cent upon their capital gain. Therefore, if a man makes a capital loss he ought not to be permitted to deduct more than 12½ per cent.

Of all the false and fallacious logic in the world, it seems to me that is an example of it. It may be that you may have a capital gain. You will have to pay but 12½ per cent on the capital gain. I may have the capital loss. I am permitted to deduct only 12½ per cent on the logic that inasmuch as you only pay 12½ per cent, I am entitled to a deduction of only 12½ per cent.

I submit this is no time to consider the bill. If the Treasury of the United States wants to save money, if it wants to collect just revenue, I think I can point out other means far better than this for bringing money into the Treasury. If the bill is to come up for consideration, I shall undertake to point out how that can be done. I hope to do it, not for the purpose of a filibuster, but for the purpose of consideration and to get the situation before this body and before the country, which would necessarily require some time.

Mr. SMOOT. Evidently the Senator has not carefully read the bill or he would not have made any such statement. I can not understand why the Senator from New Mexico should say now that he is not going to allow a bill to pass in the closing hours of this session which will mean $100,000,000 gain to the Treasury of the United States for at least a few years and never take a cent of extra tax out of the taxpayer whose income is less than $32,000 a year—not 1 cent—but which will take $100,000,000 a year out of the pockets of the taxpayers who in the past have been selling stocks at a loss and claiming the whole amount of the loss from the stocks, and upon the other hand paying only the 12½ per cent upon any gains that they might make.

Congress decided in 1921 that it was for the best interests of the country that on capital gain the amount of tax should not be more than 12½ per cent. I do not want to take the time of the Senate now to go over that ground and explain why that was done, because Congress decided that question after debate at the time of the enactment of the law.

Mr. President, when that law was enacted we failed to limit the amount that a taxpayer could deduct from his income on capital loss. If he makes from capital gains $100,000 and his capital loss is but $12,500, that taxpayer does not pay a cent of money into the Treasury of the United States. I can not conceive and had no thought of anyone objecting to the bill. It passed the House of Representatives without discussion. It was only necessary to call the attention of the House to the existing law, and it was agreed that the bill ought to be passed, and passed at this session, so that we can make the taxpayers, reaping the benefit of hundreds of millions of dollars a year from capital losses, as I have described, pay into the Treasury of the United States what they ought to pay.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I doubt if I understood the Senator from Utah. Did he say that if a man under the present law makes $100,000 on one deal and loses $100,000 on another deal he does not pay any income tax at all?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but if the 12½ per cent of capital gain amounts to $100,000, which would be a gain of $800,000, all he would pay on that would be $100,000 under the existing law.

Mr. STANLEY. If he made $800,000?

Mr. SMOOT. If he made a capital gain of $800,000, the tax would be on 12½ per cent of the $800,000, or $100,000; but if he lost $100,000 he would receive credit for the full $100,000.

Mr. STANLEY. On one deal or more and made $700,000 on another?

Mr. SMOOT. No; if he lost $100,000 only, that would offset his gain of $800,000. I say it is not fair to the Government of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Is the Senator from New Mexico correct when he states that the bill discriminates between the man who has an income of $32,000 and the man who has a higher income?

Mr. SMOOT. No; because the fact that a man who has the $32,000 income is not affected. Whether he has a loss of $32,000 or a loss of $10,000 or a loss of $1,000, he is not affected because of the fact that up to $32,000 he is not taxed above 12½ per cent. He is entitled to that; but if he has a capital loss of more than $32,000 then he begins to gain according to the amount of the gain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Assume that a man who has an income of $30,000 a year—which, of course, is below $32,000—has a loss of $50,000, under this proposed law what is he allowed to deduct?

Mr. SMOOT. He would not pay any tax at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is he allowed to deduct if he has such a loss?

Mr. SMOOT. Under existing law?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. He would be allowed to deduct 12½ per cent of the $50,000, which would be $6,250.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, take the man who has an income of $40,000 who has a loss of $50,000, what is he allowed to deduct?

Mr. SMOOT. He is allowed to deduct 12½ per cent of $50,000, or $6,250.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that, regardless of the size of a man's income, he can always deduct 12½ per cent of whatever his loss may be?

Mr. SMOOT. He may deduct 12½ per cent of his losses; and he then is only charged 12½ per cent of his capital gain; so the credit is exactly the same as the loss; but under existing law if he has a capital gain of $40,000 he makes his return as a gain of 12½ per cent of $40,000, which is $5,000; but if he has a loss of $40,000 he takes the whole $40,000 off.

Mr. SMITH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. SMITH. Unanimous consent was asked to consider the bill and objection was made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was objection.

Mr. SMITH. Then a motion was made to take the bill up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was.

Mr. SMITH. Was the motion put that we should take up the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not; the motion is still under debate.

Mr. SMITH. Senators, then, are debating the bill rather than the motion?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], as he has stated that he desires to study the bill, why not let the bill be taken up and made the unfinished business and take it up in the morning? Then, in the meantime, the Senator can study the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That proposal was made to me by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and I think that it is a very proper way to dispose of the matter.

I wish to say, however, in this connection, that owing to the confusion in the Chamber I was not able to hear the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] discuss the bill, and I hope my silence will not be taken to be an acquiescence in what he has stated or the arguments he has presented. They may have been all right, so far as I know, but owing to the confusion in the Chamber I was unable to hear what the Senator was saying.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, I desire to say that if my request is agreed to I should like to have——

Mr. McNARY. I have not agreed to it. If the bill be made the unfinished business in the morning, certainly there will be two hours gone. It will lead to interminable debate.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from New Mexico in the meantime comes to a different conclusion, it may take but a little time.

Mr. McNARY. If the time for the consideration of the bill be limited to 15 minutes, I shall agree to that; otherwise there will be discussion here for the entire morning, and I shall object to the request.

Mr. CURTIS. It is the intention to ask if the bill be made the unfinished business that we devote an hour to unobjected House bills on the calendar.

Mr. KING. When?

Mr. MOSES. Whether those bills be on the calendar or on the table or reported?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; that we devote an hour to the consideration of unobjected House bills, whether they be on the calendar or on the desk.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator from Kansas make the request for two hours?

Mr. CURTIS. I shall be glad to make it for two hours.

Mr. ROBINSON. I presume there will be no objection to considering Senate resolutions as well as House joint resolutions?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not, except as to those which are objected to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, there are a number of bills which have passed the other House, and a number of Senators are anxious to get those measures through. They will not be objected to, and I hope there will be no agreement here to foreclose any Senator from presenting a bill for consideration to which there will be no objection at all from any one. I will ask the Senate not to agree to fix this bill as the unfinished business until we have had a chance to dispose of those measures to which no objection may be urged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KING. Let it be stated, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have it stated. We could not hear it over here.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the pending motion is voted upon to make House bill 13770 the unfinished business, the Senate shall proceed for two hours with the consideration of unobjected House bills and resolutions, both Senate and House, whether they are on the calendar or shall have been reported.

Mr. HEFLIN. And the bills which are objected to will go over?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; if they are objected to they will go over.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that is a very good arrangement, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, in view of what has transpired here this afternoon, I think it is my duty to make a statement in justice to the Senate and to myself. So if the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into I shall ask the floor for the purpose of making a statement which I think is due to me and my colleagues in the Senate, in view of the course of events here this evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one moment.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, before entering into that agreement, I desire to say to the Senate that I have before me two House omnibus pension bills, which embrace altogether some eleven hundred private pension bills, including bills introduced by practically every Member of the Senate which have been added as amendments to the House bill. These bills ought to be acted upon.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. BURSUM. They can not be acted upon without objection. They can only be acted upon by motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator must realize that the bills can not pass if they are objected to. The hour now is practically 12.30 Sunday morning, and no bill to which serious objection is interposed can be passed.

Mr. BURSUM. I do not think the objection will be serious. I only know of one Senator who objects to the bills.

Mr. ROBINSON. But one Senator can do a great deal, as has been demonstrated this evening, so far as the business of the Senate is concerned.

Mr. BURSUM. The bills to which I have referred would not consume much time.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in order to save time, I am going to object to the bills referred to by the Senator from New Mexico, and if they are taken up by motion I will consume some time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, under the proposed agreement there can be no motion made to take up a bill. The only thing we are going to do is to consider bills that are not objected to. If Senators are going to make motions to take up bills when one Senator objects we might just as well break up that arrangement right now. The agreement has not been made as yet, and there is no use to permit it to be made unless we are going to consider only bills that are unobjected to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the only proposal pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. If they are objected to they go over. I am willing to enter into that kind of an agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to entering into the unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. BURSUM. I want to have a motion put now, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a motion pending.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire simply to understand the proposal in reference to taking up unobjected bills. If the unanimous-consent agreement shall be entered into, as I think it ought to be, as I understand it, it will apply only to to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will apply for two hours to-night.

Mr. LODGE. And it does not touch the session of the Senate beyond that. I say that because in the morning we must have an executive session. It will not take long, but we must have one. I do not object to the agreement.

Mr. SMITH. As I understand, the unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 13770) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to capital gain and losses, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

COMPENSATION OF OFFICIALS IN CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4245) to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922 and all other customs revenue laws, which was, on page 4, to strike out lines 23 and 24, and lines 1 to 3, inclusive, on page 5, and insert:

SEC. 7. That section 1 of the act entitled "An act fixing the compensation of certain officials in the customs service, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, is repealed. Except in the case of laborers, no compensation fixed under this act shall be greater than 30 per cent in excess of the limitations of existing law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives. The amendment adopted by the House is restrictive in that it limits increases in compensation to 30 per cent of the customs employees, with the exception of laborers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 287) creating the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining to the fact that joint resolution No. 287 has been handed down.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. ODDIE, and Mr. PITTMAN as conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE LEGISLATIVE SITUATION.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, for fear there may be some misunderstanding about the matter that agitated us in the early part of the evening, I wish to make a statement to my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber.

I desire to testify to the fact——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment? I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I have no desire at all to interrupt or interfere with the Senator's statement, but I should like to know whether the time consumed by the Senator is to come out of the two hours which by unanimous consent has been given to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, when the measure, the merits of which I need not at this late hour discuss, came before the committee of the Senate it was unanimously reported by the committee; and when it came before the Senate this body, fully appreciating the gravity of the situation that confronts one of the greatest industries, both in the form of production and manufacture, in this country, and appreciating the emergency that existed, passed that joint resolution unanimously and sent it to the other body of Congress.

Mr. President, I have every reason to know that both on the other side and on this side the support that that measure got was sincere. The unfortunate situation in which it found itself in another body does not in any way reflect upon this body. I have every reason to believe that a majority of the other body appreciated the gravity of the situation as well as this body. I shall not criticize the rules of that body. The responsibility for the defeat of the measure, if it shall be defeated, rests entirely with those who assumed that responsibility.

I deplore the fact that the joint resolution could not have come up on its merits and have been voted upon. The reason why the action was taken that has been taken was because I myself was called over to the House and went before the Rules Committee after the joint resolution had gotten into a parliamentary snarl, and it was necessary then to have a special rule. I went before the Rules Committee, composed of both Republicans and Democrats, and unanimously they reported a rule which, under the rules of the House, if the Member holding the rule was recognized, would insure its having an opportunity to be voted upon. A promise was made that immediately after a certain bill had been passed upon by the House that measure should have an opportunity to be voted upon. That was denied.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, he was——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has asked me a question. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator means that it was denied a vote, does he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator charged that faith was broken. That was not denied. A vote was denied. I want the Senator to make that clear.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will permit me, I shall be through in just a moment.

Mr. BURSUM. I just wanted to ask a question. As I understand, the reason for the opposition here was on account of the House refusing to give a vote on the bill.

Mr. SMITH. That is right.

Mr. BURSUM. I have here two pension bills on which this House is refusing to give a vote.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as a matter of course, it is competent for this House to take such procedure as it sees fit. I wanted to say to my colleagues, both on the other side and on this side, that I feel, on behalf of those whom I represent, a profound sense of obligation for the loyal manner in which they have supported me in this matter. I also have the sympathy of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of Agriculture, which increases the responsibility upon those in another body who saw fit arbitrarily to deny the people of this country the benefit that might accrue from that bill.

I thought that I owed my colleagues this much, and I have stated the sentiment both on the other side of the Chamber and on this side of the Chamber. No blame can attach to them.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14222) to amend the trading with the enemy act, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, and Mr. LEA of California were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 287) creating the joint commission of gold and silver inquiry, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4637) for the relief of certain disbursing agents under the Department of Commerce, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 456. Joint resolution authorizing the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to appoint a subcommittee, to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture, to join with a like committee of five heretofore appointed by the Senate to investigate problems relating to reforestation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 13751.

Mr. LODGE. Let us go on with the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Why, Mr. President, we have a unanimous-consent agreement which I hope will be carried out.

Mr. LODGE. We have a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the unanimous-consent agreement to be that first of all House bills, whether reported or on the calendar or on the table, shall be taken up.

Mr. LODGE. But they have to be taken up in their order on the calendar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They would not be taken up in their order if those on the table shall be taken up first.

Mr. LODGE. They are supposed to come after those on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I did not so understand it, either.

Mr. LODGE. Then, if no order is to be preserved, it will be a scramble for everybody to get in.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, my understanding of the unanimous-consent agreement is that any bill on the calendar or on the table may be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any House bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. This is a House bill.

Mr. KING. Any unobjected House bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? It is perfectly obvious that any such proposal as that is going to turn this place into a bear garden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will begin with the House bills upon the calendar and report them to the Senate in order.

Mr. LODGE. That is my understanding of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of James T. Farrill was announced as first in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8533) for the relief of Joe T. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let that go over.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who made that objection will not make it.

Mr. COUZENS. It is already made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon his objection?

Mr. COUZENS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7921) granting six months' pay to Alice P. Dewey was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRELD. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HARRELD. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Presdent, I should like to have an understanding about the order. Were we to begin, under the unanimous-consent agreement, where we left off, or at the beginning of the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where we left off.

Mr. STERLING. I did not so understand the unanimous-consent agreement. I understood that it was general with reference to House bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Where we left off.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if that was the proposition. I understood that it was for the consideration of House bills. Let us have the agreement stated, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in all the unanimous-consent agreements proposed to-day, except the last one, I put in "commencing where we left off," but I forgot to do it in the last request I made. I said "House bills," but I forgot to say "commencing where we left off."

Mr. STERLING. That is right, and I so understood. Mr. President, I suggest that we begin at the beginning for House bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into without the provision that the Senate should begin with the call of the calendar where it was left off, the Secretary will begin the call of the calendar at House bill 8331.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I think I heard the request. The request embraced all House bills on the calendar, and all House bills on the Vice President's table. That was the proposition.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRELD. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRELD and Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7761) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to proceedings in contested-election cases, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. HEFLIN. Let that go over.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I trust there will be no objection to House bill 7761. It has to do only with the House. It would seem that courtesy ought to let them fix their own qualifications with regard to House contests. It makes three or four little changes in the procedure with reference to contests in the House of Representatives. It has nothing to do with the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. The bill is objected to, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection insisted upon?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6134) for relief of estate of Anne C. Shymer, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRELD and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 12368) to abolish the inspection districts of Apalachicola, Fla., and Burlington, Vt., and the office of one supervising inspector, Steamboat Inspection Service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13880) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL TERMINAL FACILITIES FOR FREIGHT TRAFFIC.

The bill (H. R. 6650) providing additional terminal facilities in square east of 710 and square 712, in the District of Columbia, for freight traffic, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "railroad," to strike out "in the square east of square 710 and in square 712"; on line 11, after the word "charge," to strike out "which shall include the return of the empty car for every car so switched to said tracks"; on page 2, line 8, after the word "delivery," to strike out "in and upon said square east of 710 and in and upon square 712," and to insert "as described in section 1 hereof," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any railroad company now or hereafter having tracks in the District of Columbia, or operating over the line of any other railroad in the District of Columbia, shall have the right to have freight transported by it delivered upon the tracks of any other railroad in the District of Columbia upon the payment to the railroad whose tracks are used for such purpose of a reasonable switching charge, and if the parties be unable to agree upon such charges, then the same shall be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the petition of any party in interest.

SEC. 2. That all railroads described in section 1 of this act be, and they are hereby, required to accept shipments of freight for delivery as described in section 1 hereof.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws that are in conflict with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing additional terminal facilities in the District of Columbia for freight traffic."

STANDARD FOR BUTTER.

The bill (H. R. 12053) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of this bill. The Senator who has heretofore objected to it—it has been before the Senate now about three times, I believe—has withdrawn his objection, and there is no objection to the bill. It is recommended——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is the bill?

Mr. STERLING. The standard butter bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the food and drug act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 768), "butter" shall be understood to mean the food product usually known as butter, and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter, and containing not less than 80 per cent by weight of milk fat, all tolerances having been allowed for.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 5020) to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell at public or private sale, at a price not less than the true value of the abutting property based on the assessment, all that part of the subdivision of Granby acquired by the commissioners of primary schools of Washington County by deed from George H. Baer and wife dated the 25th day of June, in the year 1869, excepting that part of said land lying within the lines of Twentieth and Jackson Streets as recorded in book 52, page 174, of the records of the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, the land herein authorized to be so conveyed being assessed among the records of the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia as parcel 156, sub 38, and parcel 156, sub 39, reserving, however, so much of said land as is in the judgment of said commissioners necessary for alley purposes, the portion of land so reserved not to be included in said sale: Provided, That the entire proceeds of such sale by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5027) to amend an act approved February 28, 1899, entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10819) relating to the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of James T. Farrill was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOE T. WHITE.

The bill (H. R. 8533) for the relief of Joe T. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let that go over.

Mr. HARRELD. The bill is recommended by the Post Office Department. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. The Post Office Department recommends that the man be reimbursed for money that he spent. The bill passed the House, and it is here with a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims. The matter will have to be gone over again if it is not passed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama maintain his objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joe T. White, late postmaster at Lawton, Okla., the sum of $920.83, as a reimbursement for extraordinary expenses incurred by the opening and conduct of said office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE P. DEWEY.

The bill (H. R. 7921) granting six months' pay to Alice P. Dewey was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alice P. Dewey, widow of Rupert C. Dewey, late lieutenant colonel, United States Marine Corps, is hereby allowed an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Rupert C. Dewey was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 2. That the payment of the amount of money hereby allowed and authorized to be paid to said Alice P. Dewey is authorized to be made from the appropriations for beneficiaries of officers who die while on the active list of the Marine Corps.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD F. DUNNE, JR.

The bill (H. R. 9631) for the relief of Edward F. Dunne, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $880.09, or so much thereof as is necessary, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of Labor to reimburse Edward F. Dunne, jr., the principal and costs actually paid by him on the bond which he furnished in 1911 in the case of the Chinaman Toy Dip, after deducting from that sum the additional expense incurred by the United States incident to handling deportation proceedings the second time against said Chinaman and the additional expense of deporting him from Philadelphia instead of Chicago.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD ANDREWS.

The bill (H. R. 8871) for the relief of Richard Andrews was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. DIAL. I withhold it.

Mr. CALDER. The record shows that this man was run over by a truck in the streets of New York and that he lost two fingers as a result of it. The chauffeur of the mail auto truck which ran over him was punished for assault. I notice on the second page of the report that Postmaster General Work recommends the payment of the damages. If there is any accident for which damage should be collectible, it seems to me this is one. The man who ran over him was indicted for assault.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection maintained?

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MRS. VINCENZA DIMINICO.

The bill (H. R. 297) for the relief of Mrs. Vincenza Diminico was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mrs. Vincenza Diminico, of East Boston, Mass., for injuries resulting from the accidental discharge of a machine gun, the property of the War Department, being demonstrated, for recruiting purposes, by a detachment of United States troops at East Boston, Mass., on July 23, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB DIETCH.

The bill (H. R. 10847) for the relief of Jacob Dietch was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jacob Dietch, of Chester, Pa., the sum of $739.10 for medical attention and burial expenses of his minor son, Samuel Dietch, who was fatally injured when struck by fragments of an overcharged shell during a demonstration at the Pennsylvania Military College, Chester, Pa., by the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, operating in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Military College on the night of June 13, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTELLA W. DOUGHERTY.

The bill (H. R. 10848) for the relief of Estella W. Dougherty, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Estella W. Dougherty, of Chester, Pa., the sum of $700, for medical attention and for expenses incurred by her incident to being struck and injured by fragments of an overcharged shell during a demonstration at the Pennsylvania Military College, Chester, Pa., by the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, operating in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Military College on the night of June 13, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT E. SHENTON.

The bill (H. R. 7027) for the relief of Herbert E. Shenton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $462.39 to Herbert E.

Shenton in full compensation against the Government for injuries sustained by an Army truck at Baltimore, Md., May 12, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELDREDGE & MASON, MALONE, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 10022) for the relief of Eldredge & Mason, of Malone, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eldredge & Mason, of Malone, N. Y., the sum of $473.25, erroneously paid into the Treasury of the United States, which was the proceeds of a marshal's sale of any automobile which was seized by the Federal authorities for a violation of the Volstead Act and upon which automobile Eldredge & Mason held a lien.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The bill (H. R. 11528) to allow credits in the accounts of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 4, to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, as follows: "Eleventh. Lieut. Col. (now Col.) Herbert Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, credit in the sum of $45.85, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1912 and 1914," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of the following-named disbursing officers of the Army of the United States, to allow credit in the sums herein stated now standing as disallowances in said accounts on the books of the General Accounting office:

First. Brig. Gen. Frederick V. Abbot, Corps of Engineers (now colonel, retired), credit in the sum of $509, now disallowed against him, covering expenses for board and lodging paid by him in excess of $1 per day to civilian employees of the Engineer Department, at Tobyhanna, Pa., engaged on work done under urgent military necessity, which required immediate action to secure and place in the field the necessary forces to survey a certain territory and prepare maps and plans of same in order to provide sites for encamping and training troops.

Second. Maj. (now Col.) George G. Bailey, Quartermaster Corps, credit in the sum of $137.09, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1909 and 1910.

Third. First Lieut. Joseph H. Barnard, Fifth Cavalry (now major, Quartermaster Corps), credit in the sum of $4,555.06, now disallowed against him, which he expended for supplies furnished a students' military camp at Ludington, Mich., July, 1914.

Fourth. Maj. John E. Baxter, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel, retired), credit in the sum of $18.96, now disallowed against him, which he expended during the period from May, 1908, to March, 1909.

Fifth. Brig. Gen. Theodore A. Bingham, Corps of Engineers (now brigadier general, retired), credit in the sum of $274, now disallowed against him, covering expenses for board and lodging paid by him in excess of $1 per day to civilian employees of the Engineer Department at Tobyhanna, Pa., engaged on work done under urgent military necessity which required immediate action to secure and place in the field the necessary forces to survey a certain territory and prepare maps and plans of same in order to provide sites for encamping and training troops.

Sixth. Maj. (now Lieut. Col.) Paul S. Bond, Corps of Engineers, credit in the sum of $287.04, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1915.

Seventh. Maj. Albert J. Bowley, Field Artillery (now brigadier general), credit in the sum of $301.27, now disallowed against him, which he expended during the period from July 1, 1912, to June 30, 1914, while serving as military attaché at Peking, China.

Eighth. Capt. Laurence C. Brown, Artillery Corps (now colonel, Coast Artillery Corps), credit in the sum of $72, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1910.

Ninth. Capt. Preston Brown, Eighth Infantry (now brigadier general), credit in the sum of $95.80, now disallowed against him, which he expended for supplies furnished a students' military camp at Asheville, N. C., July, 1914.

Tenth. Capt. Frederick W. Coleman, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel, Finance Department), credit in the sum of $12.90, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1916.

Twelfth. Lieut. Col. Thomas G. Hanson, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel, retired), credit in the sum of $181.26, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1915.

Thirteenth. Maj. (now Col.) Charles Keller, Corps of Engineers, credit in the sum of $6.75, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1912.

Fourteenth. Lieut. Col. Isaac W. Littell, Quartermaster Corps (now brigadier general, retired), credit in the sum of $98.65, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1909.

Fifteenth. Lieut. Col. T. Bentley Mott, Field Artillery (now colonel, retired), credit in the sum of $55.33, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1911 while serving as military attaché, American Embassy, Paris.

Sixteenth. Capt. Terence E. Murphy, Coast Artillery Corps (now lieutenant colonel, retired), credit in the sum of $15.98, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1915.

Seventeenth. Maj. Willard D. Newbill, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel, Field Artillery), credit in the sum of $40.19, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1915.

Eighteenth. Maj. (now Col.) Henry L. Newbold, Field Artillery, credit in the sum of $2,476.98, now disallowed against him, $319.37 of which he expended in 1911 and the remaining $2,157.61 in 1917, while serving as military attaché at Constantinople, Turkey.

Nineteenth. Maj. James E. Normoyle, Quartermaster Corps (now deceased), credit in the sum of $5, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1918.

Twentieth. Maj. Harry L. Pettus, Quartermaster Corps (now deceased), credit in the sum of $1,545, now disallowed against him, which he expended for services and materials in cutting and setting one granite memorial tablet in the Army War College, Washington, D. C., which work was authorized by the Secretary of War under date of June 20, 1911.

Twenty-first. First Lieut. Walter C. Short, Sixteenth Infantry (now major of Infantry), credit in the sum of $531, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1916, for the purchase of two motor cycles required for the efficient and economical management of a school of musketry at Fort Sill, Okla.

Twenty-second. Capt. (now Col.) David L. Stone, Infantry, credit in the sum of $1,191, now disallowed against him, which he expended in good faith, but in excess of the amount authorized by law, in the construction of four buildings at Fort Sill, Okla., in 1911.

Twenty-third. Captain Arthur P. Watts, Quartermaster Corps (now lieutenant colonel of Infantry), credit in the sum of $660.11, which he expended in 1913 and 1914 for electric current furnished houses leased for officers at Fort Bliss, Tex.

Twenty-fourth. Capt. (now Col.) Briant H. Wells, Infantry, credit in the sum of $171, now disallowed against him, which he expended in September and October, 1912, for the hire of transportation for the use of certain officers while engaged in military map work.

Twenty-fifth. Capt. Orrin R. Wolfe, Quartermaster Corps (now colonel of Infantry), credit in the sum of $40, now disallowed against him, which he expended in 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, after line 16, to insert the following:

That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Lieut. Col. Joseph S. Hardin, Finance Department, the sum of $6,779.96, and in the accounts of Capt. P. A. Scholl, Finance Department, the sum of $202.02, which amounts represent public funds which were stolen by a former employee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 11397) to authorize appropriations for the relief of certain officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT E. KELLEY POST, NO. 70, AMERICAN LEGION.

The bill (H. R. 6577) authorizing the conveyance of certain land in the State of South Dakota to the Robert E. Kelley Post, No. 70, American Legion, South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "Seventy-nine" and insert in lieu thereof "Seventy," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer by deed, to be duly executed by him to the Robert E. Kelley Post, No. 70, American Legion, South Dakota, the following-described land: The north half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107 north, range 48 west of the fifth principal meridian in Moody County, S. Dak., more particularly described as beginning at a point 181½ feet north of a point 896 feet east of the southwest corner of said section, thence north 181½ feet, thence east 120 feet, thence south 181½ feet, thence west 120 feet to the place of beginning, upon payment of the appraised value of said lot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act authorizing the conveyance of certain land in the State of South Dakota to the Robert E. Kelley Post, No. 70, American Legion, South Dakota.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12019) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROSE CITY COTTON OIL MILL.

The resolution (S. Res. 448) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 4479) for the relief of Rose City Cotton Oil Mill and others was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4479) entitled "A bill for the relief of Rose City Cotton Oil Mill and others," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

TRAFFIC CONDITIONS IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

The resolution (S. Res. 419) providing for an investigation of traffic conditions in Washington, D. C., and of accidents resulting therefrom, and better measures for protecting the public against injury and damage arising from negligence, was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate traffic conditions in the city of Washington, particularly with reference to accidents and damages to persons and property, and the most reliable and practicable means and measures for protecting the public from danger and injury arising from negligence and other causes of accident and injury in traffic. Said committee or subcommittee shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate within 30 days.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "Senate," to strike out "within 30 days" and insert "in the month of December."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ALLIE MELINDA OUTTERSIDE.

The bill (H. R. 4653) for the relief of Allie Melinda Outterside was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. A similar bill has been passed for the relief of Mrs. Vincenza Dominico, and similar bills were passed on other occasions. I see no reason why a discrimination should be made.

Mr. DIAL. The same kind of bills?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Practically the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. DIAL. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Allie Melinda Outterside, widow, of the county of Harris and the State of Texas, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the death of her husband, T. R. Outterside, who was killed on the 26th day of September, 1918, at Texas City, Tex., by an airplane which was being operated by an officer of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK STATE FAIR COMMISSION.

The bill (H. R. 13903) for the relief of the New York State Fair Commission was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,098.25 to the New York State Fair Commission in full settlement against the Government for damages to property and buildings on the State fair grounds, Syracuse, N. Y., by United States troops during the mobilization in 1917, being the amount heretofore duly ascertained and awarded by the War Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK G. EMMES.

The bill (H. R. 1227) for the relief of Frank G. Emmes was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank G. Emmes the sum of $3,387, in full settlement for damages suffered by reason of being shot by a machine gun accidentally discharged on one of the naval boats of the Government, at that time used as a patrol boat in the harbor of Waukegan, Ill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE LOEBER.

The bill (H. R. 12584) for the relief of Alice Loeber, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Alice Loeber, of St. Helena, Calif., on account of the death of her daughter, Grova Loeber, who was killed June 29, 1922, in Stanislaus National Forest, Calif., by a falling tree stump, or snag, which had been dislodged by blast set off by employees of the Forest Service who were reconstructing the road upon which she was traveling.

Passed the House of Representatives February 20, 1923.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 6601) for the relief of the Great Lakes Engineering Works was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HAROLD L. M'KINLEY.

The bill (H. R. 8733) for the relief of Harold L. McKinley was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Harold L. McKinley, of St. Ansgar, Mitchell County, Iowa, $634.60, in full compensation for his claim for expenses incurred as a result of sickness while serving in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12315) for the relief of the owners of the schooner T. K. Bentley was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT TO CHINESE GOVERNMENT FOR DAMAGE TO VESSEL.

The bill (H. R. 8221) for the relief of the Chinese Government was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Chinese Government, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,413.79 for damages resulting from the sinking of a Chinese junk by the U. S. S. Palos in the Yangtse River, China, on October 19, 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ANDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 9160) for the relief of John Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Anderson, former postmaster at Sandborn, Knox County, Ind., the sum of $358.90, the same being the amount of money and stamps stolen from the post office at Sandborn, Knox County, Ind., on the night of February 18, 1907, by persons unknown.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMONWEALTH & DOMINION LINE (LTD.).

The bill (H. R. 8051) for the relief of the Commonwealth & Dominion Line (Ltd.), owner of the British steamship Port Phillip, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Commonwealth & Dominion Line (Ltd.), owner of the British steamer Port Phillip, against the United States for damages and loss alleged to have been caused by the collision of said vessel with the U. S. steam collier Proteus in New York Harbor on October 16, 1918, may be sued for by the said owner of the British steamer Port Phillip in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit to the extent only of such damages suffered other than claims for demurrage to said vessel and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the British steamer Port Phillip or against said owner in favor of the United States, upon the sames principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE IN DUQUOIN, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 14183) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a portion of the Federal building site in the city of Duquoin, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to sell to the Christian Church of Duquoin, Ill., that portion of the Federal building site in said city, fronting 30 feet on the eastern boundary of said site, extending eastwardly of that width 100 feet along the entire northern boundary of said church property, at such time and upon such terms, but at not less than the appraised value determined by him, as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States; to convey the land to said Christian Church by the usual quitclaim deed; and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt derived from the sale of public property.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDARD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR GRAIN.

The bill (H. R. 7103) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill and corn-mill products, namely, flours, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. HARRELD. I hope the Senator who made the objection will not urge it, because this same bill was passed in the House at the last session and died in the Senate. Everybody wants to have the bill passed.

Mr. KING. I think it ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by still another Senator, and the bill will be passed over.

CHARLES L. M'CULLEY.

The bill (H. R. 1263) for the relief of Charles L. McCulley was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. This bill makes no appropriation, Mr. President. It merely gives a privilege to this old and faithful servant of the Government to enter a sailors' home. It is a worthy, meritorious matter approved by everybody who is familiar with the simple facts. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. No back pay is involved, and no allowance of any kind. It is simply to let this man enter a sailors' home.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator about the bill? I observe in the bill a provision for an honorable discharge which would imply that there had been a desertion from the Navy and that he is seeking to remove the charge of desertion and obtain an honorable discharge.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator made a mistake in that statement. There is nothing of the kind in the bill. This man is an old man 73 years of age, and he wants his discharge in order that he may get into a sailors' home.

Mr. KING. He would not need legislation. The Navy Department has authority. If that is the only purpose of it, although the Navy Department has authority, I have no objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Charles L. McCulley, also known as Charles L. McCullough, late of the United States Navy, on the muster rolls of the Navy Department and grant him an honorable discharge, thereby giving him the right of membership in a soldiers' home: Provided, That no back pay, allowances, or other emoluments shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES J. MEEHAN.

The bill (H. R. 11792) for the relief of James J. Meehan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That James J. Meehan, who, while serving as an ensign, United States Naval Reserve Force, was found by a naval retiring board to be permanently incapacitated for active service by reason of physical disability incurred in the line of duty as the result of an incident of the service, but not in time of war, shall be eligible for retirement as if his physical disability was incurred in time of war; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to place him upon the retired list with three-fourths pay of the grade held by him at the time such physical disability was incurred.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said:

Mr. President, I desire to interpose a motion for the reconsideration of Calendar No. 1227, the bill (H. R. 11792) for the relief of James J. Meehan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate reconsider the action whereby the bill, which he has stated, was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this officer was injured while in the discharge of his duty on May 8, 1921, before the law was passed, which prevented reserve officers where injured after the war was over receiving the benefits of the law. This man failed to file notice of his injury for a time. The Navy Department have recommended it. It is interesting to note that the man served 11 years in the regular Navy and went from the regular Navy to accept service in the reserve corps.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say to the Senator from New York that if he will pursue in this case the policy that has been pursued by the Senate in certain other cases and provide an amendment as in those cases, I shall have no objection. The bill may go over temporarily if the Senator cares to offer an amendment providing a pension instead of putting the man upon the retired list, and I shall have no objection to that course. The Senate debated the matter at considerable length a few days ago. It involves the principle of whether or not a man incapacitated, however slightly it may be, for military service, shall be put upon the retired list to draw three-quarters' pay for the balance of his life. There ought to be a pension provided which should be adjusted to the nature of the extent of the injury. I shall have to object to the bill.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator understood the case, that the man was in the regular Navy for 11 years, I do not believe he would object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But he was not injured in time of war. There is no law under which he is entitled to go on the retired list. Long ago the Congress used to put upon the retired list men of the temporary and reserve forces injured in time of war. That policy has been concluded by a subsequent act of Congress limiting the time within which applications may be presented. The entire policy has been abandoned as a vicious one.

Mr. CALDER. This seemed to be so out of the usual, such an extraordinary case, because of his long service in the Navy, that I thought at the time the Senator would not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made and the bill goes over.

JOSEPHINE H. BARIN.

The bill (H. R. 514) authorizing the payment of an amount equal to six months' pay to Josephine H. Barin was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to Josephine H. Barin, mother of Lieut. Louis T. Barin, late of the United States Naval Reserve Force, who was killed in an airplane accident at San Diego, Calif., while on active duty on the 12th day of June, 1920, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by that officer at the day of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in connection with Calendar No. 1230, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 40) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, I ask unanimous consent that a certain table contained in the hearings held before the committee and a certain short article which I have marked in the hearings may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Number of legislative votes required to amend the United States Constitution.

State.	Members of senate.	Majority in senate.	Members of house.	Majority in house.
Alabama	35	18	106	54
Arizona	19	10	35	18
Arkansas	35	18	100	51
California	40	21	80	41
Colorado	35	18	60	31
Delaware	17	9	35	18

Wisconsin	33	17	100	51
Wyoming	27	14	57	29
Total	1,290	673	3,229	1,643

That is, 673 State senators and 1,643 State representatives, or 2,316 legislators in all, can ratify a Federal amendment, with all members of 36 legislatures present and voting.

The figures for the remaining 12 States are shown in the following table:

State.	Members of senate.	Majority in senate.	Members of house.	Majority in house.
Connecticut	35	18	258	130
Georgia	44	23	189	95
Illinois	51	26	152	72

36 other States	1,290	673	3,229	1,643
Total, 48 States	1,760	917	5,643	2,855
	5,643
Total members of 48 State legislatures	7,403

The 2,316 legislators in 36 States who can amend the Federal Constitution amount to less than 32 per cent (31.5) of the total number of legislators, 7,403, in 48 States.

To block repeal of any amendment requires only 167 votes in the 13 State Senates of Arizona, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming. (See table above, senate majorities.)

THE "NEW BILL OF RIGHTS" AMENDMENT.

[Reprinted from the Virginia Law Review.]

The distinguished Senator from New York, JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., and the able Representative from Tennessee, FINIS J. GARRETT, believers in our "indestructible Federal Union of indestructible States," have, respectively, introduced in the Senate as Joint Resolution No. 40 and in the House as Joint Resolution No. 69 the following proposed amendment to Article V of the Federal Constitution:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by three-fourths of the several States through their legislatures or conventions, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress or the convention: Provided, That the members of at least one house in each of the legislatures which may ratify shall be elected after such amendments have been proposed; that any State may require that ratification by its legislature be subject to confirmation by popular vote; and that, until three-fourths of the States have ratified or more than one-fourth of the States have rejected or defeated a proposed amendment, any State may change its vote: And provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

The necessity for this proposal is in part political and in part legal. The political cause arises from the startling action by our "legislative amending agents" in ratifying the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments. The legal cause arises from the holdings by the Supreme Court in the cases growing out of the ratification of these two amendments. (Hawke v. Smith, 253 U. S. 221; Leser v. Garnett, 42 Sup. Ct. 217.)

These holdings seem to shift the source of political power from the "people of the several States" who ratified the Constitution, the only "people of the United States" known to our history, to their uncontrolled and unrestrained "amending agents."

These "amending agents" under these decisions are constituted the ultimate sovereign power which formerly was supposed to reside only in the people themselves.

As Marshall said (Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 389):

"The people made the Constitution, and the people can unmake it. It is the creature of their will. But this supreme and irresistible power to make or unmake resides only in the whole body of the people, not in any subdivision of them. The attempt of any of the parts to exercise it is usurpation, and ought to be repelled by those to whom the people have delegated the power of repelling it" (i. e., the courts).

This has, unfortunately, all gone by the board and in its place a brand-new theory of sovereignty in government has been set up. The passage of the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment is now required to restore the sovereiguty of the people.

Daniel Webster said (Congressional Debates, vol. 4, pt. 1, p. 565):

"The sovereignty of government is an idea belonging to the other side of the Atlantic. No such thing is known in North America. Our governments are all limited. In Europe sovereignty is of feudal origin and imports no more than the state of the sovereign. It comprises his rights, duties, exemptions, prerogatives, and powers. But with us all power is with the people and they erect what governments they please and confer on them such powers as they please. None of these governments are sovereign in the European sense of the word, all being restrained by written constitutions."

That can no longer be said, since the holding that the people of Ohio could not by provision of the State constitution compel a referendum upon a proposed Federal amendment but were bound by the action of their own agents in their legislature. Nor since the further holding that the Legislatures of Tennessee, Missouri, Texas, West Virginia, and Rhode Island were not bound by the provisions of their State constitutions forbidding them to ratify the nineteenth amendment.

In other words, it has for the first time been affirmatively held that the "people of the several States" who ratified the Constitution, when directly submitted to them assembled in their State conventions; in fact, transferred to their "amending agents"—that is, to two-thirds of a quorum of Congress and a majority of 36 legislatures—a power supreme over themselves.

These "amending agents," without the semblance of a popular mandate, can not only take away from the people of the States any inherent State power reserved to them by the tenth amendment, as a condition of Federal union, and shift it to congressional control, but they can embody in the Constitution itself an illegal moral commandment in main part beyond the reach of legislative modification by either Congress or State legislatures, after the fashion of the laws of the Medes and Persians, which alter not. A mere handful of legislators distributed among 13 States—not more than about 200 men—can forever prevent repeal. This sets up an impossible, irresponsible method for the exercise of legislative power which has no place in the democratic government of these United States.

In the political ratification of the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments the Congress passed the responsibility to the "State legislatures," refusing to submit them directly to the people of the States—who are the States—acting in State conventions as authorized by the amending clause itself.

The failure of Congress to invoke this form of popular referendum so as to obtain the sanction of the people themselves to these radical changes in the organic law is inexplicable.

Ratification by State conventions necessarily chosen after proposal would have made the issue direct and certain and the popular mandate complete.

In the debate in Congress—such as it was—upon proposing the eighteenth amendment many Members said they considered themselves bound to permit a vote upon ratification, even if personally opposed to it. Strange, unless mere desire for haste was to control, that they did not make sure of popular approval by proposing to State conventions.

In very few, if any, legislatures was the question of fundamental policy in ceding "State police power" to our Federal governmental agency adequately debated.

The original 13 States had enjoyed the exclusive control of their "local police" for about 300 years.

Even in legislatures where the eighteenth amendment met with the strongest opposition the debate on fundamentals was meager. Instance the absence of such debate in Louisiana, with one majority in the senate; in New York, where a party caucus threw two deciding votes; in California and Maryland, where the vote was close; and even in New Jersey and Connecticut, which rejected. The remarkable Rhode Island resolution instructing her attorney general to test the legal right of the legislatures of other States, by Federal amendment, to take from her people, without their consent, control of their "local police" excited no serious comment in the press. When noticed at all it was called a desperate legal move on the part of liquor interests, a trifling way of disposing of the arguments of the constitutionalists.

Many of the so-called "dry" States, either through various provisions permitting limited import for personal use or through lack of general enforcement, were not "dry" in fact. Yet their legislatures ratified after little or no debate. The Mississippi Legislature ratified in both houses 15 minutes after receiving the proposal. The local adoption by the people of these States of some form of State prohibition in order to abolish the saloon was accepted as authority from them to their legislative amending agents—

(1) To embody a "local police regulation" in form and effect irrepealable into the Federal Constitution.

(2) To legislate in this undemocratic form upon the local habits of people of other States 3,000 miles away, whom they did not know, had never seen, and who could not hold them to political account—an absolutely irresponsible act.

(3) To surrender the local control of their own constituents because, forsooth, they had already exercised their control locally in a particular way suited to their own local conditions. Was there ever such an illogical non sequitur? Now, of consequence, their constituents are unable, except within very narrow limits and then only with the consent of Congress, to control its form, duration, and extent. They no longer enjoy self-government. On the contrary, Senators from Utah, Texas, Nebraska, et al., dictate the dining tables of the citizens of Maryland, New York, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, interfere with their right to jury trial, and sometimes even invade their homes through minions sent from Washington.

Twelve State legislatures which were elected on other issues before the amendment was even proposed by Congress voted to ratify the eigteenth amendment. They, of course, had no accurate means of determining the desires of their own people. But lack of a popular mandate did not give them pause. The people of California on referendum rejected State prohibition by a large majority at the same time they elected the legislature which undertook nevertheless to express "the assent of the people of California" to the eighteenth amendment. In Maryland a legislature elected on other issues before proposal ratified in the face of a heavy majority against prohibition on referendum not long before. In Ohio the people, on referendum, repudiated their legislature's ratification of the eighteenth amendment itself. The subsequent adverse court ruling does not change that fact.

In the case of the nineteenth amendment the lack of a popular mandate on the part of the "legislative amending agents" appears even more strikingly. The delightful theory was successfully advanced by both national committee chairmen that the women would vote solidly against that party whose legislatures refused to ratify—the absurd mythical sex-vote idea. Yet this produced about 30 specially called extra sessions to catch the women's vote. As a result 34 out of the 38 legislatures which ratified the nineteenth amendment were elected on other issues before submission by Congress, with no popular mandate whatsoever. Five, namely, the legislatures of Tennessee, Missouri, West Virginia, Texas, and Rhode Island, flatly ignored State constitutional provisions—under which constitutions they held their very existence—forbidding them to ratify. Thirteen legislatures ratified against the wishes of their own people expressed by unfavorable referenda on "State suffrage."

While the Supreme Court held in Hawke v. Smith (supra) that the legislature "merely expresses the assent of its State" to a proposed amendment, the people, for whom it speaks and whose assent it records, can not limit their agent's power to ratify or even fix the time it shall vote thereon by provisions in their State constitutions—the instruments through which the people create the legislatures—expressly enacted for that very purpose. This seems to be the only case in the law where the agent becomes all powerful over his principal, and it ought to be changed forthwith.

Outside the 10 States where the legislatures rejected and the two—Tennessee and West Virginia—which ratified by a majority of one in violation of State constitutional provisions, there was no constitutional discussion whatsoever. There was no debate over the policy of conferring new Federal power over suffrage nor of the dictation by distant States of the suffrage of the dissenting States. For the pleasure of meddling with the suffrage of Maryland, Delaware, Mississippi, Louisiana, et al., the Pacific Coast States, whose women already voted, bound themselves in perpetuity never to disfranchise Chinese and Japanese women born in the United States.

The Maryland Legislature passed a ringing resolution urging the other States to refrain from interfering with the suffrage of the people of Maryland under the guise of amending the Federal Constitution, and challenging their power so to do. No newspaper in the United States published this resolution; only a very few mentioned it at all, and only one has been discovered which discussed it editorially.

The above should be sufficient to show the political and constitutional necessity of adopting the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment if the "home rule," "local self-government" principles of our strictly Federal Union are to remain and the establishment of the "consolidated National Government" which the fathers feared and we in our hearts fear just as much is to be prevented.

A roll call upon the proposal would accurately disclose how many friends of the American system of constitutional government remain in the Congress of the United States.

It can hardly be claimed even by the well-organized minorities who stampeded through "State legislatures," uncontrolled by any constitutional restraints and without popular sanction, two revolutionary Federal amendments that therefore the same privilege must be accorded to all other well-organized minorities. To take that position would be to declare themselves enemies of the Federal Constitution and enemies of the American system. They will hardly dare assume that attitude nor will the Members of Congress who supported those amendments care to record themselves as permanently opposed to "popular government" on constitutional questions.

A hundred million people scattered over a continent can not be successfully governed in all their private, intimate, local affairs by an all-powerful legislative assembly at Washington. That would constitute the consolidated national government which the Federalists as well as the Democrats in the Constitutional Convention so vigorously opposed and thought they had forever guarded against.

The new nationalists seem to have in mind the fiction of a "mass people of the United States," which never had any existence in fact and which never acted directly or by representation.

There is no such political concept in this country as the people of the United States in the aggregate.

The people do not speak, never have spoken, and never can speak in their sovereign capacity otherwise than as the people of the States.

The so-called "National" House of Representatives is elected every second year by "the people of the several States." (U. S. Const., Art. I, sec. 2; Hawke v. Smith, supra, 228.)

There are but two modes of expressing their sovereign will known to the people of this country. One is by direct vote—the mode adopted by Rhode Island in 1788 when she rejected the Federal Constitution. The other is the method here generally pursued, of acting by means of conventions of delegates elected expressly as representatives of the sovereignty of the people.

Now, it is not a matter of opinion or theory or speculation, but a plain undeniable historical fact, that there never has been any act or expression of sovereignty in either of these modes by that imaginary community, "the people of the United States in the aggregate."

Usurpations of power by the Government of the United States there may have been and may be again, but there has never been either a sovereign convention or a direct vote of the whole people of the United States in the aggregate to demonstrate its existence as a corporate unit or self-contained political sovereignty.

Every exercise of sovereignty by any of the people of this country that has actually taken place has been by the people of the States as States.

No respectable authority has ever had the hardihood to deny that before the adoption of the Federal Constitution the only sovereign political community was the people of each State.

When the confederation was abandoned and the Constitution was adopted by the people of the several States in their State conventions, the General Government was reorganized, its structure was changed, additional powers were conferred upon it, and thereby subtracted from the powers theretofore exercised by the State governments; but the seat of sovereignty—the source of all those delegated and dependent powers—was not disturbed. The only change was in the form, structure, and relation of their governmental agencies.

There was a new Government, but no new "sovereign people" was created or constituted.

The people, in whom alone sovereignty inheres, remained just as they had been before.

Madison said in the Virginia Ratification Convention (3 Ell. Deb. 94):

"Who are the parties to it? The people—but not the people as composing one great body, but the people as composing 13 sovereignties."

Lee, of Westmoreland, said (3 Ell. Deb. 180):

"If this were a consolidated Government, ought it not to be ratified by a majority of the people as individuals and not as States?"

Charles Pinckney, in the South Carolina convention, said (4 Ell. Deb. 328):

"With us the sovereignty of the Union is in the people."

In McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 402), Marshall said for the Supreme Court:

"They (the people) acted upon it in the only manner in which they can act safely, effectively, and wisely on such a subject, by assembling in convention. It is true they assembled in their several States—and where else should they have assembled?"

Then, answering his own question, he conclusively disposes of any idea of a "mass people of the United States," in these words:

"No political dreamer was ever wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass. Of consequence, when they act they act in their States."

Of course it may be denied that there were no such political dreamers then or are not now. But, after all these years, does anyone expect a new ultimate sovereign people—a mass people of America—different from and superior to the "people of the States" who ratified the Constitution, to be now discovered?

Or that the primary sanction upon which Marshall based the very supremacy of delegated Federal power, the action of the people of the States in ratifying the Constitution, has now been broken down?

While the Supreme Court in the recent cases, it is true, held that the "amending agents" acted without constitutional restraint, nevertheless they set up no "mass people." On the contrary, they still held that the "legislature" was designated as the agency to express "the assent of its State" to a proposed amendment.

What is needed is to so far impose restraint upon these "legislative amending agents" as to compel them to truly represent their people and record a real assent after popular sanction. This the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment accomplishes.

If the new nationalists who seem to visualize this mythical mass people as a basis of their political philosophy now wish to establish such "mass people" and bring them into power, they will have to find some other basis for their political action to operate. It can not reasonably operate to pass irrepealable local legislation for all of us and hamstring our democracy by so-called moral commandments in form and effect irrepealable through the amending clause of the Constitution. This clause was designed only for perfecting and improving our Federal "home rule"—"local self-government" scheme of government—and for shifting "governmental legislative powers" between our State and Federal legislative agencies.

Its proper use necessarily always preserves to the people their inherent right to repeal or modify the laws under which they must live through representative legislative bodies directly responsible to them.

It was never intended to affirmatively legislate by the amending clause itself or to force such legislation by means of it (repealable by no democratic process) upon unwilling sections.

Such use of the amending clause destroys "representative government" by taking from the people acting through their responsible legislative agencies (Congress and State legislatures) the power to repeal or modify.

In Rhode Island v. Palmer (253 U. S. p. 286) finding No. 6 reads:

"The first section of the amendment—the one embodying the prohibition—* * * of its own force invalidates every legislative act—whether by Congress, by a State legislature, or by a Territorial assembly—which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits."

Such use of the amending clause clearly lacks all democratic sanction, is in its very nature unrepresentative, and may accurately be called "irresponsible government by constitutional amendment."

It is no substitute for popular sovereignty under the Constitution. It will destroy the Constitution without substituting any democratic form which responds to the desires of the people and accurately records their legislative will

It ties a great democracy in a political strait-jacket and therefore foments revolutionary ideas.

The Wadsworth-Garrett amendment prevents its use for any purpose for which there is not a clear and unmistakable popular mandate.

Whether we are Democrats or Republicans, Federalists, State rights men or New Nationalists, Prohibitionists, or suffragists or antis, we should all desire political action to express only the will of the people and be free from dictation by well-organized minorities. We should all desire "legislative action" which is repealable in response to popular desire and not written like a religous truth in unchanging tables of stone. So believing, we should all pull together for the proposal and ratification of the Wadsworth-Garrett amendment.

GEORGE STEWART BROWN.

HARRIET B. CASTLE.

The bill (H. R. 14089) granting six months' pay to Harriet B. Castle was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid, from the appropriation for beneficiaries of officers who die while on the active list of the Navy, to Harriet B. Castle, widow of Guy W. S. Castle, late lieutenant commander, United States Navy, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate the said Guy W. S. Castle was receiving at the date of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPRAISAL OF TRIBAL PROPERTY OF INDIANS.

The bill (H. R. 13835) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise tribal property of Indians, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SPENCER. May I ask from whom the objection came?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I made it.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not ask the Senator to withdraw his objection, but I do want to say to the Senate that this is a bill which has to do with the welfare of the Indians.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has to do with the "wrongfare" of the Indians, I think. I insist on the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on objection.

ALBERT H. WHITE AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 624) for the relief of Albert H. White, Mary E. Fowler, Lorena B. Winkler, E. E. White, and C. A. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title to lot 271 and the west half of lot 286, in block 16 of the old city of Pensacola, Fla., according to map of said city of Pensacola, Escambia County, Fla., platted by James W. Exum, in 1827, be, and it is hereby, confirmed and relinquished to Albert H. White, Mary E. Fowler, Lorena B. Winkler, E. E. White, and C. A. White: Provided, That this confirmation shall only operate as a relinquishment of the title of the United States in and to the said property to said parties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO SKAGWAY, ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 12171) to grant certain lands to the city of Skagway, Alaska, for a public park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Skagway, Alaska, for use as a public park, that certain portion of unsurveyed public land adjacent to the city of Skagway, Alaska, which is bounded on the east by the Skagway River, on the south by Lynn Canal, on the west by Lynn Canal and Long Bay, an arm of Lynn Canal, and on the north by a line running from a point approximately 400 feet north of Alpine Bridge, on the west bank of the Skagway River, in an approximately westerly direction to Long Bay, on Lynn Canal, the land embraced in these boundaries containing approximately 250 acres: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed, as hereinbefore set forth, and all portions thereof, shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified, and if the lands shall cease to be so used for a period of three years at any one time, they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act: And provided further, That the land to be conveyed to the city of Skagway, Alaska, shall be paid for at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH MARSHALL MONTGOMERY.

The bill (H. R. 13724) for the relief of Hugh Marshall Montgomery was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent for lot 4, containing 54 acres, of section 3, in township 17 north, and range 5 west, Choctaw meridian, in the State of Mississippi, to Hugh Marshall Montgomery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF LANDS TO THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The bill (H. R. 14296) to authorize the county of Huron, State of Michigan, to convey a certain described tract of land to the State of Michigan for public park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Michigan all its title to and interest in the following tract of land, to wit: Lots 1 and 2, section 17, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 20, township 18 north, range 11 east, in Michigan: Provided, That if the State of Michigan after such conveyance shall fail to use the land for public park purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the chairman of the board of supervisors and county clerk of the county of Huron, State of Michigan, when directed by the board of supervisors of said county, are authorized to execute such conveyance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CESSION OF PUBLIC LANDS TO THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

The bill (H. R. 8625) to provide for the cession to the State of Michigan of certain public lands in the county of Keweenaw, State of Michigan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands located in the county of Keweenaw, State of Michigan, be, and they are hereby, ceded to the State of Michigan for public park purposes: Isle No. 1, section 4, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 2, section 4, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 2, section 2, township 66 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 1, section 36, township 67 north, range 34 west; Dean Isle, sections 31 and 36, township 67 north, ranges 33 and 34 west; Greene Isle, sections 25 and 36, township 67 north, range 34 west; Isle No. 1, section 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; Isle No. 2, section 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; Isle No. 3, sections 29 and 32, township 67 north, range 33 west; containing, in all, 33.75 acres: Provided, That any grant hereby made shall not defeat any prior valid settlement claim initiated when the land was subject to settlement and legally maintained: And provided further, That in case the State of Michigan shall at any time use the said described lands, or any portion of them, for other than public park purposes, the title thereto shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN A. DOUGLAS.

The bill (H. R. 1252) for the relief of John A. Douglas was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to say that if the Senator would read the report I believe he would withdraw his objection. The committee report shows that great injustice has been done to the man by the charge of desertion standing against him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina maintain his objection?

Mr. DIAL. Yes; let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

The resolution (S. Res. 456) to investigate certain matters relating to the street railway systems in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. McKINLEY. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. It is for the investigation of the street car companies. The street car companies have advertised here in the city of Washington in the newspapers that they courted an investigation, and I am sure they would not go back on their published statement. I hope the Senator will not object to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois maintain his objection?

Mr. McKINLEY. The reading of the resolution at the desk causes me to object. If the Senator will take the trouble to write to the various public utility commissions he can get all the information the resolution calls for. The resolution provides for traveling all over the United States, bringing witnesses from all over the country to Washington, securing papers and general information which the Senator or anyone interested can obtain from any of the public utilities commissions in the United States. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution will go over.

BILL AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 6508) for the relief of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 403) further continuing the employment of an additional clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 420) to provide an assistant clerk for the Committee on Naval Affairs during the Sixty-eighth Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 427) further continuing the employment of an assistant clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. COUZENS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 437) further continuing the employment of an additional clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. COUZENS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

FRANK A. JAHN.

The bill (H. R. 12138) for the relief of Frank A. Jahn was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask that the objection be withdrawn? A similar bill was passed by the Senate last Monday. Unfortunately it was a Senate bill that was passed after the House bill had been passed, so that we are in the position of having to pass the House bill. In order to make it effective it is necessary to pass the House bill at this time. The case is not in the category which has been described here and which has been debated. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina maintain his objection?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am under the difficulty of trying to talk to a Senator at my side while listening to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. A similar bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. Is the party a deserter?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a retirement bill, but it is not in the category that has been discussed on the floor heretofore.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it a retirement bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but under the law where there was a right of retirement in the particular individual after a service of 13 years.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is a case where the law provided for the retirement of men who received injuries in time of war. Later on the Congress enacted a law providing that they should make application before the 1st of October, 1922. This man had written a letter presenting his claim before that time, but the Navy Department through a technical ruling held that the letter was not sufficient application. The committee thought, considering the intentions of the man, the fact that his injuries were received in time of war and that he had had a long service, that he was entitled to the benefits of the act.

Mr. DIAL. If the two Senators say it is all right, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Frank A. Jahn a lieutenant (junior grade) in the United States Navy and to retire him and place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay and allowances of that grade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAMON B. HARRISON.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 222) for the relief of Ramon B. Harrison was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ANNOTATION OF SENATE RULES.

The resolution (S. Res. 459) authorizing an annotation of the Senate rules was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] wishes to have the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

COLORED UNION BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The bill (H. R. 13617) to dissolve the Colored Union Benevolent Association, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the charter of the Colored Union Benevolent Association of the District of Columbia shall cease and determine except as to the following-named trustees, namely, George E. Emmons, Harry A. Clarke, and Whitefield McKinlay, all of whom are citizens of the United States and residents of the District of Columbia, and their successors, are hereby continued as such corporation for the purposes hereinafter stated, with full power to fill any and all vacancies of said trustees which may occur by death or resignation until the sale, distribution, and winding up of the affairs of the said corporation as hereinafter directed shall have been effected.

SEC. 2. That the said trustees be, and they are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed, under such regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may prescribe, to transfer the bodies interred in said cemetery to some other public cemetery or cemeteries or place within the District of Columbia, to be reinterred at the expense of the Colored Union Benevolent Association. And the said trustees, after qualifying by giving such bond as may be required and approved by the probate court of the District of Columbia, be, and they are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to sell and convey in fee simple the land known as the cemetery of the Colored Union Benevolent Association and the buildings thereon, and any other tract or parcel of land purchased for cemetery purposes and the buildings thereon of the said association, and apply the proceeds of such sales, together with all other moneys and assets of the said association, as hereinafter directed.

SEC. 3. That the said trustees be, and they are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to convey the said real estate by mortgage or deed of trust to secure a loan or loans, at such time and at such rate of interest as may be practicable, which money so raised shall be used by them for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, for which they shall be accountable as for other moneys coming into their hands as trustees under this act.

SEC. 4. That after paying all obligations and liabilities of the said asssociation, including a compensation to the said trustees of 5 per cent of the gross amount of sales aforesaid, together with reasonable attorney's fees and other necessary expenses in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this act, the said trustees shall distribute the remainder of such amount, per stirpes, to the heirs at law or next of kin of the owners of the said real estate and the personal property of the said association, as such ownership may be evidenced by the records of said association. Before making any distribution, however, the said trustees shall first receive the approval of the probate court of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER, OREG.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 415) to authorize the improvement of the Columbia River at St. Helens, Oreg., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. McNARY. I am sure the Senator does not wish to insist on his objection. It does not take a dollar out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to modify the project for the improvement of the Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers below Portland, Oreg., in accordance with the reports submitted in House Document No. 156, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSE CITY COTTON OIL MILL.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that we recur to Calendar No. 1205, the resolution (S. Res. 448) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 4479) for the relief of Rose City Cotton Oil Mill and others. I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill to be referred to the Court of Claims so as to embrace three claims which were omitted by inadvertence from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the resolution was passed is reconsidered.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill be amended as follows:

On page 22, after line 19, insert the following: "Crescent Cotton Oil Co., Memphis, Tenn., $91,610.61; Washington Cotton Oil Co., Dallas, Tex., $26,278.36; Atlanta Cotton Oil Co., $26,705.03."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be so amended. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF COMPENSATION ACT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, we passed over Calendar No. 1260, being the bill (S. 4543) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916. There is on the table an identical bill which came over from the House and has been reported by the Judiciary Committee with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14226) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," persons now receiving compensation upon an award made by the Compensation Commission shall, until March 1, 1924, be entitled to receive the amount awarded, unless the award so made shall by the commission be set aside.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to make a statement as to what the bill proposes.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the calendar number?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This bill is on the new calendar of the Senate, which has not yet been printed. We are proceeding with the calendar as it exists on the Secretary's desk.

I think the matter may be expedited if I can explain the bill. The bill is addressed to the situation which arose by reason of a recent interpretation of the comptroller with reference to the construction of the compensation act of 1916, which provides for the compensation of employees of the Government who have sustained injuries. The commission has heretofore construed that to include occupational diseases, such as tuberculosis, and so forth, but the comptroller has ruled that that is incorrect. The bill as it comes to us from the other House proposes to include occupational diseases within the definition of injuries. That introduces a new policy, as the ruling has been made. Accordingly it was considered that it was too late to discuss the wisdom of that policy, but the Committee on the Judiciary has reported a substitute to the effect that in the case of awards heretofore made the people who are suffering from such diseases now may continue to be paid until the 1st day of March, 1924, in order to give the next Congress the opportunity to consider whether or not they will adopt the policy. It seemed to the committee rather inhumane to deprive of compensation those people who were suffering from these diseases in cases which had been already adjudicated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the bill may be passed. I know of one case that is very pitiable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to preserve the status of persons awarded compensation under the act approved September 17, 1916."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PATENT OF LANDS TO ROBERT E. WYCHE.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13751) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Parish, La.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Louisiana that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate is still proceeding with bills upon the Secretary's table which do not appear on the printed calendar.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REFORESTATION.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on the Secretary's desk is House Joint Resolution 456, which I should now like to have considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the House joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Oregon, which will be read.

The resolution (H. J. Res. 456) authorizing the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to appoint a subcommittee to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture to join with a like committee of five heretofore appointed by the Senate to investigate problems relating to reforestation, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is hereby authorized to appoint a subcommittee, to consist of not more than eight members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, five from the majority party and three from the minority party, to join with a like committee of five heretofore appointed by the Senate, and of which he shall be an ex officio member, to investigate problems relating to reforestation, with a view to establishing a comprehensive national policy for lands chiefly suited for timber production in order to insure a perpetual supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States. The joint committee shall make a final report of its investigations with recommendations to the Congress not later than April 4, 1924. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times during the sessions or recesses of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses and in such places within the United States to hold such hearings as it deems necessary and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary. The cost of such stenographic service to report the hearings shall not be in excess of 35 cents per folio. The committee is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony. The expenses of the joint committee shall be paid from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States, and shall not exceed $5,000 from said funds of the House. All such expenses to be paid upon vouchers duly approved by the chairman of said joint committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a Senate committee to consider problems of reforestation has already been appointed, has it not?

Mr. McNARY. There has been a committee appointed for the Senate, but the House measure provides for a joint committee, to consist of Members of both the House and of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

FRIEZE IN CAPITOL ROTUNDA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry. Has Calendar No. 1258, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to provide for the restoration and completion of the historical frieze in the Rotunda of the Capitol, been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, Senate joint resolutions were not to be considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4594) to authorize the Secretary of State to acquire in Paris a site, with an erected building thereon, at a cost not to exceed $300,000, for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 465) carrying out the purpose of a House resolution providing for a legislative clerk to the acting minority leader of the House, adopted March 3, 1923, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were subsequently signed by the Vice President:

S. 4245. An act to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922 and all other customs revenue laws; and

S. 4280. An act to provide additional credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to amend the Federal reserve act; and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE CLERK TO ACTING MINORITY HOUSE LEADER.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Presiding Officer to lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 465, which I understand is on the Vice President's table, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, which will be read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 465) carrying out the purpose of a House resolution providing for a legislative clerk to the acting minority leader of the House was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc, That in order to carry out the purpose of the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on March 3, 1923 (H. Res. 565), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient for such purpose.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD ANDREWS.

Mr. DIAL. A while ago I objected to the consideration of Order of Business 1183, being House bill 8871. On reading the report I see the Post Office Department recommends the payment of the claim therein provided for, and I therefore withdraw my objection and trust that the bill may be passed.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8871) for the relief of Richard Andrews, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Richard Andrews, the sum of $2,500, in full settlement against the Government, in compensation for injuries sustained March 15, 1920, in the city of New York, when struck by a United States mail truck.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELEPHANT BUTTE IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 13550) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso County water improvement district No. 1 of Texas for the carrying out of the provisions of the treaty of January 16, 1907, between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in connection with the Rio Grande Federal irrigation project in New Mexico and Texas, and as a final settlement of the subject, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contracts with the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico and the El Paso County water improvement district No. 1 of Texas, under which said districts shall agree to store and deliver 60,000 acre-feet of water annually in the bed of the Rio Grande at the head works of the Acequia Madre above the city of Juarez, Mexico, as provided by the treaty of January 16, 1907 (34 Stat. p. 2953), between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, and under which, in case of default by said districts, the Secretary of the Interior may undertake and fulfill such contracts and such treaty obligation and collect the cost thereof from said districts.

SEC. 2. That upon the mutual execution and delivery of said contract and in consideration thereof the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to credit the construction cost of said Rio Grande Federal irrigation project with the sum of $1,000,000, thereby reducing by that amount the total construction charge due from the water users under said project to the United States, and shall issue a certificate to that effect to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That upon receipt of such certificate the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is authorized and directed to accept the same in lieu and in full satisfaction of the next installment of $1,000,000 due the general fund of the Treasury of the United States from the reclamation fund, under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. p. 835), as amended by the act of June 12, 1917 (40 Stat. p. 149).

Mr. BURSUM. The bill is identical with Order of Business 1050, being Senate bill 4232. I ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill be substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to make a statement in reference to the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Will the Senator please wait until we can have the House bill substituted for the Senate bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement, and then I shall not object to the bill being taken up; but I do not want the bill to be enacted into law until that statement goes into the RECORD.

When the Elephant Butte Dam was first proposed there was an agreement made between the Government of the United States and the builders of the dam that the Government should pay $1,000,000, with the stipulation that 60,000 acre-feet of water should be delivered at the dam. The Government of the United States paid that $1,000,000. The cost of the dam, together with the laterals, instead of being $40 an acre, was some $90 an acre. Under the original agreement the Government had nothing whatever to do with the laterals, but they did have with the dam itself, the cost of which was about $40 an acre. Of course, including the laterals, the Government did not pay the proportion of the cost of the whole project that the owners of the reclamation project have been compelled to meet; nor did the Government ever agree to do so; but it is now claimed there is a hardship on the users of the water from that dam, and therefore the Government ought not to hold them strictly to their contract, but ought to give them another $1,000,000 to assist them toward paying the annual cost of the distribution of water in the laterals, not in Mexico but to the users of water under the project in this country.

If Congress wants to give—and it would be really a gift and nothing else—$1,000,000 to that project over and above what the original agreement was, why, then, let the bill be passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Is the $1,000,000 to which the Senator refers to be paid out of the reclamation fund or out of the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. That will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and not out of the reclamation fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I regret to say that I must object to the consideration of the bill. I think it is too important a matter to be decided in the closing hours of the Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go to the calendar. The Secretary will report the next bill on the calendar.

JOINT COMMISSION OF GOLD AND SILVER INQUIRY.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this afternoon the Senate passed a Senate resolution providing for an investigation of the mining of silver and gold, and so forth. The joint resolution which the Senate passed some days ago has since come over from the House with amendments and has gone to conference. If that joint resolution should finally be enacted, it would be unnecessary to adopt the Senate resolution. So I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate resolution was adopted and will let the motion go over until the morning.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely ask that I may enter the motion.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has a right to enter the motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under the rule I have a right to enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest that if the joint resolution shall be agreed to there will be no objection then to reconsidering the vote by which the Senate resolution was passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all I want. I am not asking that the motion be acted on to-night.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator will understand that when he enters his motion the effect of passing the resolution is lost, and we must then dispose of the motion to reconsider. I trust that the Senator will not enter the motion until the morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to interfere, but I do not think we ought to go too fast.

Mr. PITTMAN. In order to see what may come of the conference on the joint resolution, will not the Senator withdraw his motion at the present time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

MEMORIAL TABLET IN THE CITY OF GUYAMA, PORTO RICO.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 442) to authorize the transportation to Porto Rico of a committee representing the Fourth Ohio Infantry, war with Spain, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That if accommodations on public transports are available, the Secretary of War is authorized to provide, without expense to the United States, transportation from the United States to Porto Rico of a committee composed of members of the Fourth Ohio Infantry, War with Spain, for the purpose of placing a memorial tablet in the city of Guyama commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the capture of that place and in honor of the American soldiers who died during their service in Porto Rico.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The bill (H. R. 2347) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead entryman of 160 acres or less of lands which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under the provisions of the enlarged homestead act of February 19, 1909, or June 17, 1910, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, and any homestead entryman who has submitted final proof, or received patent, for such an amount of lands which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior as of the character described in said act, and who owns and resides upon the said homestead entry, where said lands are within a national forest, may make an additional entry for and obtain patent to such an amount of land, of that same character, not in a national forest, and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry, as, when the area thereof is added to the area of the original entry, will not exceed 320 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries; but cultivation must be made on the additional entry as required by said act. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate as subject to the enlarged homestead acts lands embraced, at the time of such designation, within valid subsisting entries within national forests.

SEC. 2. That any homestead entryman of 160 acres or less of lands which have been or may hereafter be designated or classified by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under the provisions of the stock raising homestead act of December 29, 1916, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, and also any homestead entryman who has submitted final proof or received patent, for such an amount of lands that are of the character described as subject to entry under the provisions of the said stock raising homestead act, and who owns and resides upon the said homestead entry, where said lands are within a national forest, may make an additional entry for and obtain patent to such an amount of land of that same character, not in a national forest and within a radius of 20 miles from said homestead entry, as, when the area thereof is added to the area of the original entry, will not exceed 640 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries; but improvements must be made on the additional entry equal to $1.25 for each acre thereof. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate under the stock raising homestead act lands embraced, at the time of such designation, within valid subsisting entries within national forests.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT E. DANFORTH.

The bill (H. R. 6196) for the relief of Robert E. Danforth was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Robert E. Danforth conveying the south half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 19, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 20, township 15 south, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, and the north half of the north half of section 20, township 15, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, being lands embraced in the homestead entries of said Robert E. Danforth, Leadville serial Nos. 02846 and 02845, made April 5, 1920.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT E. WYCHE.

The bill (H. R. 13751) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Parish, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and patent to Robert E. Wyche, a resident of Caddo Paris, La., the southwest quarter of northeast quarter and southeast quarter of northwest quarter of section 15, township 20 north, range 11 west, Louisiana meridian, containing 80 acres, more or less, land which he and his grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith, for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tract of land be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 90 days after the passage and approval of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRYGVE KRISTIAN LODE.

The bill (H. R. 8291) for the relief of Trygve Kristian Lode, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount paid as fees, commissions, and purchase money by Trygve Kristian Lode, in connection with homestead entry at the United States land office, Glasgow, Mont., as follows: Serial number 048301, made May 8, 1917, for the southeast quarter of section 28, township 30 north, range 52 east.

SEC. 2. That upon receipt of the certificate from the Secretary of the Interior, as provided in section 1 of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment of the amounts so certified out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and issue his warrant in settlement thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. PHILBRICK.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, reported the bill (H. R. 745) for the relief of William H. Philbrick, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to William H. Philbrick, city marshal of Keene, N. H., the sum of $41.34 in full for expenses incurred in returning Pvt. Donald Merchant, a member of the United States Army, to Fort McKinley, Me., on or about October 10, 1918, upon request of United States Army officer in the personnel of said Fort McKinley.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are certain resolutions upon the table, which will be stated.

CONTROVERSIES BETWEEN CERTAIN RAILROADS AND RAILWAY SHOPMEN.

The resolution (S. Res. 463) requesting the President of the United States to endeavor to effect a settlement of controversies between certain railroads and railway shopmen, was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, in his discretion, to renew his offices in bringing about a settlement of pending controversies between certain railroads and railway shopmen.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 26) requesting the President to ascertain whether the Government of the Republic of France is willing to discuss the cession to the United States of all or any part of its possessions in the Lesser Antilles Islands, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) declaring that it is the sense of the Senate that the Government of the United States should not take part in any foreign councils except upon the express understanding that the purposes of such councils are to establish government by the consent of the governed, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 78) requesting the Secretary of State to inform the Senate regarding the negotiations as to the acceptance by the President of the invitation to appoint representatives to meet with the supreme council, the conference of ambassadors, and the reparations commission, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) requesting the President to transmit to the Senate documents and other information relating to the present situation in Mexico was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 135) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate a list of the securities acquired by the President under the provisions of law for the purpose of indemnifying the Government for loans made to the railroads of the United States or for any other purpose was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let that go over.

SECTION 4 OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The resolution (S. Res. 472) submitted this day by Mr. GOODING was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is directed to investigate and report to the Senate the following information relating to the administration of section 4 of the interstate commerce act:

(a) The number of applications in special cases for relief from the operation of such section, filed with the commission, granted by the commission, granted by the commission after investigation including hearing, denied by the commission, or denied by the commission after investigation including hearing, for each of the following periods: The period between the amendment of the interstate commerce act on June 29, 1906, and its amendment on June 18, 1910, the period between such amendment on June 18, 1910, and the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, and the period since the enactment of the transportation act, 1920;

(b) The number of such applications granted since the date of the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, in order to meet rail competition, and the number granted since such date in order to meet water competition;

(c) The number of such applications granted since the date of the enactment of the transportation act, 1920, in which proof was presented satisfactory to the commission that the rate applied for would be reasonably compensatory for service performed, and the number of such applications granted since such date in order to meet water competition in which proof was presented satisfactory to the commission that the water competition was actual and not merely potential;

(d) The names of the railroads that have made such applications, the purposes intended to be accomplished and actually accomplished, in the opinion of the commission, by the filing and granting of such applications, and the effect of such applications on other railroads;

(e) The localities that have been most interested in having the railroads make such applications, and what pressure such localities have brought upon the railroads and other localities in order to obtain the filing of such applications; and

(f) The number of cases of increases of rates previously reduced in order to meet competition from a water route, and the number of such cases in which there was presented proof satisfactory to the commission that such increase rested upon changed conditions other than the elimination of the water competition.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is there another resolution at the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there are many resolutions here which have been on the calendar for a long time and have never been disturbed until to-night.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that they may all be passed over.

SALE OF LIQUOR BY UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask to have Senate Resolution 446, in reference to an investigation of the sale of liquor by the Shipping Board, laid before the Senate. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is here, and he has suggested certain amendments which are entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified.

The READING CLERK. As modified, the resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Shipping Board report to the Senate, and should the Senate not be in session then to the Secretary of the Senate, at the earliest practicable hour the following:

1. What quantity of whisky, wine, beer, and other alcoholic beverages was sold on Shipping Board vessels during the time that such sales were carried on with the approval of the Shipping Board?

2. What quantity of these liquors was purchased by the Shipping Board or by its agents and what was the total value thereof and the total receipts thereof per vessel?

3. How much liquor was sold to passengers independent of what they purchased over the bars of the vessels?

4. How much liquor was purchased by the crews of such vessels and what was the value thereof?

5. Was liquor served as a part of the crew's mess, and could the crews of such vessels purchase liquor freely?

6. How much whisky, wine, beer, and cognac, and other intoxicating beverages were in the possession of the Shipping Board when the order was given to stop selling same aboard vessels?

7. Have any of these liquors been sold in the United States?

8. Where is this liquor, if unsold, at the present time? If disposed of, to whom, at what prices, where shipped, and what was total amount of sales?

9. Was any of it sold to officers or members of the crews of such vessels or to any employees of the Shipping Board, and at what prices, and what amounts to each individual, when the order for stoppage of sales was given?

10. Did any of the officials of the Shipping Board or officers of Shipping Board vessels engage in the sale of liquors to passengers aboard vessels for private gain?

11. To what extent, if any, is liquor being sold aboard vessels at the present time? Are any prohibition-enforcement officers allowed aboard such vessels?

12. What was the total amount of profits made by the Shipping Board out of sales of intoxicating beverages?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, is that resolution submitted for unanimous consent? If so, I shall object to it unless it is limited to the first provision. It seems to me perfectly absurd for us to waste the time of the Shipping Board and necessitate the incurring of a great deal of expense in ascertaining where the liquor is, and who got it. I am perfectly agreeable to the adoption of the first provision.

Mr. WARREN. I object to the consideration of the resolution, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The resolution will be passed over.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if there is no further business, I move that the unanimous-consent agreement be carried out and that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock a. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 36 minutes a. m., Sunday, March 4, 1923) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we approach Thy throne where the rainbow is set forever! We thank Thee that in all the lights and shades of the past Thy face has been leaning our way. Thy mercies have been as the flowers of the morning, which come from the blooming gardens of God. O bless us with the whisper of the Lord. Let the mutterings of toil die away and allow no grievances to be carried into the future. Let us shake ourselves free from the memories that hurt. For the friendships and companionships of these years we are grateful. May these bonds of the heart lend strength and give joy while time moves on in its relentless way. They have grown with our growth and strengthened with the strength of the years. While the world lures by we shall hear their voices and feel the pressure of their hands. If our paths lead through the green pastures, may we not forget Thee; if they wind their ways beside the still waters, let us be chastened in our spirits; if they stretch through the valley of sorrow and climb the hill of difficulty, O be Thou unto us the sweet, tender, and beautiful Shepherd. When the sun goes down and the West is red and all glory fades from our earthly sky may we be carried by the Father's love, in the Father's arms, and sink to rest with the Father's kiss, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION IN DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois presents a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 87.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of H. R. 14408 (an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes), in the amendment of the Senate No. 72, concurred in by the House, to correct the date "March 2, 1917," wherever it occurs to read "March 2, 1907."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, that is to make this conform to the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resoltuion.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4637. An act for the relief of certain disbursing agents under the Department of Commerce;

S. 3615. An act for the relief of Joseph F. Becker;

S. 3895. An act for the relief of Benjamin H. Richardson;

S. 4437. An act to amend section 284 of the Judicial Code of the United States;

S. 4438. An act to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 4614. An act to amend section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and

S. J. Res. 278. A joint resolution providing for the continuation of registrar and receiver of the land office at Guthrie, Okla., at salaries in effect prior to act of January 24, 1923.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 4216. An act authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes;

The message also announced that, pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution No. 53, the Vice President had appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. SHORTRIDGE, and Mr. OVERMAN members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. MCKELLAR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PAYMENTS MADE TO NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE OFFICERS.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act to June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to certain National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14077, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have gone over the very lengthy amendment of the Senate to the bill which we passed about a week ago, providing relief for the National Guard. There is incorporated in this amendment a provision that I think should not be adopted by the House conferees, and that is the principle of longevity pay for National Guard officers when serving at camps in active duty. We did pass through the House, when the pay bill was under consideration, after it had been defeated twice, a provision grant-ting to National Guard officers who had seen service, who are commissioned Regular Army officers, longevity pay of credit for service in the National Guard. Originally, as the gentleman knows, under the Army reorganization act the National Guard officers when they would go to camp on active duty would receive no higher pay than that of captain. Under a bill presented by the gentleman in the last session that was rescinded, and now they receive the pay of the grade, but I think we are going pretty far when we extend the principle to giving them longevity pay just for the time when serving in camp or in schools of instruction. If we can have an understanding that the conferees will not agree to that feature, I have no objection to the bill going to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want to ask the gentleman a question or two when the time comes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I can not say what the course of the conferees will be. I do not expect to be one of them myself, but I want to say to my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that he is unduly exercised over this matter, because the officers in the National Guard, as I am informed, have heretofore enjoyed this privilege of longevity pay when in camp. This simply is to put these officers on the same plane with the officers in the Regular Army when on active duty. That is the purpose of it. I hope the conferees will be able to agree upon something that will be satisfactory even to my technical friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in this particular the gentleman will recall that that provision was twice defeated upon its merits in the House, and when brought up a third time was carried by a very small margin. Members of the Military Affairs Committee opposed it very strongly. I am willing to trust the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM], who, I understand, will be one of the conferees on that question, with respect to the views that I expressed to-day.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I may say this to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that he is stating the truth when he refers to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee did not favor that amendment at the time, but the House adopted it, and it is the law now, and we believe that the National Guard officers should be treated fairly under the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly want the National Guard officers treated fairly, but I think we are treating them with undue partiality when we agree to the longevity principle when they happen to be in camps or schools of instruction.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was against this provision, and if I am to be one of the conferees, the understanding that I would have would be that the idea of this Senate amendment is merely to clear up the law as it exists to-day.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the purpose of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I only want to ask the gentleman one question. Have there been any extraneous riders placed on this bill by the Senate?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the only purpose of this bill and this amendment is to correct the law and overcome a certain ruling made by the comptroller.

Mr. BLANTON. Have there been any extraneous riders concerning nongermane matters placed upon this bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas there was no brigadier made or major general given an additional number or anything of that kind, but it simply applies solely to the National Guard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, Mr. GREENE of Vermont, and Mr. FIELDS.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT, APPROPRIATIONS, ETC., UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The Chairman laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the control of the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922.

WARREN G. HARDING.

The WHITE HOUSE, March 2, 1923.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. LANHAM was granted leave of absence for one day on account of sickness.

Mr. ALMON (on request of Mr. BANKHEAD) was granted leave of absence for the remainder of the session on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. LINTHICUM was granted leave of absence for the day on account of illness.

Mr. MONTAGUE (on request of Mr. BLAND of Virginia) was granted leave of absence for March 2 and remainder of session on account of sickness.

RECLASSIFICATION BILL.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8928, disagree to the Senate amendment, and accede to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8928, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this reclassification bill passed the House December 15, 1921. That was 14 months ago. Since then it has been reposing in the Senate. Recently the Senate took up the bill, struck out all of the House bill, and substituted an entirely new text. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be reclassification legislation, and I think there is great need for it; but I think that it will be very difficult for a full and free conference at this late hour.

However, realizing the importance of the subject, if we can have an agreement that there will be no agreement on the part of the conferees of the House that the salary schedules shall be put into effect prior to July 1, 1924, then I am willing that the bill go to conference, because if it should turn out that there was some serious error made in the bill, we would have time to correct it prior to its going into effect; and so I shall not object if we can have that assurance from the chairman.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like—I was not here when this colloquy took place—to say to the gentleman from New Jersey that inasmuch as the Senate has held this bill, after they have had it for 14 months, until the closing hours of the Congress, we will have no time whatever to study it or to see what effect the salary schedules may have; and therefore I want to ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he will agree, if the bill goes to conference, that the House provision requiring the postponement of the act until July 1, 1924, shall be adhered to—if he will agree not to enter into an agreement with the Senate unless that feature of the House bill is conformed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to the question, which is substantially the same as put by the gentleman from Texas, that the conferees on the part of the House will not agree to eliminate the provision of the bill which it contained when it passed the House here, to wit, that the classification be made and the allocation of the employees to their proper grades and payments; that that be made the basis of the estimate for the ensuing fiscal year, but the salaries do not take effect until the House has had an opportunity to scrutinize the estimate made on the basis of the classification; and therefore I can assure both gentlemen that no report will come from the conferees with that provision eliminated, and if the agreement otherwise can not be reached the bill will be brought back to the House for further instruction.

Mr. MADDEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, because I believe it is very important not only to the service but to the Treasury of the United States, and before this law is effective the Committee on Appropriations of the House shall have opportunity to study every schedule and pass upon the amount to be appropriated for every bureau and with the designations that are to be made, in order that there can be no doubt as to where chiefs shall put employees of the Government in the higher schedules provided in the different classifications; and with that understanding I shall not object to the bill going to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey in just what way the bill as it comes from the Senate differs from the bill in reference to the provision for heads of departments and divisions in the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not believe that as far as chiefs of bureaus and the heads of divisions and others—I do not believe that there is a very substantial difference in schedules as the bill was reported in the House and the bill as passed by the Senate. There is a probability that in certain instances the Senate bill is somewhat higher than the House bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Now, may I ask the gentleman this question, and possibly the gentleman can not answer, but may be the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] can answer it. May I have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois on this matter?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I understand it, this classification, as it was perfected in the House and as amended in the Senate, does not in any way apply to the secretarial or clerical force of the House or of the Members?

Mr. MADDEN. No; it does not. But in the bonus act which we have just passed there is a provision for the appointment of three Members of the House and three Members of the Senate to classify the legislative employees of the Government.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If this bill goes to conference and the conferees agree, and we adopt the report, will we be in the position of eliminating the bonus to the House employees and the employees of the Members?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all, because this joint committee would take care of that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So that the bonus would go into effect July 1, and there will be no difference in the pay of House employees and secretaries?

Mr. MADDEN. The bonus bill will have to be passed, no matter when this bill goes into effect.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is certainly a most remarkable thing that a measure concerning which there has been so much agitation as there has been concerning this, and which passed the House of Representatives early in 1921, should be held back by another legislative body until the very last day of the Congress before they messaged it back here to the House with their action. I suppose it is an indication of the wonderful efficiency of that body. [Laughter.] I do not know why it has been held back all this time. Manifestly it is going to require some time for the conferees to look into this matter, and I do not know whether they will have the opportunity to go thoroughly into it in time to pass it and let it be enrolled and engrossed for the signature of the President before noon to-morrow.

Something ought to pass. We ought not to have to pass a bonus bill which is in some respects inequitable but which, upon the whole, is necessary. Therefore I do not feel like taking the responsibility of objecting, but I think we all ought to understand exactly what is going on here now. It is understood that this proposition is to be brought back here with an amendment, or at least that the conferees on the part of the House will not agree unless there is a provision put into the bill that it shall not take effect before July 1, 1924. And I think gentlemen representing the other body ought distinctly to understand that that is the temper of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. That attitude is not confined to that side of the House. There are more Members on this side of the House who feel exactly as the gentleman from Tennessee does, that we should stop this thing unless that condition is complied with.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It ought to be so understood, so that it will have its psychological effect upon that rapidly moving body at the other end of the Capitol, that the House will not agree to this thing unless that proviso goes in.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the House passed this highly important measure after careful consideration in committee and thorough consideration in the House 14 months ago. It comes back to the House, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has suggested, in the last days of the session. Under almost any other circumstances and conditions than those that now exist the House would be justified in declining to act upon the measure. But the House can not take the odium of defeating this legislation when the odium, if the bill shall fail of final passage, must rest with the body that held it up without acting upon it for more than a year.

As to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], indorsed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], that the House provision should remain in the bill as to the time when the schedules shall take effect, I do not think there is a Member of the House familiar with the subject but who is determined that if the bill becomes a law—and we hope it will—it shall become a law with that provision in it; and if there be any doubt in the mind of anyone anywhere in regard to that, I hope the conferees on the part of the House will remove that doubt the moment they go into conference.

The House carefully considered that question when the bill was before the House. It is a logical, proper, reasonable provision for putting the law into effect in an orderly way and under the scrutiny of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is highly important that this bill should go to conference in order that we may continue to do all that we can to expedite its passage. I hope that the conferees will be able to bring back to their respective Houses a fair, reasonable, workable bill. But, Mr. Speaker, for one I am of the opinion that the House will not be inclined to agree to any conference report simply because we are under the pressure of the last day. This legislation is too important to be placed upon the statute books in a half-baked, illy considered manner. I hope that we shall be able to crystallize it into law; but if we do, it should be in reasonable form, and it should contain the provision under which its schedules shall not go into effect until the House has had time to scrutinize their effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made the positive statement that the bonus bill is going to become a law applicable to the new fiscal year beginning July 1, 1923, regardless of action on this bill. The gentleman knows that under his bill—and we are all in favor of a proper reclassification—the gentleman knows that under his bill it was designed to take the place of the bonus; that when his bill became a law there should be no further bonus. The gentleman has made a positive statement that under no circumstances will he agree in conference to any reclassification bill which shall go into effect before June 30, 1924.

Mr. LEHLBACH. As far as the payment of salaries under it.

Mr. BLANTON. In that case the new Sixty-eighth Congress, even if it does not meet until December next, will have been in session seven months before any reclassification bill that has been passed by this Congress will go into effect. What is the necessity of agreeing so far in advance, and under such confusion as now exists, to something that even the gentleman from Illinois says he does not know what the effect will be upon the employees or the Treasury. If the Senate bill should be adopted, no one knows its effect either to the employees or the Treasury. We have given it no study and therefore I do not think we ought to thus go ahead in the dark, and I object.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill 8928 be taken from the Speaker's table, that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and acquiesce in the request for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. BLACK.

EXCHANGES OF PROPERTY.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13774) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to exchanges of property, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 1, 2, and 3: These amendments are clerical changes, and the Senate recedes.

On No. 4: This amendment makes effective on the passage of the bill, instead of January 1, 1923, as provided by the House, an amendment to section 202 of the revenue act of 1921. The Senate recedes.

On No. 5: This amendment allows a taxpayer to exchange, without taxable gain or deductible loss, stock owned by him in a corporation for other stock in the same corporation. It also strikes out of section 202 of the revenue act of 1921 a definition of "reorganization." The Senate recedes.

W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
OGDEN L. MILLS,
J. W. COLLIER,
W. A. OLDFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House unanimously. The Senate has receded on all the amendments. Unless gentlemen on the other side want time I will move the previous question. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 2984, for the relief of Thurston W. True.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to bill of the following title:

H. R. 2722. An act for the relief of W. W. McGrath.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 24, 40, and 54 to the bill H. R. 14408, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill H. R. 14435, making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill H. R. 14302, to establish and promote the use of the official cotton standards of the United States in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein and provide for the proper application of such standards, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill H. R. 14077, to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 87.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of H. R. 14408 (an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes) in the amendment of the Senate No. 72, concurred in by the House, to correct the date "March 2, 1917," wherever it occurs to read "March 2, 1907."

CREDITS AND REFUNDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13775, to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13775) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and, on page 2 of the House bill, line 16, after the word "taxpayer," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That if the taxpayer has within five years from the time the return for the taxable year 1917 was due, filed a waiver of his right to have the taxes due for such taxable year determined and assessed within five years after the return was filed, such credit or refund shall be allowed or made if claim therefor is filed either within six years from the time the return for such taxable year 1917 was due or within two years from the time the tax was paid"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "(b)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 3226 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 1318 of the revenue act of 1921, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'unless such suit or proceeding is begun within two years after the disallowance of the part of such claim to which such suit or proceeding relates. The commissioner shall within 90 days after any such disallowance notify the taxpayer thereof by mail.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13775) to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment is a clerical change, and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment provides that in the case of income, war-profits, and excess-profits returns for 1917, if the taxpayer has, within five years from the time the return was due, filed a waiver of his right to have the taxes for 1917 assessed within five years from the filing of the return, then a claim for refund or credit may be allowed if claim therefor is filed either within six years from the time the return was due or within two years from the time the tax was paid. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 3: The House bill allowed a claim for refund or credit of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes to be filed within five years from the time the return was due or within one year from the time the tax was paid. The Senate amendment strikes out "one year" and substitutes "two years," and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment provides that where a corporation owned by enemy aliens failed to pay Federal taxes, and the stock of the enemy aliens was seized by the Alien Property Custodian and purchased from the United States by a domestic corporation wholly owned by citizens of the United States, which corporation has paid the taxes, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall collect the taxes from the proceeds of the sale of the stock of the enemy alien and refund the amount thereof to the purchaser. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment makes a clerical change, and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment provides that a taxpayer may file suit for recovery of internal-revenue taxes within two years from the disallowance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of his claim therefor. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
W. C. HAWLEY,
J. W. COLLIER,
W. A. OLDFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the situation with reference to this bill is much the same as the other. The only amendment of any importance which the Senate made the Senate has receded from and left the bill in practically the same form that it left the House, except that one year more is given to taxpayers in which to apply for a refund under certain circumstances. Does the gentleman on the other side want any time? Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

ADMITTING FREE OF DUTY CERTAIN DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. J. Res. 422, permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to joint resolu- (H. J. Res. 422) permitting the entry free of duty of certain domestic animals which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
W. C. HAWLEY,
J. W. COLLIER,
WM. A. OLDFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
REED SMOOT,
A. A. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill permits, under certain circumstances, the free entry of animals taken over into Mexico for a short time to be returned free of duty. It passed the House with practical unanimity and the Senate has receded from its amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This, I understand, is the emergency free-trade measure referred to yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Tennessee so referred to it. I did not so consider it myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in 8-point type by printing an address delivered by me before the California State Federation of Labor convention at Long Beach, Calif., on October 3, 1922.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY HON. WALTER F. LINEBERGER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM CALIFORNIA, BEFORE THE CALIFORNIA STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR CONVENTION AT LONG BEACH, CALIF., OCTOBER 3, 1922.

"Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen of the California State Federation of Labor, I am indeed proud of the opportunity and privilege afforded me to-day in addressing this convention. No other assemblage gathered under American skies and under American environment, where 'the right of the people to peaceably assemble' is specifically guaranteed under our Constitution, can be quite so representative of these same people, which the framers of the Constitution had in mind, as those who are gathered here to-day representing, as you do, a cross section of the toiling masses of America.

"To the student of the Constitution of the United States, that sacred guarantor of our liberties, it is evident that the guiding principle of those who founded this great Nation of ours had ever in mind was the preservation of the blessings of liberty to the people. The very preamble of the Constitution itself bears significant evidence of this fact, for does it not recite, in words which have become immortal, that 'We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America'?

"In fact, my friends, the people themselves are not only the founders but the guarantors of the perpetuity of the Constitution itself, and without them no government is possible under the system laid down by those great Americans who first voiced to the world the new doctrine of 'Freedom and liberty under God and the Constitution of the United States.' The word 'people' appears in numerous places in the various articles of the Constitution, and no doubt can remain in the mind of anyone who will seriously study the document that our Government must be 'of the people, by the people, and for the people,' lest it perish from the earth.

"Therefore, my fellow Americans, my position is this: That the yardstick of conduct—whether in private or official life—no matter how high or lowly be the place which we may occupy in the scale of general human activities, or of national endeavor, we should adhere to the spirit and intent of the Constitution of the United States.

"I energetically oppose the viewpoint that our Constitution and laws are to be ignored by the rich and powerful and enforced only on the poor and weak. I qualify as un-American the idea that any officer of our Government, no matter how highly placed in the admistrative, judicial, or legislative branches, may violate the spirit or intent under the guise of seeming public necessity or pressure of motives, political or otherwise. No man who can not, upon serious reflection, say that the action which he proposes will assist us in 'forming a more perfect Union,' will promote and 'establish justice,' will 'insure domestic tranquillity,' 'provide for the common defense,' 'promote the general welfare,' and 'secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity' is as much out of tune with the Constitution of the United States as the bootlegger who walks the street plying his iniquitous traffic in violation of the eighteenth amendment. Whether these acts of violation and usurpation are committed by an Attorney General, who, by injunction, abridges in violation of Article I of the Constitution 'freedom of speech' or 'the right of the people peaceably to assemble,' or a Supreme Court judge who nullifies a child labor law on a plain technicality when this law has been passed by the direct representatives of the people in Congress assembled, or, as recently, where the United States Railroad Labor Board, by a false interpretation of the transportation act, deprives workers of a living wage, the effect is the same and the wrong only magnified by the prominence of the principals and the far-reaching effects of their acts.

"If, under our Constitution, we are to safeguard unto ourselves that 'life, liberty, and happiness,' which is our heritage under its provisions, would it not establish justice and promote domestic tranquillity for the United States Railroad Labor Board to accept, without further quibbling or delay, the declaration of principles submitted by Mr. Wharton, one of its members, which reads in substance as follows: 'The right of workers, including common laborers, to a living wage? In fixing wages, minimum rates of pay shall be established, which will insure the subsistence of the worker and his family in health and reasonable comfort'?

"Under section 307 of the transportation act of 1920, more commonly known as the Esch-Cummins bill, it is made mandatory on the part of the board that, along with other relevant circumstances, they shall consider 'the relation between wages and the cost of living,' and this declaration or instruction alone is sufficient evidence in the mind of any fair-minded person that the Congress which passed this bill certainly contemplated that the board in fixing wages would not attempt to fix the wages of any man at an amount which would be less than would be necessary to support him and his family in reasonable comfort, under existing conditions affecting the cost of living.

"When the 'hazards of employment,' which is also specifically mentioned in the transportation act, are taken into consideration, I would go even further and say that it was the intent of the Congress that the worker should be provided not only with a living wage, so that he may maintain life according to American standards, but that he may be enabled to lay aside a reasonable competence for old age or disability.

"I was not a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress which passed the Esch-Cummins bill, and had I been I should not have voted for it as submitted. While it contains some few good features, provided certain of its provisions are interpreted as it was the manifest intention of Congress that it should be, still the very fact that it is so imperfect as to permit of such dubious interpretations as those to which I have referred has proven that it is dangerous legislation and that it has fallen far short of the beneficial results prophesied for it by its sponsors.

"Another criticism which I have to make of it is that in permitting certain net interest rate guaranties on investment to take precedence over the so-called living-wage rights of the workers it enacts into legislation a principle to which I am fundamentally opposed, to wit, the priority of property rights over human rights; the first must always yield to the latter if we are to continue to maintain this beloved Nation of ours in a state of domestic tranquillity and secure to ourselves and our posterity the blessings of liberty and happiness vouchsafed to us by our forefathers.

"Since the legislation under which the Railroad Labor Board is functioning has failed so miserably, it is the duty of Congress without delay to repeal the existing law or to submit various amending acts to bring it in harmony with the views of all progressive-minded citizens, to the end that it may be a bulwark to our Constitution instead of a nullifying influence.

"To this accomplishment I pledge my support and influence through the medium of the Republican Party, of which I am a member.

"I make this declaration because I believe that constructive, progressive achievement in the national political sphere can be best obtained through party channels; I prefer to fight tooth and nail within my party for what is right and progressive, so that I may have a part in shaping its destinies and sharing its achievements, rather than to take part in demagogic exhibitions of omnipotence from without—the net results of which in the field of practical accomplishments are nil—lest it be the echo of rantings and ravings of impractical gentlemen of political mien who can not understand why they alone can not move heaven and earth, even as God created it.

"Remember, my friends, you who have created and perpetuated the great American Federation of Labor, of which this State organization is a branch, that in union there is strength. Organization for collective effort is a cardinal principle of your very existence; without it you can not function.

"So it is with Government—it can not function without party organization and responsibility. And while I would not presume to advise you, I am of the firm opinion that the interests which are dear to your hearts and to my heart, because we are all loyal American citizens, will be best served by having your friends and champions within, rather than without, the two great party organizations, which from time to time alternate in assuming the responsibility of directing the affairs of this great Nation.

"A notable example of the positions to which the champions of labor may rise is afforded by my friend, colleague, and fellow Republican, Hon. John I. Nolan, of California, member of the powerful steering committee in the House, and also chairman of the Committee on Labor in the same body.

"He has the respect and admiration of both parties and is of the timber of which Cabinet members are made. It is not too much to anticipate that he may some day be Secretary of Labor of the United States. What could he have accomplished as an 'independent' or an 'all things to all men' aspirant in the political field, with no set political principles or real party alignment? I leave you to supply the answer to my query.

"In passing, I am proud to have you know that my legislative record, particularly on all matters affecting labor, has had the unqualified indorsement of Mr. Nolan. I have received the same commendation from every other outstanding friend of labor in the lower House. While I did not come here to-day to discuss my own political fortunes in the present campaign or coming November elections, I have never had any doubt but that I would be given a square deal by those to whom I have given a square deal. The service which I have rendered to the cause of labor has not been mere 'lip service,' nor has it been rendered because I desired to court your votes or political support. It has been because the cause of the great laboring masses, forming as they do the vast majority of our people, is just and only when these are happy and contented can this Nation of ours flourish and progress as God intended. Patriotism, the highest of motives—next to obedience to God—should supply the incentive for a square deal toward all, and selfish and shortsighted is the man of wealth, worldly resources, and power who would deny to his fellowman that substance and degree of happiness which is the basis of the social instinct upon which society is builded and upon which the perpetuity of nations depends.

"May California and its Representatives in the National Congress continue to remain in the vanguard of progress, thereby justifying the evolution and betterment which we have attained, and in keeping with the spirit and conscience of the men and women who go to make up our citizenship.

"I have no patience and little toleration for the man of wealth who preaches the predatory doctrine that to the strongest should go the spoils in economic struggles. Their doctrine is often clothed in the guise of patriotism and their selfish motives are all too often concealed behind high-sounding and altruistic phraseology.

"I have no quarrel with the man of wealth per se, provided that it has been accumulated honestly and if he directs his resources toward a sympathetic and helpful solution of the problems which confront his less fortunate brother in labor and industry.

"I believe that labor and capital are the handmaids of progress, and that it behooves both to encourage a closer cooperation and understanding based upon mutual respect and a square deal toward each other as well as to society.

"Only thus can civilization be preserved; and the selfish man of wealth, who would wantonly override the inherent human rights of the many that the few may prosper, has not the right to call himself an American, and in reality is more of a Bolshevik than Lenin or Trotski, who have encompassed the ruin of Russia and estopped the development of free institutions in that great country for perhaps a century.

"I have no patience or sympathy with the I. W. W. or Bolsheviki here or elsewhere, and am proud to bear witness that the American Federation of Labor—through the unrelenting efforts of its venerable president, Samuel Gompers, that grand old man of labor—has practically purged all labor organizations which form a part of the federation of this undesirable, unpatriotic, and subversive element.

"In this he has had the active cooperation and assistance of labor leaders throughout the country. I am not unmindful of the terrific struggle which took place within labor for its control both during and immediately following the great World War. As a participant overseas in that great struggle, and as a member of that great peace-time organization of ex-service men and women—the American Legion—which feels itself in such close touch and sympathy with the ideals and aspirations of your organization, I want to here voice a word of praise for the contribution which patriotic American labor rendered in that great war to save civilization and make right the master of might, not only because of the fact that countless thousands of your organization entered the ranks of our armies but because you furnished your brawn and brains to help create and operate that vast industrial machine and to supply its army of toilers necessary 'to put it across.'

"In addition to these services you suppressed sedition from within your organizations and kept America safe for democracy at home while our armies, composed in great measure of your membership or their sons, laid low the head of the tyrant abroad.

"Hanford MacNider, national commander of the American Legion, only gave expression to the sentiments of the vast majority of the membership of the American Legion when he attended the recent national convention of the American Federation of Labor as their guest and in the magnificent address which he delivered said, in effect, that these two truly representative American organizations, the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor, representing, as no other two organizations do, great cross sections of the American people, should maintain in peace that close comradeship and association which was established in war, and that together the two organizations should take counsel in an effort to give solution to the great national problems which have followed as war's aftermath, no less than to give effect to the principles for which we fought and for which thousands of our comrades gave their own life's blood.

"Any question as to the patriotism of American labor demonstrates either the grossest ignorance or the grossest prejudice. I fought side by side in four of the major offensives and in various defensive engagements with literally thousands who were recruited from the ranks of organized labor.

"Their patriotism and valor was of the highest order, and our casualty lists of killed and wounded bear mute evidence of their sacrifice.

"The record of labor at home during the war needs no repetition here. The wages paid were hardly commensurate with the cost of living under war conditions, and the fact that thousands of new millionaires grew from the ranks of the profiteers and not from the ranks of labor is additional evidence, if such were needed, that our national disgrace rests not upon the soul or conscience of the soldier of industry any more than it rests upon the soldier who wore a uniform and carried a bayonet.

"The proof of the pudding lies in the eating, and it is a significant fact that no laboring man or group of laboring men or discharged soldier has as yet been investigated or indicted for profiteering during the war.

"I had the privilege of voting for the appropriation of a special fund of $500,000, during the session of Congress just closed, for the purpose of enabling the Attorney General of the United States to proceed without delay to the investigation and prosecution of the so-called war graft cases. It is the confident expectation of Congress and the American people that these archtraitors who have been guilty of this unpardonable crime may be speedily and properly punished by long prison sentences in addition to being forced to disgorge their ill-gotten gains.

"I believe in placing the horse before the cart rather than the reverse, and I am convinced that it was the duty of Congress to proceed by making the necessary appropriation to the Department of Justice for the work in hand rather than to plunge into a Congressional investigation which would hamper rather than promote the ends of justice.

"The Department of Justice is that executive department of the Government created for this very work, and it is not so much an investigation but action in the form of prosecutions that is required.

"I am informed that courts have been created and that prosecutions, and I hope convictions, will ensue at an early date.

"The Attorney General has been given a square deal, and the proposition is now squarely up to him with no opportunity for shifting responsibility. I think I was right in my vote, and I followed my honest convictions. I have confidence in the Attorney General in this matter, and I have confidence in President Harding.

"If the Attorney General shall fail to function in a reasonable length of time, I shall be compelled to lend my efforts to procure his resignation or removal through the proper constitutional channels. I have no apology to make to my critics "of the demagogic appeal" in the matter. I shall continue to use my best judgment and act progressively constructive in legislative matters rather than as an obstructionist. I shall keep my conscience and knowledge of the facts as my yardstick and act as I believe any one of my fair-minded constituents, like yourselves, would act if similarly placed.

"I claim no infallibility, and I find that those who do either are mentally dishonest with a view to the ballot-box returns or else otherwise promoved by an inordinate hankering for office or, to put it more charitably, 'know not whereof they speak.'

"If I continue in the next Congress I shall practice the same sincerity which I have attempted to embody in my address here to-day. I shall never stoop to misrepresentation or demagogic appeal. I shall never adopt any of the questionable expedients of the so-called professional politician to gain an end, political or otherwise, nor seek refuge in political subterfuge or misrepresentation.

"I desire to merit your support and commendation and shall strive to do so so long as it is not at the sacrifice of a principle. My politics shall be those of 'no politics,' and I believe that our minds and experiences, our mental outlooks, as it were, have been along sufficiently parallel lines to warrant me in feeling that we shall not find ourselves in any great disaccord on many, if any, of the paramount issues of the day.

"Because I stand so firmly for a square deal toward labor I am no less convinced that a square deal should be given to capital, as well as to those who have no specific connection with either. I have observed, however, that the man of means is pretty well able to look after himself in this day of organized capital, and it is because of the hopelessness of individual effort in the face of this same organized capital that labor should have and exercise the same privilege of organization; furthermore, it seems to me that another reason for labor organizations is that they devote their power and energies to helping the weak, whereas the strong are usually able to take care of themselves. I see no gulf between honest capital and honest labor which can not be spanned by the chords of human sympathy, mutual respect, and a rigid application of the golden rule to your associations and relationships.

"A fine example of this spirit of mutual helpfulness is exemplified by your presence here to-day in this beautiful home of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce. They recognize your worthiness and you recognize theirs. There is no place in America for class hatred or distrust if it can be honestly avoided, and to this end labor and capital alike should devote their best efforts.

"Now, there is another matter to which I wish to address myself, inasmuch as it has from time to time engaged the attention of serious-thinking citizens from the inception of our Government. This matter is a question of the limitation of the power and authority of the Supreme Court of the United States, which, since the setting aside of the child labor law, passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President, has brought this question back into the limelight of public interest more forcibly than at any previous period of our national existence.

"It is a question which statesmen must ponder and which mere politicians can not side-step or evade.

"Believing, as I do, that the Constitution of the United States means exactly what it says when it says that 'we, the people, * * * do ordain and establish this Constitution,' and that the first clause of this same Constitution declares explicitly that 'all legislative power shall be vested in Congress,' I can but view with alarming disapproval the acts of judicial or administrative authorities which operate to nullify the legislative dictum of the people, expressed through their representatives in Congress.

"It is a situation which urgently requires a remedy, and such must be provided through the proper legislative channels in the National Congress.

"My own views in the matter can not be better expressed than by quoting that venerable California statesman, ex-United States Senator Cole, who has just celebrated his one hundredth birthday at his home in Hollywood. No one who knows Mr. Cole could ever accuse him of being a radical, although his entire career has been devoted to constructive progress in government and politics.

"He has this to say in his Memoirs, published not recently but back in 1908:

"'The first clause of the Federal Constitution declares that "all legislative power shall be vested in Congress." In like manner the executive power is vested in the President of the United States and the judicial power in the courts. The three departments were designed to act independently of each other. This could hardly have been more clearly indicated. For either, therefore, to exercise the functions of another must be usurpation; nevertheless such usurpation repeatedly occurs. The department most frequently encroached upon is the legislative.

"'The people have too often viewed with indifference these encroachments. The executive branch—the President or department minister—has at times taken a free hand in shaping legislation when the interest of a favored few was at stake or when corporate authority was likely to be invaded. Instances are remembered when the veto power was invoked to thwart needed legislation which happened to disagree in some unimportant particular with the personal views of the Executive.

"'In the early years of the Republic the veto was rarely, if ever, called into play, unless to enable the legislative body to correct some slip, inadvertance, or mistake. When properly exercised, the veto is doubtless a wise provision, but it has been grossly misused by some of our Executives. Certainly it was never intended to afford an opportunity for the gratification of the mere whim of the President or to enable him to promote his individual opinions.

"'It has come to pass that legitimate work of the legislature, the only lawmaking power, has been defeated entirely by the arbitrary action of another department. Such abuse could never have been anticipated by the framers of our fundamental law, the language being "all legislative power shall be vested in Congress." The specific duty of the President is not to defeat, but to see that the legislative work is effectual, even though it may not accord with his notions.

"'But not by the Executive alone are acts of Congress defeated. The use of the veto for that purpose has found a parallel in the freedom and frequency with which the Supreme Court has assumed to nullify laws on the ground of unconstitutionality. The court claims the exclusive right to interpret the Constitution and to ascribe unlooked-for meanings to that instrument; and, moreover, to give their construction, however arbitrary, the full force of a law of the land.

"'As a matter of fact, each individual employed by the Government, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial departments, is required to subscribe to an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, an obligation not less binding upon one than upon another, not less upon a Member of Congress than upon a Justice of the Supreme Court. Each swears to support the Constitution of the United States as understood by himself and not as understood by some one else, and surely the Constitution is not so cabalistic and abstruse that persons of ordinary understanding and capable of performing the duties of public office can not comprehend its meaning. On the contrary, it is remarkable for its simplicity and perspicuity. It would be most unreasonable to require an oath for its support were its meaning even doubtful.

"'The Constitution is essentially the creation of the people. Its opening declaration is, "We, the people, * * * do ordain and establish this Constitution." It was created by the people for themselves, and no person or tribunal can be presumed to have a better comprehension of its meaning and purpose than the immediate Representatives of the people assembled in the two Houses of Congress.

"'Whether wise or not, their interpretation must be conceded to be more in harmony with the views of the common people and with the purposes of the Constitution than that even of the highest court, the members of which are selected for their legal training. These exalted functionaries on the Supreme Bench, owing to their life tenure of office, are as far removed from popular influence as possible and, being but men, are much more likely to sympathize with the powerful than with the weak. Naturally, too many of them, by refinement of reasoning in the construction of the Constitution, favor the few as against the many, the rich as against the poor.'

"When one considers that all the foregoing was written by ex-Senator Cole nearly 15 years ago and that his conclusions were principally based upon his legislative experiences and observations as a Member of both the upper and lower Houses of Congress from 1863 to 1872, we see that this is an old and underlying problem of our system of government. That great American, Theodore Roosevelt, when President of the United States, tried to remedy this same situation when he sponsored the recall of judicial decisions, particularly those which outraged the public conscience.

"I quite agree with Mr. Cole in his observations as well as his conclusions, and I am sorry that he did not go further and supply a remedy for the evil, which of late has become increasingly evident to all who are not so blind as to be unable or unwilling to see.

"I believe the remedy to lie along constitutional legislative lines, to be enacted by the people themselves through their representatives. The President and the Members of Congress are each individually and collectively subject to removal by the people, who at stated intervals exercise the referendum in elections which may result in the recall or confirmation of the individual or party in office.

"Supreme Court judges being appointed for life, no such recall or referendum can be exercised.

"To that extent their position, so far as tenure of office is concerned, is inviolate, but I do not believe that they should continue to occupy, so far as their opinions concerning the interpretation of constitutionality of laws enacted by Congress is concerned, that impregnable position which by practice they have arrogated unto themselves.

"The Executive can be overridden in his veto by a two-thirds vote of both Houses, and I believe that the judicial branch of our Government should not be exempt from similar limitations; a lack of limitations confers upon it greater prerogatives than those enjoyed by the Executive.

"I am, therefore, in favor of the necessary legislation to give Congress, by a two-thirds vote, the right to override the decisions of the Supreme Court affecting the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress. I believe this is in the interest of a greater balance of power between the three great departments of our Government, and while it is anticipated that it will cause Congress to exercise the greatest care and diligence in the preparation and passage of legislation, it will in the last analysis keep the power in the hands of the people, through their representatives, and prevent any tendency toward the creation in our Republic of a tyranny of the judiciary, which, unbridled, may be likened unto the tyranny of kings.

"A child-labor amendment may then be added to our Constitution with solid assurance that the children of the land shall receive equal consideration with that buttery and plebeian article of food, oleomargarine.

"This and other progressive legislation must be written into our laws if we are to keep abreast of the times in which we live. I hope the day is not far distant when our Presidents, under a properly safeguarded constitutional amendment, may be nominated and elected on a party ticket by the direct vote of the people. Thus would the last barriers of privilege and bossism in party politics be broken down.

"The direct primary is the most sacred possession of the people and must be preserved at all costs, but it must have its imperfections corrected where they are found to exist, and I am now talking particularly about the California law—I do not care what party or set of men are responsible for those of its provisions which are politically unmoral and dishonest. I refer to the provision which permits a man to seek nomination and election as a member of a political party in whose principles he does not believe and of which he is not a member.

"It encourages political chameleonship and mental dishonesty among candidates, and is subversive of good government in the interests of the people.

"It provides a sickening spectacle from which the enemies of the direct primary law draw inspiration and hope for discrediting the whole system, and our law ought to be moralized by amending it in the coming legislature so that men in politics will be forced to practice the same honesty and sincerity before the people in seeking political preferment which men are called upon to practice in order to merit the respect of their fellow men in the ordinary affairs of life.

"Would the corner grocery storekeeper be justified in professing the religion of Jew, Gentile, and Pharisee, all at the same time, in order to draw patronage from all quarters?

"Let us have progressive honest members of all parties, but let us know where they stand, and let them seek their political laurels within the party of their choice and convictions, for 'he that assumeth to be all things to all men knoweth not from whence he cometh nor whither he goeth.'

"I am a Republican and seek your suffrage as such and nothing else. I am proud of my party and its achievements. It has its reactionary and radical elements, just as labor and capital have, and just as other parties have—and it is made up of human beings with all the imperfections and frailties of human nature. I would not be honest with you if I did not admit as much—I have come here to-day to meet you as men and as fellow citizens—on the level—and I am going to talk to you on the square—right down the line.

"I shall not pose as a high brow nor perform before you as a demagogue; such action would not only reflect upon your intelligence but would also bring into question my own. We have not accomplished all we promised or set out to accomplish; but, on the whole, the batting average of the Republican Party in power, individually as well as collectively, I believe you will admit, has been good.

"To substantiate these conclusions I desire to point toward some of the things which the Republican Congress and Republican administration have accomplished since they came into power.

"Cut the Nation's debt $1,000,000,000 in one short year.

"Cut appropriations for expenditures of the Government below what they were for the year ending June 30, 1921, by over $1,000,000,000.

"Cut actual expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, more than $3,000,000,000 below what they were for the year 1920.

"Cut taxation for this year more than $818,000,000.

"Cut the pay roll of the Government, including Army, Navy, and civilians, down from 1,186,052 persons—which it was in 1920—to about 770,000 for this fiscal year.

"Passed the budget law which had been vetoed by President Wilson in the previous Congress, and which has placed the Government on a business basis and been responsible for saving millions upon millions of dollars of the people's money.

"Brought the selling value of Liberty bonds up to above par, adding about $3,000,000,000 to the value of these issues, which are still largely owned by the patriotic citizens of small means,

"Given to the country a tariff bill which will protect American labor and industry by equalizing the difference between the cost of production, under decent living conditions, for the American workman and the pauper labor of Europe and Asia.

"Revived the War Finance Corporation which has loaned—not appropriated—over $350,000,000, and has proved to be of immense value to the farmers of the country and kept down the price of essential foodstuffs to the laboring classes of the great cities.

"Initiated and led in the great limitation of armament conference, which is the greatest step yet taken toward world-wide peace, and its results have not only already stopped the 'rumors of war' here on the Pacific but will save this country of ours untold billions of dollars which we would otherwise expend in the mad race of naval armaments.

"I think this is a record of which I and those among you who are Republicans may well feel proud. I know that my party has been criticized from within as well as from without, constructively as well as destructively, but I have more confidence in the sincerity of that which comes from within and is constructive than I have in the other kind, which is of the 'Irish confetti' or brickbat kind and usually comes from without.

"It usually comes from the Democrats or their political attachés, sailing under various 'isms' or 'ists,' and is calculated with astute concern in the returns of the ballot box. The mandate of 7,000,000 majority given by the American people two years ago has on the whole been well exercised, and I do not believe they will desire to change it.

"Labor must continue to have its friends in Congress, sitting as members of the dominant party, and quite frankly I solicit your support as such, as a Republican, on the Republican ticket in the coming elections.

"The criticism which I have voiced here to-day is as an American rather than as a partisan. I have intended that it be constructive and in consonance with the progressive ideals for which I and my constituents stand.

"I propose to assist in bringing about these corrective changes through the medium of the great Republican Party—founded by Lincoln, perpetuated and strengthened by Roosevelt, and now presided over by President Harding—to the end that the great principles upon which it is builded may prevail for the upbuilding of our country and the happiness and prosperity of all of its citizens.

"If the people of this district do not desire a progressive dry Republican to represent them in Congress, I am not the man to keep in Congress. My opponent, of course, claims to be progressive as well as dry, and I do not question the latter; as to the former, he sat and voted with the Democrats and now is running as one, although he did but recently 'recommend himself very highly' for the Republican nomination, but his appeal fell on deaf ears so far as the Republicans were concerned.

"Quite a paradox—he does not consider us good enough to belong to, yet he appealingly and most persistently tries to garner in good Republican votes against a perfectly good Republican candidate. I admit it myself. Yet for publicity my opponent challengeth much.

"Now, in conclusion and quite briefly, I want to say to you, if you have not already surmised it, that I do not look with favor upon government by injunction, either temporary or permanent. If the laws of the land be infringed let the law take its course, but let not the constitutional rights of free-born American citizens be invaded. According to my way of thinking no man, not even the Attorney General of the United States, has a right to ask that our court processes be made independent of statutory restrictions and constitutional limitations, so that they may become responsive to his conceptions of necessity or convenience.

"It is a far-reaching precedent which he proposes to establish. Let the legal practices of our forefathers and something of their homely fair-mindedness and justice still prevail; let the jury system and the constitutional rights of our citizens still remain inviolate, no matter what the seeming justification to satisfy opinion or mere form.

"I am not a lawyer, but this is my view of the matter as a plain American, and I am sure it is concurred in by millions of others whose stock, like my own, came to this country long before the American Revolution.

"Just another word and I am done. I would not feel that I had fairly covered the field of national questions were I not to express my views to you on law enforcement, and particularly in regard to the eighteenth amendment and Volstead Act. I do not raise this issue in any sanctimonious or 'holier than thou' attitude, but, as a fellow citizen addressing a body of his peers, I want you to know that I am for the strict adherence to the Constitution of the United States and all the laws which are provided for the enforcement of its provisions.

"I am uncompromisingly opposed to any letting down of the bars in favor of light wines and beers, and have voted and worked to this end during my present incumbency and will continue to do so in the future. I am for this legislation for moral, sociological, and economic reasons, and I believe that its enactment has been the greatest boon to the laboring classes and their dependents of any reform in the world's history. I hope the Wright Act, coming up as a referendum measure on the November ballot, will pass. I want to see California ratify the eighteenth amendment and augment the power of the Federal Government with the police power of the municipal, county, and State governments to the end that the law may be rigidly enforced for rich and poor alike; that effect may be given to the Constitution; and last, but not least, that this country may be a better place for us, our children, and our children's children to live in.

"In conclusion—and I mean it this time—I want to thank you as a citizen of Long Beach for honoring us with your presence by having chosen this as your convention city for this year. Labor has had an outstanding part in the building of this beautiful city by the western sea. Some of your State and local officials live among us, and I can assure you that none of our citizens are held in higher esteem than these 'soldiers of industry' and their families who live in Long Beach.

"We are proud that they are our fellow Americans and we feel a particular patriotic thrill when we see your great organization gathered here to-day with 'Old Glory' hanging o'er. We know that you share in large measure not only in placing there those stars of white on a field of blue which represent the great galaxy of States, but that the white of its folds represents the purity of your patriotism, as the red of its stripes represents the crimson sacrifice of your own flesh and blood to preserve unsullied the principles and traditions of our beloved country, of which our flag is but the proud emblem.

"American institutions are safe so long as American labor is patriotic, and may God stay the hand and thwart the purposes of those who, by unfair dealing or oppression, would crush the Americanism out of American labor.

"That day will never come when this will come to pass, but were such a thing possible it would be a sad moment, not only for us but for the world. He who thinks otherwise is naught of a patriot.

"May your sessions be productive of great good, not only to your own organization but to others, and above all to America, which is the hope of the world. May you enjoy our sunshine and flowers, be cooled by our gentle sea breezes, bask in the smiles of our Long Beach maidens, and be showered by the good will and hospitality of the residents of this, our Long Beach, one of the finest cities, in the best district, in the best State of the best country on earth."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks I incorporated an article on interest by John B. Barnhill. This is done by request of parties interested in this subject, but I express no opinion on the merits of the article.

"MONEY"—INTEREST—THE NATION'S OLD MAN OF THE SEA—UNESCAPABLE UNDER THE PRESENT MONEY SYSTEM—JAMES HOLDEN'S REACTION TO THE FACTS OF EVERYDAY BUSINESS.

(By John Basil Barnhill, in the Dearborn Independent.)

[Editor's note: The following article is not presented with any purpose save to throw a light on "interest." Holden's reaction to the question in his proposal of land certificates may or may not be wise—on that we say nothing. The Dearborn Independent is not proposing any cut-and-dried solution. It is primarily interested in encouraging its readers to look the money question in the face. To this end it publishes articles from all angles.]

Many years ago I was in the business of lending eastern money to Kansas farmers. I loaned a million and a half dollars, and I watched those farmers sweat over their rich soil to pay the interest. It was my business to get that interest, so I watched them closely, and I know what it meant to them. Then one day it struck me as absurd that these men who owned their land, their horses, and their tools should have to hire the money with which to carry on their work. Why shouldn't they own their money, too? It was but another tool of their trade. I then discovered that Congress provides only a small fraction of the money that producers require to carry on production, and that the needless dearth of money forces the use of bank credit in commercial transactions.

In the foregoing words James Holden explained how he, a real estate agent and usurer, was transformed into a reformer and opponent of interest; like Paul of Tarsus, he was smitten to his knees by a great light; he saw the "vision splendid" of a liberated humanity.

The record of his struggles against poverty, apathy, and countless obstacles while fighting for the recognition of his remedy would transcend the bounds of human belief if one did not know that in every prophet is a Mother Calculus, which measures its joys by its sacrifices.

The inspiration was complete when Holden realized that all the banker does is to monetize the value of the farm. And as there must be an entering wedge to every movement, the prophet proclaimed his doctrine of land currency. The Government says that currency issued on gold shall be legal tender; Holden would add valuable land and other forms of wealth.

DOCTOR CRANE A CONVERT.

One of Holden's converts is a journalist, Dr. Frank Crane, who in a magazine article says:

"The proposal is to base currency, not on gold, which varies in quantity, but upon the most stable, get-at-able, and the most indestructible thing known, to wit, land. Let any man owning a piece of land, town or country, go directly to the Government, monetize—not mortgage—his land to it at 1 or 2 per cent, and receive 40 per cent of its value in Government bills, which shall be legal tender for everything. This land currency can be issued without disturbing present conditions and without introducing any new and debatable principles in finance.

In an indorsement of the Holden plan, Arno Dosch-Fleurot, at present European correspondent of the New York World, writes:

"Holden holds that the dearth of legal tender is the cause of poverty. According to Holden, the root of all evil is not money but the lack of money. He wants us to issue money on land because he feels land is safe backing. But his primary object is to create enough money to go around. We are always up against it for money because there is not enough money. The dollar is elusive because there are six owners of each real dollar. We can not get what does not exist. Five of us are bound to be disappointed. More than five—as it has worked out—are disappointed, because most of it has already been caught. We are compelled to borrow it of those who have been clever or canny enough to corner the scant supply. In course of time they have accumulated more than their share, and, if we want any of it, we must pay them for the use of it and help them to accumulate more. This process has been going on for centuries. In every new country it starts anew. That is why the wealth of the world concentrates in few hands, and the older the country the harder the conditions of life. Interest does it, and, as things stand, we must pay the interest annually on more than $30,000,000,000—thirty thousand millions—of bank credit substitutes for real (legal tender) money."

THE RAVAGES OF INTEREST.

The writer might have said that this tribute is paid to the banks by the people on the people's own money.

Paul Thieman, former editor of the Denver Post, in an editorial review of Holden's book, "The Disturbing Factor in Human Affairs," says:

"Holden's proposition is not humanitarianism; it is not confiscation; it is not socialism—it is something new and unique, though simple, that fits with the present laws and order of society. He traces the origin of all social ills to a fundamental cause, namely, to the ravages of interest. Interest, the unescapable. Unescapable under the present money system. Why unescapable? For the simple reason that all business is transacted with a circulating medium that is limited in amount, and no matter how much wealth you possess you must pay interest to the owners of the fixed circulating medium. Why, to be sure, whether it's the gold standard, free silver, or even the old Greenback Party idea, the same would be true, namely, a circulating medium for which interest must be paid. I saw clearly the distinction—the enormous and utterly complete distinction between wealth and money. I saw the startling point that while civilized society possesses wealth so vast that the figures mean something incalculable, it transacts business with a meager fraction of that wealth in the form of dollars of gold and silver. And this man in calm words was pointing out that the gigantic fabric of modern society was the victim of the rude money system of our barbaric ancestors.

"It was all so horribly simple. It was interest on top of interest, endless and everlasting. Fancy a hundred families on an island instead of millions of families on a continent! Fancy that the 100 families had prospered and had plentiful herds and goods and luxuries but that they had limited themselves in exchanging the fruits of their labor and thrift to 10 pounds of gold or silver—or anything else—and every time they wanted to buy they would have to 'borrow' of the possessors of the 10 pounds of precious metals!

"And finally they used notes and obligations on paper, and to discharge these they had to pay 'interest' to the owners of the circulating medium. And one day the owners of most of the 10 pounds of gold or silver refused to lend it—then what? Why, of course, starvation and hardship in the midst of plenty, if the rule held inviolate.

"Apply that to the population of a continent and its vast and varied industries and you have the money system of Christendom."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll 312 Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

MICHIGAN BOULEVARD BUILDING CO.—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 5918) for a relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5918) for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
H. B. STEAGALL,
Managers on the part of the House.
ARTHUR CAPPER,
F. R. GOODING,
PARK TRAMMELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5918) for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co. submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amount is reduced from $31,931.69 to $18,931.69.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
H. B. STEAGALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Am I correctly informed that the Senate receded from its amendments to this bill, and that the bill now stands as it passed the House?

Mr. EDMONDS. The Senate advanced the sum awarded the Boulevard Co. by some ten or twelve thousand dollars and receded from the amendment and accepted the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14144) to limit and fix the time within which suits may be brought or rights asserted in court arising out of the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 302 of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 18, 1918, being chapter 20, volume 40, General Statutes of the United States, with Senate amendments, and move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14144, with Senate amendments, and moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 14401) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

PER DIEM ALLOWANCE TO OFFICERS OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13430) to amend section 370 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with a Senate amendment thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the bill H. R. 13430, now on the Speaker's table, with a Senate amendment thereto, and moves to concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

GRANT ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table Senate bill 4117, authorizing the closing of certain portions of Grant Road in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up from the Speaker's table Senate bill 4117, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close, vacate, and abandon so much of Grant Road as lies between Reno Road and Connecticut Avenue NW., upon the acquisition by the District of Columbia by dedication, purchase, or condemnation of the land lying within the lines of Davenport Street between Reno Road and Connecticut Avenue, and within the lines of Thirty-sixth Street between Davenport Street and Connecticut Avenue, as laid down upon the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia, the title to the portion of said Grant Road so closed and abandoned to revert to the abutting property owners.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell a tract or parcel of land owned by the District of Columbia, numbered for purposes of assessment and taxation as parcel 46 over 20: Provided, That said tract or parcel of land shall not be sold by said commissioners at a price less than the assessed value thereof: Provided further, That the money so realized shall be expended in the purchase of a playground or school site.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-six Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 308 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

REORGANIZATION OF CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4245) to provide the necessary organization of the customs service for an adequate administration and enforcement of the tariff act of 1922, and all other customs laws, with an amendment thereto reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to appoint, pursuant to the civil-service laws and regulations, fix the compensation, and prescribe the duties, when not otherwise defined by law, of one director of customs (in lieu of chief, division of customs), two assistant directors of customs (in lieu of two assistant chiefs, division of customs), one director, special agency service of the customs, and one assistant director, all with headquarters in the District of Columbia. The director of the special agency service and assistant director shall be officers of the special agency service familiar with the statutory and prescribed duties of that service.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized and directed to appoint deputy collectors, deputy comptrollers, deputy surveyors, deputy and assistant appraisers, examiners of merchandise, inspectors, and such other customs officers, laborers, and other employees as he shall deem necessary, prescribe their designations and duties when not otherwise defined by law, and fix their compensation. He is authorized to appoint special agents of the customs service in number as now provided by law and fix their compensation, and to appoint and fix the compensation of such number of customs agents as he may deem necessary, all of whom shall perform their duties as defined by existing law or prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the immediate supervision of the director, special agency service of the customs. He shall likewise appoint and fix the compensation of the clerks and other employees of the Board of United States General Appraisers. The appointment of such customs officers and employees shall be made pursuant to the civil-service laws and regulations upon the nomination of the principal officer in charge of the office to which such appointments are to be made.

SEC. 3. That the collectors of customs, comptrollers of customs, surveyors of customs, and appraisers of merchandise shall each, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, appoint a customs officer familiar with the customs laws and procedure, to act and be known as the assistant collector, the assistant comptroller, the assistant surveyor, and the chief assistant appraiser (in lieu of the special deputies), and the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix their compensation. The collector of customs at the port of New York shall also, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, appoint a customs officer qualified in the law and familiar with customs procedure, to act and be known as solicitor to the collector, whose compensation shall likewise be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That in case of a vacancy in the office of a collector of customs, comptroller of customs, surveyor of customs, or appraiser of merchandise, such assistant collector, assistant comptroller, assistant surveyor, or chief assistant appraiser shall give bond when required, act as such officer, and receive the compensation of such office until an appointment thereto has been made and the person so appointed has duly qualified. Whenever a vacancy occurs in the position of such assistants, chief assistant, and solicitor to the collector, herein provided for, it shall be filled, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the promotion or transfer of a trained and qualified customs officer, and the assistant, chief assistant, and solicitor to the collector so appointed shall continue in office and shall not be reduced or removed except for cause and in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

SEC. 5. That all customs officers and employees, including customs officers and employees in foreign countries, in addition to their compensation shall receive their necessary traveling expenses and actual expenses incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty and away from their designated station, and when transferred from one official station to another for duty may be allowed, within the discretion and under written orders of the Secretary of the Treasury, the expenses incurred for packing, crating, freight, and drayage in the transfer of their household effects and other personal property, not exceeding in all 5,000 pounds.

SEC. 6. That the compensation of all customs officers and employees, including the director and assistant director of customs, herein provided for, and the expenses authorized by section 5 of this act, shall be paid from the appropriation for the collection of the revenue from customs.

SEC. 7. That section 1 of the act entitled "An act fixing the compensation of certain officials in the customs service, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1909, is repealed. Except in the case of laborers, no compensation fixed under this act shall be greater than 30 per cent in excess of the limitations of existing law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COLLIER. I demand a second.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill is simple in character and easy to understand, but nevertheless it has far-reaching effect in the way of a sounder administration of the customs service and in the way of remedying a great injustice which now exists. In order to understand just what the bill accomplishes it is necessary to understand the present situation. Mr. Speaker, may I suspend? I think I am interfering with the conversation of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the distinguished gentleman should have a quorum here, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 307 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The motion was not put on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama objects to dispensing with further proceedings under the call. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 27.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, because there is no quorum present on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call has just disclosed the fact that there is a quorum and no business has been transacted except the attempt to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. POU. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Thirty-nine gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call has just disclosed there is a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order respectfully that the yeas and nays are demanded by one-fifth of the Members present. Thirty-nine Members arose, and if there should not be five times 39 present, 39 would be a sufficient number, and I ask for a count of the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call just disclosed that 307 Members are present. Thirty-seven gentlemen arose demanding a roll call.

Mr. BLANTON. It is very evident there are not 307 present now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, to properly understand this bill I remind you of the fact that to-day the Secretary of the Treasury fixes 95 per cent of the salaries in the Treasury Department subject to certain maximum limitations imposed by law, and that except for deputy appraisers, deputy collectors and employees of that class, and the heads, of course, such as the collector, he fixes the salary of all other employees. Now, what does the bill seek to accomplish? In the first place, it takes these employees from outside of the classified civil service and puts them in the classified civil service, which is in line with the best civil-service reform. There is another great advantage in that it gives to the examiners, who are the most important men in the Customs Service because the Government has to rely on their judgment to pass on millions of dollars worth of merchandise, hundreds of millions; every year it gives them the opportunity of ultimate promotion to an executive position with a salary commensurate with their work. In the second place, it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion may increase the existing limitations provided by law by 30 per cent. Now, the purpose of that is to render the whole salary list more flexible and to permit in certain individual cases an increase to men who are worth to the Government every year three or four times what the Government is paying them and who could get three or four times what the Government is paying in private employment. I refer to the examiners in particular.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Briefly; I have only five minutes.

Mr. YOUNG. It does not mean all are going to be increased 30 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. It does not mean that all, of course, are going to be given the increase of 30 per cent, but it does mean in certain cases where men are of extraordinary value to the Government because of their unusual knowledge of the value of merchandise to give them to the extent of 30 per cent an increase of salary in an effort to retain them. And how important this is is indicated by the fact that in the course of the last year the Government out of some 120 of these employees lost 22 of its best examiners by reason of its inability to increase their salary adequately.

Finally, I come to what I consider the third most important provision of the bill. The limitation on the salaries of ordinary laborers is what it was 50 years ago, fixed at $840. I submit to this House that such a salary paid by the United States Government is literally indecent. There is not a man with a family in the city of New York or Philadelphia or Boston, or in any of the great cities, who can support a family on $840, and if this is true the Government of the United States is paying starvation wages to these men.

But there is another side to it. The salaries of laborers in these great cities are fixed by the economic conditions which govern in those cities and which fix the salaries or wages earned by laborers in other lines of industry. The result is that the United States Government to-day is obliged to take the cripples, the halt, almost the blind, to perform its work, and with the increasing labor shortage, which any man can see, I prophesy that it will shortly be literally impossible in a city like New York to obtain labor sufficient to carry on the work of the Government.

There is another great disadvantage which applies to all inadequate salaries. These men take fees or tips from private individuals to supplement their inadequate resources.

Now, there are other minor features of the bill which I would be willing, of course, to go into and explain if there were time, but I have got only five minutes. This bill comes to us from the Treasury Department with the strongest kind of recommendation that it do pass. It is desired to increase the efficiency of the service and enable the United States to do justice to its employees. Gentlemen suggest that it necessarily will increase the amount of money expended. I say it does not create a new position. It does not in any way change the situation, so far as the money is concerned, because the money expended by the Treasury Department will be, as to-day, limited by the amount appropriated by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. MILLS. I say the money expended by the Treasury Department is simply limited by the amount appropriated by Congress. Congress in the future, as it does to-day, will fix the amount to be expended by that department. But if this bill passes the Secretary of the Treasury, within the amount provided by Congress, will within certain definite limitations be able to fix the salaries of men in accordance with their ability and in accordance with the service rendered to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. This is a very important matter we are considering, and we should have a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina withhold that point for a moment?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will withhold it a moment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes in the midst of this in order to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is the last day of the session. Gentlemen, of course, understand that it takes a certain amount of time to enroll bills and put them in shape where they can receive the signature of the Executive. The time that is left is not sufficient to permit any very great number of bills passing and reaching the stage where they can be signed and become laws. I think it would help things very much if the Speaker pro tempore could, within a little while, lay before the House the program that he intends to follow for the rest of the day; that is to say, who is going to be recognized for suspension. Of course, so far as unanimous consents are concerned, that it is not important. I think if the House could have that information—could have the program before it—we might expedite matters very much.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. POU. Does not the gentleman think we could expedite matters very efficiently if the agreement should be carried out that was made with me to follow immediately after the farm credits bill and not have it broken?

Mr. MONDELL. What is that? I do not know what that is.

Mr. POU. The agreement as to the $10,000,000 boll weevil nitrate revolving fund bill, to which the Committee on Rules gave a unanimous report.

Mr. MONDELL. It has no more to do with the boll weevil than with the potato bug. Why does the gentleman give it a name that does not apply?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not answer the gentleman's question, but I do not know about that agreement. But I do think it would be quite desirable, if possible, if we might have—I do not ask it now—if we might have, in the course of half an hour or so, the program laid before the House, in so far as the Speaker pro tempore is able to do it. I realize, of course, it would have to be conditional, because there are matters coming up that the Speaker pro tempore would be bound to give recognition to, as, for instance, conference reports.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, you would not agree that this filibuster would stop, even if the program was presented, unless it had on it the things you desired or had off of it things that you did not want to have considered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not heard anything about a filibuster or anything of that sort. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNYDER. I was wondering whether, even if the program was presented, we would be permitted to go on.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A quorum ought to be here to do business. I have not heard anything about a filibuster. The gentleman from New York may have.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a constitutional requirement, that there should be a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] withhold his point of order?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will withhold it for a moment. I will withhold it, if the gentleman from Wyoming desires to make a statement, for the time being.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as the power of recognition rests with the Chair under suspension, the Chair must determine what gentlemen shall be recognized and what measures are to be considered.

My own view of the situation, so far as I have any influence over it, is that we should endeavor to dispose of the important and essential public business, bills of a public character that must be disposed of, or at least should be disposed of to avoid the necessity of an extra session.

I am in hopes that we may agree on a farm credit bill; I hope before we adjourn we may agree on a reclassification bill. I hope that before we adjourn that matters between the House and Senate of importance and of a public character may be disposed of—that all the bridge bills may be passed. I think it would be a little difficult for the Speaker to say at this time just what business would be taken up—that is, to enumerate all the bills that are to be taken up. I do not think I should have very much disagreement with the gentleman from Tennessee as to what ought to be considered in this time. Frankly, I do not think that the bill referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] should be taken up and considered. I do not believe it is wise legislation, and I do not see how an opportunity can be given to consider it without setting aside other important matters.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, about a week ago a hearing was had by the Rules Committee on a joint resolution which had been unanimously passed by the Senate providing an appropriation of $10,000,000 to be used by the President of the United States in furnishing nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate for the purpose of meeting the boll-weevil menace. The measure, as I have just said, passed the Senate unanimously, was unanimously reported from the Committee on Agriculture, and the Committee on Rules of the House unanimously reported a rule giving the resolution privileged status. I was assured on several different occasions by the chairman of the Committee on Rules that in so far as he had the power the rule would be presented to the House immediately following the disposition of the farm credits bill. Now it appears that that agreement is not to be carried out, and the House is to be denied a vote on it.

Mr. MONDELL. The farm credits bill has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. POU. The understanding was as soon as the farm credits bill came to a vote in the House the $10,000,000 revolving fund was to be considered. The gentleman now in the chair, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, will not deny that statement. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is not fair treatment. Gentlemen have the right to vote as they see fit, of course; but it is nothing short of tyranny to use the power gentlemen possess because of their official position to prevent the matter coming to a vote before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. How about Cape Cod?

Mr. POU. That has nothing to do with the matter about which I am speaking.

Mr. MONDELL. How about Mount Weather?

Mr. POU. I have not yielded, Mr. Speaker. Cape Cod has nothing to do with the question under discussion. If gentlemen want to assume that position, all well and good, but I give notice that we are going to resort to such measures as we deem fair, out in the open, to force the Republican side of the Chamber to carry out their agreement if we can do so. [Applause.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were 132 ayes and 23 noes.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Echols	Larsen, Ga.	Rogers

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 298 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 177, noes 8.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

BONUS TO CIVIL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14435) making appropriations to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14435, the bonus bill, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly state the effect of these amendments?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill providing for the $240 annual bonus. The Department of the Interior in reporting the number of people they had on their pay roll reported a number less than they really had, and they sent up a subsequent report which showed the necessity for adding $12,560 more to the bill, which is incorporated in the Senate amendments. That is all there is to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

W. W. M'GRATH—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.
ARTHUR CAPPER,
F. R. GOODING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amount is increased from $180.50 to $459.50.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

VALIDATING PAYMENT TO NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentlemen on the other side to yield some of their time.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill first came over from the Senate the minority and several other members of the committee were disposed to object to it, and did object to it in the form in which it came, because there was absolutely no limitation upon the amount by which the salaries could be raised by the Secretary of the Treasury other than the amount of money appropriated in a lump sum for that purpose. However, the bill has been amended in such a manner that it is now satisfactory to us. We believe that it is a bill of much importance to the Government at this time and that it will enable the customs officials to function in a much better way. Therefore the committee has made a unanimous report, and we are satisfied, so far as the minority is concerned.

There is one thing to which I invite attention, and that is that it puts deputy collectors and appraisers under civil-service regulations, which we think is desirable, and as there is a lump-sum appropriation only so much money can be expended. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] stated, I can not find where this bill increases the appropriation. It simply permits the Secretary of the Treasury to rearrange certain positions. Some men doing technical work, I understand, are receiving salaries that are utterly inadequate, and it is claimed that the laborers are being paid an inadequate compensation. A great deal of very necessary work has to be done by them, and we have not been getting the kind of labor we think we can get when this bill is passed. There is no limitation upon that. I do not care to take up any further time of the House on the bill, and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, as we come to the close of this Congress I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to express to all the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle my appreciation, as a new Member, of the courtesies which have been extended to me by those who have been here a longer time.

At this time I wish to say a few words on a point which I think is very important. I believe something will be developed to correct what seems to be an apparent miscarriage of justice at the present time under present conditions. I am not prepared to-day to suggest the actual remedy, but when the next Congress meets I believe it will be taken up and some remedy worked out.

I refer to the way certain individual Members, making what I consider wrongful use of the power vested in them on account of their positions of importance and authority, have arbitrarily stood themselves as stumbling blocks in the way of some meritorious pieces of legislation, thereby blocking consideration by Congress of legislation desired and duly reported out by committees, and upon which the representatives of the people here have really wanted to take action.

We have had here before this House for some time a comprehensive report from the Committee on Military Affairs with respect to a great question of really national importance. A short time ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, stood before the House Committee on Rules and implored the chairman of the Rules Committee to give him a rule for the consideration by this House of this great question of the disposition of the properties at Muscle Shoals and the adoption of a definite policy in connection therewith. Mr. MCKENZIE on that occasion not only stated that the Military Affairs Committee had given careful and thorough consideration to this matter, but stated also that he believed the membership of the House had duly considered the subject and were ready to vote upon it.

In answer to a question from Mr. POU, of North Carolina, Mr. MCKENZIE stated to the Rules Committee that he was duly authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to come before the Rules Committee and formally ask for a rule for the consideration by the House of the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals, and he further stated that of all bills that he had to bring up from his committee, that the business of paramount importance coming out of his committee was undoubtedly the Muscle Shoals matter.

Mr. MCKENZIE very frankly stated that while he might not agree with all details of the Ford offer, he wanted the House to have the chance to express itself upon the proposition, because it was up to the House to decide, and not altogether up to him.

But there at the head of that table that day sat Mr. PHIL CAMPBELL, of Kansas, and his opposition and antagonism to the proposition was very clearly apparent. It was evidenced by his remarks to Mr. MCKENZIE, and also by his remarks to Judge ALMON, of Alabama, who also appealed to the committee to grant the rule for the consideration of the matter. Mr. CAMPBELL has all along been known to be opposed to the consideration by Congress of the Ford proposal for the Muscle Shoals properties.

Now, my friends, here is a man, chairman of the Rules Committee, already repudiated at the polls by his own party, sitting up here denying the prayers of the farmers of this Nation and failing to carry out the expressed will of a great committee of this House by a misuse of his powers as such chairman. [Applause.] And just here I want to call attention also to the actual words of the distinguished leader of the majority party in this House.

On the 25th day of August, 1922, when the Muscle Shoals project was mentioned and briefly discussed on the floor of this House, Mr. MONDELL, the Republican leader, said:

> I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that this matter ought to be considered and settled by this Congress, and as soon as it can properly be done.

He said that it ought to be considered and settled by this Congress, and that was on the 25th day of last August. But that promise went for nothing. If Mr. MONDELL, the Republican leader in this House, after making that solemn declaration, had done everything within his power since the 25th of last August to get this matter before Congress, it would have undoubtedly been before Congress and some definite action had on it. As Republican leader he has done his part to block consideration of this question.

Mr. MONDELL is another one who was turned down last fall by his own people out in Wyoming. And now the prayers of the farmers of the Nation and of the citizens of all walks of life have been denied by these men, who themselves have been defeated and repudiated by their own people at home but who, under present conditions, are still here in Congress, in positions of authority, and misusing their power at the behest, or at least in accordance with what is the will and desire, of such giant interests as the National Fertilizer Association, the great chemical interests, the Chilean nitrate interests, the power company interests, and the aluminum interests of this country. And, by the way, let it be remembered that Andrew W. Mellon, the present Secretary of the Treasury, is one of the aluminum kings of the country, and he has the ear of the administration.

And here on yesterday another gentleman, also defeated by his people at the polls last fall [Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska], inserted into the RECORD a long statement which is nothing in the world, my friends, I tell you now, except the brief of the Alabama Power Co. on the proposition. He inserted their brief in the RECORD of yesterday.

Now comes to-day, and Mr. POU tells us here that the Rules Committee had unanimously reported a rule for this $10,000,000 revolving fund bill, providing for the purchase of nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate. Mr. POU tells us that he had had repeated assurance from Mr. PHIL CAMPBELL, chairman Rules Committee and Acting Speaker in the chair now, that this revolving fund bill should be allowed to come up in the House for consideration immediately following the farm credits bill. Now, we voted several days ago on the farm loan bill, and as yet the nitrate of soda and calcium arsenate $10,000,000 revolving fund bill has not been allowed to come up. Again, my friends, the farmers have been denied after a solemn promise had been given. And so we have here the spectacle of men, defeated by their own people at their homes, misusing their authority as leaders and turning aside the will of the people and actually thwarting the wishes of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object, on the same subject?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, as a part of my remarks I insert a telegram to Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, sent to him by N. S. Smith, ex-lieutenant, Eleventh Infantry, United States Army, and which is in protest of the failure of Congress to pass the so-called Bursum bill which provides for the retirement, under certain conditions, of disabled emergency officers of the Army.

This justifiable protest by ex-Lieutenant Smith is similar to protests that have been coming in on this subject from every section of the country. The bill in question is not what it should be, but as a matter of fairness and justice some legislation should have been enacted to retire disabled emergency officers of the Army upon the same basis as disabled regular officers of the Army. The emergency officers of both Navy and Marine Corps are retired as, of course, are the regular officers of Navy, Marine Corps, and the Army, so why should this one particular class, namely, the disabled emergency officers of the Army, be thus so unfairly discriminated against? It is not right; it is not justice!

The Republican ex-service men in the House caused a Republican caucus to be called for the purpose of trying to get the Republicans in the House to indorse this legislation and to order that it be brought up in the House for consideration. Sad to relate, it appeared that the Members of the majority party in this House were not even sufficiently interested to attend that caucus, so no quorum was present and nothing was done.

Shortly thereafter the Military Affairs Committee of the House tabled the bill. They killed it. The caucus of the Republican Party had not developed a quorum, showing that the party responsible for the legislative program in this Congress was not interested in this matter, so the committee killed the bill, leaving the existing discrimination stand against this one particular class of disabled officers.

It seems to me that the lack of interest shown simply indicates that in the minds of some people "the war is over."

I sympathize with the feelings of the sender of this wire, which is as follows:

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., February 28, 1923.

Congressman CLAUDE KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

It is beyond comprehension how Senators and Representatives in Congress can adjourn and go home with a clear conscience and peace of mind after having failed to do justice and grant relief by retirement to emergency officers sorely wounded in the service of their country through a controversy over a technicality as to how less than $1,000,000 of compensation shall be paid. Some of these men have died and others are dying for lack of proper attention and treatment, and some are in want while waiting for what is acknowledged by all as their just due. This message is written by a former officer who, though beyond the draft age, with a wife and family of three children, as well as a dependant mother, volunteered for service; went to France; was wounded; spent 14 months in a Government hospital; has just had a hospital bill of $400 to pay at a private hospital for treatment of wounds due also to a technicality, and who is facing another operation. Please have this statement read before the Rules Committee of Senate and House as a favor to me. It may have no effect, but it will give them something to take home with them. There is yet time if there is a will.

NORFLEET S. SMITH,
Late Lieutenant, Eleventh United States Infantry.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GERNERD].

Mr. COLLIER. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not here to find fault with a single man of this House or any leadership. I think this House has done remarkable work, and I desire to express to my colleagues my appreciation for the many courtesies that have been accorded me. There is not a man here who is not interested in the history of the rescue of the Liberty Bell.

With your indulgence, I wish to relate a story of historical value, which I am certain you will all be interested in knowing:

Mr. Speaker, among America's greatest and most sacred treasures is that of the old Liberty Bell, which, on the 4th day of July, 1776, rang forth the stirring proclamation of American independence to all the world. Conceived in the spirit of freedom, it was cast and dedicated to the principles of human liberty. Across its face were inscribed the prophetic words, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." Destiny cast its radiant shadows before it, for the bell was hung in the belfry of Independence Hall in August, 1752, nearly a quarter of a century before it proclaimed that fateful declaration, the realization of which was only to be achieved through the human sacrifices of thousands of American patriots.

Few Americans know of the great peril that threatened its destruction and the heroic measures that were taken to protect it for all posterity. It was after the Battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, that General Washington ordered the transfer of all military stores to Bethlehem, Pa. Even before that critical hour had arrived, the Pennsylvania assembly awoke to the gravity of the situation and passed a resolution on the 16th day of June authorizing the removal of all bells, as well as all the copper and brass, in the city of Philadelphia to some place of safety; the Liberty Bell was not taken from Independence Hall until after General Washington's order had been given. It constituted a part of the military train of 700 wagons, which carried the whole of the heavy baggage of the Army, which was escorted by 200 Virginia and North Carolina soldiers under the command of Col. William Polk, of North Carolina. That famous caravan proceeded along the banks of the Delaware River to Trenton, and from there traveled through wild and rugged country to Bethlehem, arriving there on the 24th day of September, 1777. After the military train had reached Bethlehem the wagon upon which the Liberty Bell was loaded broke down in the street.

The next day the bell was placed on the wagon of Frederick Leaser, who, together with John Jacob Mickley, escorted by a small guard of soldiers, brought it and the chimes of Christ Church, eight in number, to Allentown, where they were placed in the basement of the German Zions Reformed Church, where it was kept in hiding until the following spring, when the British Army evacuated Philadelphia. It was then returned to Independence Hall, where it was rehung in the belfry on June 27, 1778. [Applause.] This same church was converted into a hospital for the sick and wounded of the Revolutionary Army during the entire time that its membership kept their silent watch over the hidden treasure. Allentown was then a thrifty little town of 300 inhabitants, located but 6 miles north of Bethlehem on the banks of the Lehigh River. It was in these two towns that the supplies and baggage of the Army were temporarily stored, and where approximately 2,000 sick and wounded soldiers were cared for. This entire community was filled with military activities, for Allentown had works for the repairing of military arms, the manufacture of saddles, and scabbards for bayonets; it also served as a depot for military supplies and maintained a large prison dock, in which were kept the captured prisoners of war. Its people were intensely loyal to the cause of the Revolution, for 27 members of the congregation in whose church the Liberty Bell was secreted served as members of the Continental Army. What a responsibility the consistory of that church assumed, but John Griesemer, Nicholas Fox, Michael Kolb, John Miller, and Peter Rhoads were patriotic and God-fearing men who earnestly and courageously assumed this sacred task.

General Washington and the other leaders of the Revolution knew the character and loyalty of the people who inhabited this frontier country, and because of their great faith in their loyalty intrusted to them the protection of this priceless treasure. They were mostly Germans with a sprinkling of Scotch-Irish, Swiss, Dutch, and French Huguenots. They originally came from the Palatinate, from which Province they fled to escape the cruel persecutions to which they were subjected because of their religious beliefs. It was William Penn who in their plight offered them an asylum in Pennsylvania. Encouraged by his sympathy, thousands of them came to these shores, experiencing all the terrible hazards that a voyage across the Atlantic entailed in those dreary days. They were a thrifty people and soon became prosperous. They despised tyranny and oppression and vigorously opposed British rule. They naturally became champions of freedom and intensely supported the cause of American independence. Hundreds of them and their offspring were with General Washington at the Battle of Long Island, where under the command of Col. Peter Kichlein they stood alone fighting the overwhelming British forces as heroically as did the famous "Legion of the Light Brigade." Their valor and great sacrifices made it possible for General Washington to inaugurate his famous retreat. They proved their worth in every subsequent battle, for they were at Princeton, Trenton, Brandywine, and Germantown, and many of them shared with their comrades the untold hardships of the winter at Valley Forge.

What a rare and conspicuous part these sturdy citizens of Allentown played in that great and tragic drama, the American Revolution. By their vigilance they preserved that precious symbol of liberty for all time, enabling future generations to visit the shrine of American liberty and there in the presence of the Liberty Bell to rededicate themselves to the principles of liberty and human justice. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, from April 16 to April 21, next month, there will be held in Greenville, S. C., two conventions of nation-wide concern. They will be the annual meetings of the United States Good Roads Association and of the Bankhead Highway Association.

Greenville, with only 45,000 human souls population, is another one of "the biggest little cities in the United States," and I invite every one of you to come to attend those conventions. I guarantee that you will have a good time, because you will all be given the opportunity to make speeches. [Laughter.]

I want all of you who can and will come to be guests at my home. [Applause.] And when it overflows, the hospitable homes of my neighbors will be opened wide to you, because so long as I am in Congress no one of my friends shall ever pay a hotel bill in my home town. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, in a few hours this Congress will adjourn, and most of us will go home for a nine months' vacation unless the President should decide to call us back for an extra session.

During this time I am hopeful that the good people of Washington who are in authority will endeavor to enforce the law a little more fully than they have done heretofore. I am speaking particularly along the line of the use of the automobile. [Applause.]

People coming here from a distance say this is a beautiful city, with magnificent parks and handsome buildings, but human life is not safe here on the streets. We should endeavor to make Washington not only a city beautiful but also a safe place in which to live. This can be done by better enforcement of the law. I have ridden on the street cars a great deal since I have been here, and I have observed people driving automobiles, and I find that the motormen on the street cars in every instance endeavor to take care of the man driving the automobile and endeavor to take care of the man walking, but that the man driving the automobile in a great many instances puts the burden on the men driving the street cars of taking care of him, and puts the burden upon the man who is walking and makes him resort to running in order to get out of the way of the machine. In other words, they drive in a way that is careless.

I hope that the authorities of this city will do all that is possible to enforce the laws here, so that the people who come here will not only say that Washington is a city beautiful but they will say it is a safe city. [Applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.
Mr. McARTHUR. Even with all those great disadvantages of loss of life and limb, there are a great many gentlemen in civil life who would like to come and live here?
Mr. LANKFORD. Certainly; that is true, but many of them can not. When they do come on a visit, if ever, they should be protected and those of us who are sent here by our people as Members of Congress as well as all people living here should have the protection of the law.
It is to be hoped that when we return we will find a more decent effort to enforce law here, more safeguard thrown around people who walk on our streets and more courtesy between the people living here and visitors.
People visiting here go away saying, the city is beautiful in the extreme but there is such a disregard for law, such an absolute disregard for life by people using automobiles, such a desecration of the Sabbath, and the negroes are something awful.
Washington ought to be not only beautiful but decent. This city ought to be a model of law enforcement, instead of a city awful. Time is too limited to speak fully on these matters now. I hope to do so later. There is a slight improvement in enforcing laws against the would-be murderers at steering wheels of automobiles. I hope the courts will some day go the limit in favor of innocent people against the speed maniacs. Let the people plead for law enforcement and race segregation, and we may hope for a city beautiful and a city decent. I have pleaded and still plead for equal but separate accommodations for the races as being best for both. I do not mean to nag at anyone about this proposition, but I honestly believe that with race segregation the two races can live here on better terms. The South is right about the race question. I have never seen a white person from the North go South and get thoroughly familiar with the situation there who did not become fully convinced that the South is absolutely right about the race question and the North absolutely wrong. William J. Bryan is the latest noted convert on this subject. I have never known of a white southerner who came North and decided that the South was wrong about segregation of the races; in fact they become more convinced than ever that the North is wrong on the question of segregation. The northern negro is afraid that he will in some way admit the supremacy of the white race. I truly believe in the supremacy of the white race. I believe the white race gave us the greatest possible form of government. No other race could have added to it. This government of the white man was not helped when the negro began voting. He will not make it better in the future. I wish to refer in this connection to one suggestion made by a colored paper recently.
The Washington Tribune in its last issue mentioned my remarks of the 19th of last month and still opposes segregation of the races. This paper, though, is right about my belief. It says that I believe "that when this planet was created the Almighty personally turned it over to the whites."
Here is what I said in Congress on January 18, 1922:

He (the Almighty) took the dust of the earth and molded it into His own image, into the form of a man, and breathed into its nostrils His own creative, everlasting, immortal breath; and the image came forth a human being, a living soul, all dominating, all conquering, everlasting, eternal, immortal, a part of God Himself, a Caucasian, a white man; and God gave that first white man dominion over all things and told him to reach to the bottom of the sea and up to the highest skies and understand and know the mysteries of all time and space, and that first man, a white man, went forth to solve, understand, conquer, and know the universe in which he had been placed. And that first white man from that day to this has been the all-powerful, all-controlling, all-dominating man of the world. He has conquered the depths of the sea; he has flown like a bird through the very gates of the skies; he has whispered around the world in the twilight of a new era; he has weighed the moon, the earth, and the sun; he is solving and knowing and bringing under his subjection and dominion all the mysteries of life, of space, and of all the universe of God, and as time goes by he is learning to think, understand, and know the thoughts of the Almighty God of the skies.
Commissioned by the Great Creator, he is the governing power of the world and is gradually shaping the nations of this earth into the highest and best forms of government, and is the ruler and the supreme power of all other races, whether the yellow, the red, or the black. He is the all-controlling, all-powerful, all-dominating man of the world. He always has been and always will be to the end of time.
Forces of nature may oppose him, but he overcomes them. Other peoples, races, and colors of humanity may resist him, but of no avail; he marches onward, conquering, and holding his God-given supremacy.

[Applause.]

White supremacy is not oppressive tyrannical supremacy, but is compassionate, God-like supremacy exercised for the good of our Nation, the happiness of the human race, and the civilization of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for four minutes.
Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, you have heard with pleasure and recall with interest the history of the Liberty Bell and what it stands for. You have heard of the Constitution of the United States and what it stands for. The ringing of that Liberty Bell in Philadelphia and over the East is heard very indistinctly in the islands of the Pacific, particularly in the Hawaiian Islands, which constitute a Territory of the United States. Under the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States the American people solemnly declared that involuntary servitude could not exist in the United States or in any of its Territories.
To-day we have upon the calendar of the House, Joint Resolution 171, which violates at least nine positive laws of the United States and directly violates the Constitution of the United States. It provides that in the year 1923 we are to admit peon and contract labor into the Territory of Hawaii and put them under the condition that existed under the dominion of the Chinese in bygone days.
I want to call public attention to the fact that that resolution stands upon the calendar to-day. It ought to be stricken from the calendar instead of remaining there, to the end that the American people might know the exact attitude of this Congress. There is no possibility of the American Congress ever placing upon the statute books that resolution, which will permit 50,000 or more Chinese to be brought in under the old method to Hawaii to labor under bond—contract labor—involuntary servitude.
Mr. MONDELL. May I remind the gentleman that it will go off the calendar at 12 o'clock noon to-morrow?
Mr. RAKER. I want the public to know that it is on the calendar. It is on the calendar now.
Now, one of the conditions of the contract under which laborers would come to Hawaii contrary to the provisions of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution is as follows:

32. Should the laborer have a bad character and violate the rules successfully the employer shall report to the Commissioner of Immigration and shall consult him as to the kind of punishment to be inflicted.

That is a part of the contract that will have to be entered into between this Government and the Chinese Government when the laborer comes to Hawaii. The employer may consult the Immigration Commissioner as to the punishment to be inflicted upon these people.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.
Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection.
Mr. MacLAFFERTY. I object.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS TO NATIONAL GUARD, ETC.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes.
The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14077) to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7.
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 8, 9, and renumber section 9 section 5; and section 10 section 6; and agree to the same.

FRANK L. GREENE,
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
D. A. REED,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was this conference requested by the Senate?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Requested by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the Senate acted upon it?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The Senate has acted upon it, the papers are here, the Senate accepted it.

Outside of a validation section and putting those to whom pay had accrued on the same basis as those who had been paid, the Senate amendments allow a National Guard man who is injured on duty in camp at a Federal encampment not to get their pay after the encampment is over but to remain in the Government hospital, which he could not do before.

Mr. STAFFORD. That applies not only to the National Guard man but to the members of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I believe that is so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were 189 ayes and no noes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because it shows the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair counted in the neighborhood of 50 Members that did not vote at all, which, added to the 189, makes a quorum. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I congratulate the Chair on his counting ability. [Laughter.]

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there are six Senate bridge bills and seven House bridge bills on the calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that those bills may be taken up and considered at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take up and consider Senate and House bridge bills on the calendar, and consider them at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bills in their order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he will defer his motion for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I did not intend to allude to, but my attention has just been drawn to a resolution that is pending and which I hope will receive consideration. The political history of England is marked, as I recall, by at least three documents of outstanding interest—the Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, and the Act of Settlement. Correspondingly our political history is marked by three documents that are of primary importance—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the message of President Monroe to Congress enunciating the policy which has come to be called the Monroe doctrine.

The resolution to which I referred proposes that our Government shall take official notice of the anniversary of Monroe's message and arrange for some participation in a celebration of the fact that the message was sent to Congress on the 2d of December, 1823, 100 years ago. It was on that date that he proclaimed the views which represent the policy that bears his name [applause] and which has made for the peace of this continent and, in large measure, for the avoidance of war with European nations. [Applause.]

I trust that when the gentleman from Ohio presents the resolution, which, I understand, is not to carry any appropriation, but provides for the appointment of a commission made up of Members of the Senate and House and citizens, which will be able to take some active part in the matter of commemorating the great event which occurred a century ago, it will be adopted without objection. Monroe was a man of great qualities which he showed in each one of the many offices he occupied, and there could be no finer display of his intellectual vigor, his far-sighted wisdom, and his patriotic spirit than was embodied in the message in giving the Monroe doctrine to our Republic and the world. [Applause.]

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, N. DAK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bridge bill, S. 3580.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved June 5, 1920, to be constructed by the counties of Pembina, N. Dak., and Kittson, Minn., across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak., are hereby extended two and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUMPHREYS CREEK, SPARROWS POINT, MD.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (S. 4503) granting the consent of Congress to the Bethlehem Steel Co. to construct a bridge across Humphreys Creek at or near the city of Sparrows Point, Md.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Bethlehem Steel Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Humphreys Creek at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Sparrows Point, the county of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGING OF OHIO RIVER AT MOUNDSVILLE, W. VA.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (H. R. 14351) to authorize bridging the Ohio River at Moundsville, W. Va.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Marshall-Belmont Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation near the central portion of the city of Moundsville, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, S. DAK.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (H. R. 14382) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Hughes County and Stanley County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, S. DAK.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill H. R. 14383, granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Brule County and Lyman County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Brule County and Lyman County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER BETWEEN POTTER COUNTY AND DEWEY COUNTY, S. DAK.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill H. R. 14384, granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation between Potter County and Dewey County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "interest" and insert the word "interests."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, WALWORTH COUNTY, S. DAK.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (H. R. 14385) granting the consent of Congress to the State of South Dakota for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Walworth County and Corson County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between Walworth County and Corson County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the contsruction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "contsruction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "construction."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, GRAND FORKS, N. DAK.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (H. R. 14429) granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of an existing bridge across the Red River between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River between Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, MOORHEAD, MINN.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (H. R. 14428) granting the consent of Congress to the reconstruction, maintenance, and operation of an existing bridge across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE RIVER.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (S. 3874) granting the consent of Congress for a bridge across the Rio Grande River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Citizens Bridge Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande River, at or near the city of Del Rio, State of Texas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SULPHUR RIVER, TEX.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (S. 4631) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across the Sulphur River at or near Paces Ferry, in said counties and State.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Sulphur River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Paces Ferry, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER AT MARCUS, WASH.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (S. 4638) authorizing the Great Northern Railway Co. to maintain and operate, or reconstruct, maintain, and operate, its bridge across the Columbia River at Marcus, in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 4638) authorizing the Great Northern Railway Co. to maintain and operate, or reconstruct, maintain, and operate, its bridge across the Columbia River at Marcus, in the State of Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate, or reconstruct, maintain, and operate, its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between the town of Marcus, Wash., and a point across the river opposite thereto, all in Stevens County, Wash., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE BETWEEN EAGLE PASS, TEX., AND PIEDRAS NEGRAS, MEXICO.

The next bridge bill in order was the bill (S. 4592) granting consent of Congress to the Eagle Pass & Piedras Negras Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande between Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 4592) granting consent of Congress to the Eagle Pass & Piedras Negras Bridge Co. for construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande between Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress be, and is hereby, granted to the Eagle Pass & Piedras Negras Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Texas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, across the Rio Grande between Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the consent of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the bridge shall also be obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, in approaching a discussion of the subject of what the future holds for Muscle Shoals it is extremely difficult to know where to begin and where to leave off. This question has been a much mooted one for the past year and a half. In that time the public has become bewildered by a mass of evidence, much of which is false and some of which is true. In this time the paid propagandist has had his opportunity to shower upon the public a hazy mass of unfounded statements. Many of these men who are paid to do this sort of thing have thrown truth to the winds and have drawn entirely upon their imaginations.

Mr. Ford submitted an offer for the Government interests at Muscle Shoals, I think, sometime in July, 1921. Since that time men with literary ability have been hired to influence the public. They have been paid to write newspaper and magazine articles and circulars on the subject of the Ford offer. The public mind has been deluged with these writings regardless of whether they contained any truth or not. Those who are Ford advocates for pay have attempted to make the people believe that Henry Ford is a superman, and strange as it may seem they have succeeded in some instances. I am not sure but that their efforts have been attended with some success with a small part of the membership of Congress, as ridiculous as this statement may seem.

This contention has grown in favor until there are those who believe and claim that the law should be written and placed upon the statute books of our country for the guidance of every man and woman except Mr. Ford. They would exempt him from the law's restrictions. Personally, I do not believe that anyone is so distinctively superhuman that he should have a class created entirely for himself. I think all, without exception, should be made to obey the same law.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal water power act that was finally passed by the Congress of the United States after years of diligent work upon the part of its proponents was made to apply to all alike. The intention of this law was to preserve the great water-power sites of our country for the use of the people. It was therefore made general in character and no one was exempted from its provisions. This great act was written into the statute books of our country so that unprincipled and greedy corporations could not get unrestricted control of our rivers and thereby create cheap hydroelectric power for themselves and sell to the people at unconscionable prices. This, in brief, was the reason that actuated those great proponents of conservation of the water power of the United States. The great corporations to-day that secure license to use any of the streams of the United States for the purpose of building dams to be used in creating power must be governed by the Federal water power act. In this way no power company can exploit the users of hydroelectric power because the Government through this act throws its arm of protection about the public. Strange as it may seem there are those in and out of Congress to-day who would pass a special act exempting Mr. Ford and his company from any such restrictions. They would transfer in fee simple to Mr. Ford, for practically nothing, about 3,900 acres of land upon which is built the two great nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, Ala., known as plant No. 1 and plant No. 2. These great sites with all of their numerous buildings and machinery and railroad tracks would be turned over to Mr. Ford and his heirs and assigns forever for the comparatively paltry sum of $5,000,000. This property to be thus transferred to him cost the taxpayers of this country something over $85,000,000. Besides this, if his proposal is accepted, the taxpayers of this country would build two dams across the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, together with the locks, gates, and machinery necessary in the production of hydroelectric power at a cost to these taxpayers of about $67,000,000, and when completed would turn them over to Mr. Ford, who is reputed to be the richest man in the world, for a period of 100 years.

When thus ready for use Mr. Ford would pay to the Government 4 per cent on $50,000,000 of the investment throughout this lease period of 100 years and would be given the use of $17,000,000 for that time free. It will be seen from this that the people of the United States would be required to build the dams and install the machinery at a cost of about $67,000,000 and Mr. Ford would not be required under his offer to pay full interest on this money while the work was under construction.

Mr. Speaker, because of the long period of time that has been and will be required to build these dams it is estimated that the Government would lose in interest during the process of construction on the new money put into the project since Mr. Ford made his offer about $13,320,000. This is quite a subsidy by way of interest to hand over to this very wealthy man when it is remembered that every other company that gets a lease of water-power rights must build its own dams and install its own locks and gates and machinery with its own money and therefore must bear all interest charges while the work is under construction.

Up until this time no man has thought to ask the Government to build for him dams for this purpose out of the funds in the Public Treasury. It will be remembered, too, that no other man can get a lease under the Federal water power act for more than 50 years, but of course some of those who advocate the Ford offer have schooled themselves into the belief that he is superhuman. Let it be said in his behalf that Mr. Ford makes no such foolish or silly claim for himself.

It is well understood that dams of this character require huge sums of money to keep them in repair, and all companies who have water-power rights must not only build but must maintain the dams at their own expense. However, in this remarkable offer that has been made by Mr. Ford for Muscle Shoals, it is proposed by him that he pay to the Government of the United States $55,000 per annum, to be used by the Government in repairing these two dams when such need may arise. The best engineers of our country agree that the minimum maintenance cost of such dams is about 1 per cent per annum of the cost of construction, and the maximum cost of maintenance is about 3 per cent of such cost. If this maintenance should cost only the minimum, it will be noticed that this would amount to $670,000 per year. Mr. Ford only pays $55,000 of this, leaving a balance of $615,000 to be paid by the weary taxpayers of this country. But if it should cost the maximum, or 3 per cent, the taxpayers would have the bag to hold to the extent of three times this sum, or $1,245,000 per annum.

However, the proponents of the Ford offer claim that $55,000, the sum that Mr. Ford agrees to pay in annually as a maintenance fund, will be sufficient to meet the cost of all repairs. Then I would suggest that if he thinks this sum will be sufficient that we write into the contract that he will maintain the dams at his own expense. He certainly can lose nothing, because he says this amount will be sufficient, and by good luck he might save some of the $55,000. The fact is it is well known among engineers that $55,000 for this purpose is hardly a drop in the bucket. If Mr. Ford and these men who make this claim are sincere, why does he not change his proposal and agree to maintain these dams at his own expense? He is the only man who is going to get any advantage out of them.

Natural deterioration over a period of 100 years will require huge sums of money to keep them in perfect repair. It is also well known that at any time these dams may go out through natural causes. Floods may wash them away, earthquakes may cause the earth to gap and in an instant destroy the dams. An invading army might some time destroy them with explosives, but from whatever cause these dams may go out Mr. Ford holds the taxpayers of this country bound to rebuild them for him without any expense to him except the $55,000. To my mind this seems to be asking too much. It would seem that this company should be compelled to keep these dams in repair provided the Government, at the expense of the taxpayers, builds the dams for him and turns them over to him fully equipped for the rather insignificant annual rental of 4 per cent of only $50,000,000. Let us remember as we go along that these dams will have cost the Government $67,000,000, yet it is only proposed that the taxpayers get a return on $50,000,000 of this cost. Remember also that he is to use this hydroelectric power thus created in any way that he may see fit, unrestrained by the hand of any authority, either Federal or State, with one exception. The exception to which I refer is the proposal that he use about 100,000 horsepower in the manufacture of fertilizer, provided he can make it at a profit of 8 per cent to himself.

Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed, too, that there is no provision in the contract that would bind this company to pay any damages that might arise should these dams from any cause break and allow this imprisoned water to suddenly rush down over the surrounding lower country, destroying life and property. Should these dams break, I do not know how many lives would be lost or the value of the property destroyed. The money cost might reach, in the course of 100 years, into the billions. I am sure if such a disaster as this should ever occur the loss would mount high into the millions. Mr. Ford rather cleverly, I would say, guards his company against the payment of any loss of this character.

Every other set of men who build dams for this purpose build them at their own expense, pay interest on the money invested while the construction is going on, equip them at their own expense, maintain them at their own expense, and should they go out from any cause rebuild them at their own expense and be liable for the payment of all damages arising by reason of the escape of the empounded waters. To my mind the Ford offer is a very astounding proposition, and I can not follow the process of reasoning of those who advocate that this Government should stand quietly by and allow this company to manacle it hand and foot. If we should accept this Ford offer we ought to amend it so often that it would be rewritten from beginning to end. The interests of the Government ought to be safeguarded in some instances if we turn this gigantic property over to Mr. Ford practically as a gift and finance him for 100 years.

This offer further contemplates that the Government must turn over the addition it built to the steam plant belonging to the Alabama Power Co. on the Warrior River, known as the Gorgas plant. This Muscle Shoals project was commenced by the Government when the war was on and at a time when it needed immediate power. The agents of the Government negotiated with the Alabama Power Co. at that time for power and it was agreed that the Government should build this addition to its Gorgas plant, together with certain transmission lines leading from there, a distance of 88 miles, to Muscle Shoals. At this time the Alabama Power Co. had greater demand for electric power than it could meet and it had commenced to build an extension to its steam plant at this place. It had already built the foundations for this extension and had constructed its intakes and outlets for the necessary water to operate the plant.

It was agreed between the Federal agents and the Alabama Power Co. that the Government should build this extension to the Gorgas plant on these foundations and over these water intakes and outlets and also build the transmission lines from that place to Muscle Shoals. This was done on the part of the Government at a cost of $4,900,000. At the commencing of this work on the part of the Government a contract was entered into with the Alabama Power Co., by the terms of which the Government, when through with the Gorgas plant and transmission lines, was to sell these holdings to that company at a "fair value."

Claiming its right to purchase under this clause of the contract, the Alabama Power Co. has first offered the Government $2,500,000 for this property and later the offer was raised to $3,000,000.

When we remember the disgracefully low and ofttimes criminal prices at which war properties have been sold, ranging from practically nothing to 10 and 12 per cent of the original cost to the Government, this price of $3,000,000 would seem to be one of the best bargains that the Government has ever been offered for any of its war property. Yet it will be remembered that the Ford offer contemplates that the Government must reject this offer of $3,000,000 and include the Government's interest in the Gorgas plant and transmission lines in the transfer to Mr. Ford. Just why he would ask this rather strange conduct on the part of the Government has never been clearly explained.

It is constructed as one building and one plant and the same machinery operates it as a single concern. It needs this plant in furnishing electric service to its numerous customers that are located throughout all that section of the country. It has an investment of about $40,000,000. It has built its own dams and pays the upkeep of these dams. These users of light and power have a right to be supplied. I do not know what number of consumers it has to-day but two years ago the number was 58,500. Take away from it this plant and you cripple the service to 58,500 consumers. You effect the industries of that entire section, many of them you kill. Can any man assign a sane and truthful reason why these industries should all be crippled, why some of these municipalities should be put in darkness, why the wheels of these industries should be stopped, in order to give Mr. Ford this property? The most speculative mind can not offer one sound and legitimate reason that is based upon the facts surrounding this offer.

Perhaps it would be well to state that Mr. Ford is offering for the Government's real-estate holdings at Muscle Shoals only $5,000,000. These holdings cost the Government, to be exact and without any accumulative interest, $85,343,296. For this real estate, with all of the gigantic buildings constructed upon it, together with all the railroad engines, steel freight cars, steam shovels, picks and shovels, rock crushers, cement mixers, railroad tracks, and numerous other machinery and tools, he is offering the ridiculously low and unconscionable price of $5,000,000.

This property includes Waco quarry, cost $1,302,962; Gorgas Steam Plant, $4,900,000; Nitrate Plant No. 1, $12,887,941; and Nitrate Plant No. 2, $66,252,393. These figures, of course, do not include accrued interest on these huge sums now amounting to many millions.

For the Congress of the United States to authorize the sale of more than $85,000,000 worth of Government property to probably the richest man in the world for $5,000,000 would seem to me to come dangerously near being criminal. Especially do I say this when I remember that Mr. Ford could immediately sell and ought to sell to the Alabama Power Co. the Gorgas plant for $3,000,000. He could easily sell personal property at nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, which I have just enumerated and which he could declare as surplus, for at least the other $2,000,000. Therefore, at the very lowest estimation you would be deeding by warranty deed to Mr. Ford, his heirs and assigns forever, more than $75,000,000 worth of property without consideration. Because he would have already recovered for himself in these two sales the full amount that he paid and have at least $70,000,000 worth of property left that would not have cost him one cent.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ford by his offer also demands that the Government shall furnish him the overflow right at Dam No. 3, the cost to be paid by the Government. These rights will cost anywhere from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. Of course he says he will pay 4 per cent interest on whatever this cost may be, but he agrees to pay nothing for the great reservoirs that the Government must build to hold the water that is backed away from Dam No. 3. I do not know how many millions of dollars these reservoirs would cost.

He may fool Congress, but I am only mentioning these facts to show you that Mr. Ford would have a decidedly hard job before him in fooling a set of high-school boys with a proposition of this kind.

The Ford propagandists, in order to sooth the nerves of the taxpayers of this country, heralded abroad the statement that while it will require $50,000,000 of new money to complete Dam No. 2 and build Dam No. 3, Mr. Ford is going to pay back to the taxpayers this $50,000,000. They claim it is only a loan that the Government is making to him and that he will make full restitution during the period of 100 years. They claim he will repay this huge amount dollar for dollar, and here is the very amazing scheme that Mr. Ford has of paying it back. Listen to it carefully because I think it is something new to the financial world.

He agrees to pay to the Secretary of War for the use of the Government the sum of $23,363 semiannually to be used in retiring at the end of 100 years the $50,000,000, the additional money put up for him by the Government to build the two dams. As this method of discharging a debt is so unique you will pardon me for analyzing it a little further. He proposes to pay $23,363 each six months of the 100-year period. The total amount of annual payments, therefore, would be $46,726. This same amount paid yearly for 100 years, of course, would be one hundred times $46,726, or $4,672,600.

This offer that is now disturbing the minds of the membership of this House proposes that the Government shall accept these semiannual payments and immediately invest them at 4 per cent interest payable semiannually, and when the interest is due add it to the principal and loan it again at 4 per cent interest, and if it is thus compounded throughout the term of the lease, which is 100 years, he says it will amount to $49,071,935, which is practically the $50,000,000, although you will see even with this rather doubtful scheme of financing he has short changed the Government nearly a million dollars. But what is a million dollars when the United States Government is playing Santa Claus to Mr. Ford? The richest man in the world would hardly take note of such an insignificant gift as that.

You will notice in this very startling method of discharging a debt of $50,000,000 with the comparatively small sum of $4,672,600 that Mr. Ford leaves the matter of investing these semiannual installments to the Government. It matters not to him whether the loans prove to be bad or successful. It matters not to him to what additional cost the Government will be put in order to make these loans, collect the semiannual interest, add it to the principal, and reinvest again.

It is perhaps pertinent to say here that by observing the same rules of finance that he has laid down it would cost the Government considerably over a billion dollars to complete and deliver these new dams to Mr. Ford, together with overflow rights at Dam No. 1.

Oh, I know you claim that Mr. Ford has promised to manufacture fertilizer at nitrate plant No. 1 and sell it to the farmers cheaply; and, in this way, compel the other manufacturers of fertilizer throughout the United States to sell their product to the farmers at one-half the price for which they are now selling it. Mr. Ford only agrees, that in the event he can make nitrate at all at Muscle Shoals, to manufacture it at the approximate present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2.

This present capacity would mean the manufacturing of about 1,500,000 tons of standard fertilizer per year, provided he can manufacture it at all. No one knows whether he can manufacture fertilizer successfully by any known process at this time; and, even if he is successful in manufacturing this amount, let me call your attention to the fact that about 15,000,000 tons of fertilizer have been used per annum in the United States, and 18,000,000 could be used to a good advantage.

Can anyone explain to me how the manufacturing of 1,500,000 tons of fertilizer can bring down 15,000,000 tons of fertilizer one-half in price? This is going on the assumption that fertilizer can be made at all there. The amount would require only about 100,000 horsepower to manufacture it. Mr. Ford says that he is going to create 1,000,000 horsepower. If he does you will readily see why Mr. Ford wants this water-power lease for 100 years. It means that he is going to get at practically Government expense 900,000 horsepower to use as he may see fit without Government interference of any character. He would have nothing like the Federal water power act curbing him in his activities. If he saw fit he would use this 900,000 horsepower with which to exploit the people. He could use it in manufacturing for himself anything that he might see fit. Whether it would be the manufacturing of threshing machines or bird cages would be left to the judgment of Mr. Ford and his company, and they would use that 900,000 horsepower in the manufacture of the latter if it would yield them greater profits than would the manufacture of other articles.

You are deceiving the farmer by telling him that Mr. Ford wants this great water-power privilege down there in order that he can manufacture and sell to him cheap fertilizer. If that is true, then why not write into this contract a clause that will require him to use all of this power, whatever it may be, in the manufacture of fertilizer? Else if you do not, then tell the farmer plainly and honestly that it is one-tenth fertilizer if he can make it at all and nine-tenths power to be used by Mr. Ford in manufacturing anything that he may see fit.

You tell another class of men, in order to elicit their sympathy and their support, that he is going to create a new era in the United States by furnishing cheap transportation and cheap power for the industries all over this country. The man who has carefully read the proposal and the hearings and makes these statements unqualifiedly knows that he is misleading the farmers and the laborers and the industries of America. He does not agree to sell an ounce of this energy to the factories throughout the country or to electrify railroads or to furnish power for traction companies. They tell the farmer and the business man and the poor washerwoman of the country that he will furnish them cheap power to run all of their machinery on the farm, to turn the wheels of the industries, to run the washing machine of the woman who does laundry work for a living. Let me call your attention to the fact that this is a base fabrication, that it is devoid of a single element of truth, and the men who are informed about the Ford offer know that it can not be true.

Mr. Mayo, who represents Mr. Ford in this matter, has testified for days before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and the Agriculture Committee of the Senate. Let me call your attention to Mr. Mayo's testimony as recorded in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-seventh Congress, volume 1, page 243:

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Ford has given that a great deal of thought, and he thinks that very few really know the magnitude of this project, and as he proposes to use all this power for himself eventually it will take a very large investment down there and quite a few years to build up to it.

The CHAIRMAN. He proposes to use all the power himself?

Mr. MAYO. He expects to.

Again on page 262 Mr. Mayo testified as follows:

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Ford intends to use that power himself. It is not a question of selling the power.

On page 286 will be found the following testimony:

Q. Does Mr. Ford put very much stress on this clause relating to after the 100-year period?—A. I think so. He will have built up a plant to consume all the power, and if you took the power away from him the plants would have no value.

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing testimony is only a small part of the statements made by Mr. Ford's representative on the subject of what is intended to be done with Muscle Shoals provided this offer is accepted. This testimony is recited for the purpose of disclosing that Mr. Ford has no intention of selling power to electrify railroads, or to operate traction lines, or to grind the farmer's feed for his stock, or to light cities or dwellings, or to turn the wheels of the industries of the South that are idle because of lack of power. It is recited to refute the many misstatements that have been made on this subject. It is recited to show that Mr. Ford is going to use all of this power in the manufacture of whatever suits him best at his own plant and unrestrained and unhampered by any commission or other authority, either State or Federal.

Muscle Shoals was placed in the Tennessee River in order that its power might be used by and for the benefit of all and not one. This Congress has no right to set aside the great scheme of the Creator of the universe and thwart His plans by giving this great opportunity to one man. If Mr. Ford desires this property and can get it, it ought to be leased to him at a fair rental value and then he ought to be made to operate under the Federal water-power act and distribute this electric energy to all parts of the South. Every man in that section of the country who desires to start a business ought to have the right to obtain this cheap power. This is the plan of Him who created it. It was the purpose of those who fought for and struggled long overcoming obstacles and finally succeeded in giving to the country the Federal water-power act that conserves this power for the benefit of those to whom it rightfully belongs—the entire people.

As I have said before, no one knows that Mr. Ford can manufacture nitrates by any known process at Muscle Shoals. No one knows that any process will be found in the future that will prove successful, and Mr. Ford's representative frankly tells you that if he can not manufacture fertilizer at a profit to himself he will abandon the attempt. In verification of this statement let me call your attention again to the House hearings and the testimony of Mr. Mayo. On page 245 will be found the following testimony:

Question. I will simply speak of it as nitrate which can be produced at Muscle Shoals, and I understand you to say that as long as it is profitable or can be produced without a loss Mr. Ford would be glad to continue to produce that product.

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Question. And I think you stated it very correctly when you said that it is a fair assumption that if it was being produced at a loss it would only be a matter of time when even Mr. Ford with all his wealth would go out of business, and therefore the element of profit or the cost of manufacture has to be taken into consideration.

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Again, on page 254, is the following testimony:

Question. If found by Mr. Ford, after the starting of operations, that he can not produce ammonium nitrate in competition with the wholesale market price of the same materials from other sources, do you understand that his agreement binds him to continue the operation of the plant for nitrogen compounds at a loss?

Mr. MAYO. I do not think so.

Question. It would not bind him to continue?

Mr. MAYO. I hardly think so.

Again, on page 255, in response to a question, Mr. Mayo said:

Mr. MAYO. The only reason for him to discontinue (fertilizer) would be his actual inability to manufacture at a profit.

Again, at page 309, this testimony is found:

Question. What does that mean—that he does not have to do it (manufacture fertilizer)?

Mr. MAYO. In my opinion he would not have to do it (manufacture fertilizer), as I have said before, if he exhausted every known effort and still could not make it except at a great loss.

Question. He could make it, whether he makes it at a loss or not, can he not?

Mr. MAYO. I do not think he could do it very long.

This testimony is recited for the purpose of showing that Mr. Ford does not know for a certainty that he can make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, and that he will not make it unless he can make it at a profit to himself. Those who contend otherwise simply fly in the face of the facts without regard to the Ford proposition and the testimony in support of it.

The Ford proponents may succeed in deceiving the public for the time being and barter away the rights of the people, but the day of retribution will come. I would like to see the taxpayers' interests guarded in this matter and I would like to have the country advised of the facts as they are and not what we would like them to be.

Remember that nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 with their 3,900 acres of land and all these buildings and machinery are to be transferred to him with a fee-simple title. It is true we ask him to make a certain amount of fertilizer and keep nitrate plant No. 1 in a stand-by condition for the making of nitrates should war come, but Mr. Ford has not written into his proposal any recapture clause in the event that he should either fail or neglect to do these things. And Congress is arrogantly told that it must accept this offer just as Mr. Ford has written it without the changing of a sentence. So sacred is this offer that Congress must not presume to change it or amend it in any way. It must be accepted just as he wrote it and presented it and Congress shall only have the poor privilege of ratifying the proposal without having any right to say what the proposal shall contain. For Mr. Ford states in his proposal as follows:

The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part.

So you see we must sign on the dotted line, or if we have courage to defend the rights of the United States, then we must refuse his offer in its entirety. But you see if we accept his proposition by signing on the dotted line, then we give him among other things an unqualified lease for 100 years—twice the length of time any other man can secure a leasehold.

So you see this estops Congress from safeguarding the Nation's rights. This lease ought to have a clause written into it that would render that instrument void provided the Ford Co. failed to do the things for which the lease provides.

Would any Member of Congress part with his own property without a reconveyance clause in the event the consideration for the transfer should fail? If it were your own property would you insist upon safeguarding your rights? I think you would demand a clause of recapture, but we can sometimes become very generous and bountiful with other peoples' property.

While Mr. Ford says that he will generate a million horsepower at Muscle Shoals, personally I think his statement is not borne out by the facts. I think also that a statement by Mr. Mayo to the effect that 900,000 horsepower can be generated there is somewhat in excess of the Muscle Shoals possibilities.

One of the great water-power conservators of this country and one who labored for many years to save these rights for the people, Mr. Gifford Pinchot, now Governor of Pennsylvania, thinks that 700,000 horsepower would be all that could be counted on at that place and it is very pertinent to quote from a statement made by him on the subject of Muscle Shoals, and I quote as follows:

"The Ford offer," says Gifford Pinchot, "is seven parts water power to one part fertilizer, even if the fertilizer part should work out. For the water power itself Mr. Ford would pay nothing, and he would be free from all taxes on the property. Other lessees to water-power rights from the Government not only bear the total cost of building their own dam and power houses and pay taxes on them, but they also pay for the water power in addition. The Ford offer is like offering a man 4 per cent on the cost of his factories as rent, and then asking him to throw in a coal mine to supply fuel for the engines for nothing."

Mr. Speaker, this is the view taken on this subject by most men whose judgment is unbiased on the one hand and whose zeal for the rights of the people is pronounced. It is true when Governor Pinchot says that Mr. Ford would be tax exempt on these dams because the dams belong to the Government and they are practically loaned to him for 100 years. It is true, as the governor says, that all other water-power companies are compelled to build their own dams at their own expense and if they are partially injured or completely destroyed they must repair or rebuild them at their own expense. If damages to property occur or if life is lost the operating company must pay the bills. Other companies must not only do all these things but they must pay taxes to the State on the taxable value of these dams. They have no Santa Claus.

To my mind this Ford offer unamended would represent one of the boldest and most brazen daylight robberies that has ever occurred in the history of this country. I do not blame Mr. Ford. He has made his offer in the open and if this Congress barters away the rights of the people in this high-handed fashion the condemnation will rest on the Congress and not on Mr. Ford.

I do not know what magnetic power this man possesses that he can so hypnotize a part of the membership of this House that they would add this priceless legacy to the already dangerously great wealth of this man who is twice a billionaire if common report be true. Remember, he got these billions from the pockets of his customers as profits in the sale of his automobiles and the necessary parts to keep them in repair. Remember, too, that this has all been accomplished in the short period of 20 years. If he is given Muscle Shoals with all this immense power donated, even the flighty imagination of man could not conceive the number of billions that he would extract by way of profits from the pockets of the people in the next 20 years. Therefore, let us be done with all of these exaggerated statements and misinformation and let us tell the people the truth about their own property and what Mr. Ford proposes to do with it if he gets it. Let us truthfully and frankly tell them that he only intends to use a small portion of this power in the manufacture of fertilizer, if indeed he can manufacture it at all.

Let us tell them that the reason he wants it is because he desires to use five or six, or perhaps seven or eight, hundred thousand hydroelectric horsepower as a gift from the people in the carrying on of a private enterprise for himself. Let us be frank and tell them that if this is done he can carry on this manufacturing project of his at this place and sell the manufactured product at any price that he may see fit. When you tell them this is a fertilizer project, tell them that only a small portion of it is fertilizer and that feature is exceedingly doubtful. If Mr. Ford can use 100,000 horsepower and manufacture 1,500,000 tons of fertilizer, if this is a fertilizer project, then let him use the remainder of this power for the same purpose and manufacture at least 10,000,000 more tons. If he could do this and sell this huge amount at a low price he would then be the farmers' real benefactor. But let us tell them that he has no such intention as this, and then, as the years roll by and Mr. Ford does not make them the expected cheap fertilizer, their disappointment will not be so keen.

In conclusion, let me again say that an acceptance of this offer would be a repudiation of the Federal water power act. This act throws safeguards around our natural resources throughout all time to come. It preserves these rights for all the people. The great investors in water-power rights have found its provisions to be wise. It was the pet theory of President Roosevelt. He devoted many years of his life to have it written upon the statute books of the Nation. He continued his efforts after his term as President of the United States had expired. This great work was carried on through Taft's administration, and these efforts were finally crowned with success during the Wilson administration. All of the great engineers of the country agree that the Federal water power act is the embodiment of wisdom and that no man should be allowed at this day to lay a violent hand upon its provisions.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article:

AMERICAN GROUP OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION—PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING.

The following is a stenographic report of the proceedings of the twentieth annual meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union:

The twentieth annual meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union was held in the caucus room, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., Saturday, February 24, 1923, at 10.20 o'clock a. m., Senator WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY, president, presiding.

President MCKINLEY. Gentlemen, shall we come to order? The notice for this meeting sent out by the executive secretary contains the agenda, as follows:

NOTICE.

The twentieth annual meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union will be held in the caucus room, third floor, House Office Building, Saturday, February 24, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The program will include:

1. Reading of the minutes.
2. Announcements and communications.
3. President's report.
4. Treasurer's report.
5. Executive secretary's report.
6. The election of officers.
7. Unfinished business:
   (a) Report of delegates to the twentieth conference at Vienna, Austria, August, 1922.
8. New business:
   (a) Plans for the twenty-first conference of the Interparliamentary Union:
   —August next (?)
   —at Copenhagen, Denmark (?)
9. Adjournment.

You are receiving herewith the executive secretary's report of the conference in Vienna.

If your name does not appear on the list of members inclosed, you will wish, of course, to send to the executive secretary the card which is also inclosed.

Every member of the congress should be a member of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union. If you are not a member, mail the application at once.

Surely you will agree that this is important.

Fraternally yours,

WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY,
President.

ARTHUR DEERIN CALL,
Executive Secretary, 613 Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

The first matter on the program is the reading of the minutes. I should suggest that, since the minutes of the last meeting have been printed and distributed, perhaps we may waive the reading.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I move, Mr. President, we dispense with the reading of the minutes.

(The motion was duly seconded and carried.)

President MCKINLEY. As to announcements, I might suggest that we have not yet been advised what place the conference will select for the next meeting. We understand it will probably be held in Denmark and probably about the middle of August.

There are two vacancies on the board, caused by the retirement from Congress of Representative RUCKER, of Missouri, and Representative STEENERSON, of Minnesota.

The next matter in order is the president's report, and, for the benefit of some of the gentlemen who have not examined our work, I respectfully submit the following:

THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

"For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration, $4,000." This language is taken from the act making appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. The amount representing this year something of an increase over previous annual appropriations, has been paid annually by the United States Government for a number of years. The money, indicating something of the Government's interest, is turned over to the secretary general of the Interparliamentary Union at the office of the bureau, Geneva, Switzerland.

The secretary general is Dr. Christian L. Lange, recently honored by the Nobel committee.

BEGINNINGS.

The founder of the Interparliamentary Union was a member of the British House of Commons. The first idea of such a union seems to have been suggested to a member of the Austrian Parliament at the time of the Franco-Prussian War in 1870. The settlement of the Alabama claims shortly afterwards and the spread of interest in arbitration throughout the world paved the way. The Interparliamentary Union began in Paris October 31, 1888, in the interest of arbitration treaties between the United States, France, and Great Britain. Its twentieth conference was held in Vienna, Austria, August 28, 29, 30 last, in the interest of European reconstruction. To William Randal Cremer, of the British Parliament, assisted by Frédéric Passy, of the French Chamber of Deputies, is due all the credit for organizing the union. Because of their energy the organization grew rapidly. As a result Cremer received from the President of France the decoration of the Legion of Honor, from the King of England a knighthood, and in 1903 from the Nobel Committee the peace prize of about $45,000. A labor member of the British Parliament, a carpenter by trade, and a poor man, he forthwith gave all of this money to the cause of peace.

OBJECTS.

The Interparliamentary Union is composed of representatives of various parliaments. The object of the organization is to develop the principle of arbitration in general and to promote intelligent and peaceful relations between peoples. Its first labors were in the interest of treaties of arbitration between France and the United States and between Great Britain and the United States. At what is officially known as the First Interparliamentary Conference, held during the World Fair in Paris in 1889, nine parliaments represented, it was resolved: "The conduct of governments tending to become more and more the expression only of ideas and sentiments voiced by the body of citizens, it is for the electors to lead the policy of the country in the direction of justice, of right, and of the brotherhood of nations."

ANOTHER CONFERENCE IN AMERICA.

In 1914 the United States Government invited the union to hold the Twentieth Interparliamentary Conference in the city of Washington, and an appropriation of $50,000 was carried in the diplomatic appropriation act for the expenses of the gathering. The war naturally interfered, but there are many in and out of Congress, recalling the successful conference at St. Louis in 1904, who hope that the invitation of 1914 may soon be renewed.

CONFERENCES HERETOFORE.

Conferences of the union have been held as follows: Four times at Brussels (1895, 1897, 1905, and 1910); twice in each of the following: Paris (1889 and 1900), London (1890 and 1906), The Hague (1894 and 1913), Vienna (1903 and 1922); once in each of the following: Rome (1891), Berne (1892), Budapest (1896), Christiana (1899), Berlin (1908), Geneva (1912), Stockholm (1921), St. Louis (1904).

ADVANTAGES.

The advantages of such an organization readily suggest themselves. Freed from the domination of any government, it represents a universal and democratic aspiration. Nothing in it savors of particular interest or privilege. Composed of officials, holding its conferences in houses of parliaments, it is itself only semiofficial. Perhaps its main service is its opportunity for parliamentarians from all parts of the world to meet, to confer, to educate one another. At the meeting this summer in Vienna 24 nations, the largest number ever participating at any conference of the Interparliamentary Union, were represented by delegates. The governments represented were: Germany, America, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Spain, Esthonia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Dutch Indies, Italy, Japan, Norway, the Netherlands, Poland, Switzerland, Sweden, and Turkey. For parliamentarians from so many different countries just to meet, officially or unofficially, at conference, at table, at social gatherings, is in itself not without benefit.

Speaking before the conference in St. Louis in 1904, the then Assistant Secretary of State, the Hon. Francis B. Loomis, said to the assembled delegates: "You have aroused, directed, and educated public sentiment in favor of arbitration throughout the civilized world." Mr. Loomis also said: "The Interparliamentary Union deserves credit for practically forecasting five years in advance what proved to be the most salient work of the peace conference at The Hague." There is no doubt that the first Hague conference was called because of the work of the Interparliamentary Union. There is no doubt that its labors made possible the establishment of the International Court of Arbitration at The Hague. Upon its initiative President Roosevelt initiated the second Hague conference.

OUR OFFICERS.

The present officers of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union are Senator WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY, president; vice presidents: Representative ANDREW J. MONTAGUE (Virginia), Representative HALVOR STEENERSON (Minnesota), Representative WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD (Arkansas); Representative ADOLPH J. SABATH (Illinois), treasurer; Representative H. GARLAND DUPRÉ (Louisiana), secretary; Arthur Deerin Call, executive secretary. Executive Committee: Representative FRED BRITTEN (Illinois), Representative THEODORE BURTON (Ohio), Representative HENRY ALLEN COOPER (Wisconsin), Representative WILLIAM W. RUCKER (Missouri), Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON (Arkansas), Senator THOMAS STERLING (South Dakota), Representative HENRY W. TEMPLE (Pennsylvania), Representative JAMES C. MCLAUGHLIN (Michigan), Representative MERRILL MOORES (Indiana).

OUR OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

On May 24, 1921, the American group sent to the council of the Interparliamentary Union the following self-explanatory communication:

To the Council of the Interparliamentary Union, 14 Rue de l'Ecole Medicine, Geneva, Switzerland.

SIRS: Please accept greetings from your fellow members of the American group, all of whom are pleased to know of the plans of our council for the nineteenth interparliamentary conference at Stockholm August 17–19 of the current year. The gracious invitation of the Swedish group, combined with the generous cooperation of the Swedish Government, leads us to feel that the resumption of our conferences will take place under circumstances as happy and propitious as could well be possible.

We have examined the "agenda of the conference" submitted under date of April 20, 1921, and we hasten to express our earnest hope and perfect confidence that our brethren will come again to a meeting of minds with reference to questions peculiarly within the historic province of the union, questions relating principally to international law. The time we believe has not arrived when our union can profitably discuss, much less decide upon, political or even economic questions which may give rise to disputes between States. The peaceful and judicial settlement of international controversies, so wisely and constructively discussed and advanced in the first and second Hague conferences, remains still the supreme opportunity of the Interparliamentary Union; so much so, indeed, that we of the American group urge upon our coworkers of other nations—

1. The calling of a third Hague conference.

2. The extension of the principle of international conciliation, as set forth in the score and more of treaties negotiated between the United States and other powers in 1913, commonly known as the "Bryan treaties."

3. The creation of a judicial union of the nations, under which such questions as the interpretation of treaties or of international law, the breach of international obligations, the determination of reparations, and the interpretation of prior decisions passed by the court of the union may all be decided by the court according to principles of accepted law and known equity.

4. The continuation of the conference of the Interparliamentary Union, not only for these high purposes herein set forth but for the additional and by no means insignificant reasons, namely, that lawmakers of the world may become more generally acquainted, more intelligently informed of each other's tasks, and more sympathetically alive to the possibilities awaiting them in the realm of practical international achievement.

We of the American group have not lost interest in such questions as the limitation of armaments, the reduction of the cruelties of war, the establishment of a prize court, the rules relating to neutrality, and the like; but we feel that these matters are dependent upon, and that they are not anterior to, the mode of international conference, the method of conciliation, and the means of judicial settlement, to which we have taken the liberty here to advert.

We believe that the Interparliamentary Union has in its traditional adherence to substantially these high matters amply proved its reason for being, and that nothing has happened since our last meeting in 1913 to warrant any change in its independent action, in its fundamental aims, or in its methods.

A CONCLUDING REMARK.

It is not without significance that in this day of divergent interests, points of view, and policies there exists in the world this organization of parliamentarians, each trying as best he may to understand the other fellow's job. [Applause.]

The treasurer's report is next in order.

[Treasurer A. J. Sabath presented his report, as follows:]

President MCKINLEY. A very worthy report. We are glad to receive it.

The next is the report of the executive secretary.

[Executive Secretary Arthur D. Call presented his report, as follows:]

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The last annual meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union was held February 24, 1922, in the caucus room of the House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10.30 o'clock. A stenographic copy of the proceedings of that meeting was printed and distributed to every Member of the House and of the Senate.

Since the last annual meeting certain things in connection with the work of our group have happened worthy of record. They may be briefly enumerated.

EVIDENCES OF INTEREST.

During the year there have been two evidences of a growing interest in the labors of the group. Upon the initiative of Senator SPENCER the Interparliamentary Union and the list of the officers of the American group are listed in the Congressional Directory under the heading "Joint Commissions and Committees." This is the first time that our union has been thus officially recognized. Furthermore, the Congress has seen fit to increase its appropriation to the Interparliamentary Union from $2,000 to $4,000. The practical unanimity with which this action was taken both in the Senate and in the House is encouraging.

There have been a variety of meetings of your executive committee, usually taking the form of a luncheon, supper, or dinner at the gracious invitation of the president of our group, Senator WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY.

NEXT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

No little attention has been given to the question whether or not our American group should invite the Interparliamentary Union to hold its twenty-first international congress in the United States during the current year. After conferring with the Executive department your committee decided that it would be wise to defer inviting the Union to meet in America at least until 1925. Thereupon the following cablegram was sent to Secretary Lange, under date of January 29, 1923:

INTERPARLEMENT, Genéve:

Mature deliberation convinces us would be unwise to invite union meeting America this year. No diminution of interest. Just matter of expediency.

CALL.

Replying to this telegram, under date of February 1, Secretary Lange has written:

DEAR MR. CALL: I need not tell you that I was very sorry indeed to receive your wire of the 29th, which I found here on my return from a short vacation in the mountains. Of course, we have to bow to your decision, taken after mature deliberation, but I can not but think that it would have been a very great boon to our interparliamentary work if you had seen your way to receiving us this year. I know pertinently that especially in France an American invitation would have been accepted with great favor, and I need not point out how important it would be just now under the present circumstances to draw French parliamentarians into our circle. You will know that Canada was quite ready to support an invitation from America and to take part in the reception. It may be difficult to find for some years an opportunity which will suit both groups as well as would have been the case in 1923.

I am very glad that you add expressly that there is no diminution of interest, but that your attitude is due only to considerations of expediency. I shall take care to let this be known as widely as possible.

We shall then have to fall back on the Danish invitation, and, as far as organization and a thorough preparation of the conference go, we could hardly be in better hands than in Denmark. The secretary of the group, whom you met at Vienna, is a very capable man in all that pertains to organization, and I am quite sure that all members of the forthcoming conference will have great pleasure and find special interest in taking part in this meeting. I suppose it will take place in August, probably about the middle of the month, and I trust that at any rate we can count on a numerous and representative American delegation. You know there are direct and very good steamers from New York to Copenhagen. * * *

Will there be any special subject which an American would like to try out before the conference? I suppose that we shall send around a circular to the groups after the meeting of the executive, containing a draft agenda for the conference. It would be a matter for satisfaction if this year, too, we could have an American to submit a report, as Mr. BURTON did last year. What about Mr. MONTAGUE presenting a resolution in favor of international arbitration or America's entering the international court? It would be necessary to be informed as to this some time before the meeting of the council, which, I presume, will take place at the beginning of April.

With best wishes, yours very sincerely,

CHR. L. LANGE.

VISIT FROM SECRETARY OF CANADIAN GROUP.

Your executive secretary wishes to record that on February 6, 1923, he was visited by Senator C. P. Beaubien, secretary of the Canadian group of the Interparliamentary Union.

TWO EVENTS.

There remain two other outstanding events of the year:

(1) The attendance by our American delegation upon the twentieth conference of the Interparliamentary Union at Vienna, Austria, during the last days of August, 1922. The delegation from this group to the conference in Vienna was as follows: Senator William B. McKinley, of Illinois, president of the American group; Senator Selden P. Spencer, of Missouri; Senator E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota; Senator T. H. Caraway, of Arkansas; Senator W. J. Harris, of Georgia; Representative Andrew J. Montague, of Virginia, president of the American Peace Society; Representative Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio, former president of the American Peace Society; Representative Henry W. Temple, of Pennsylvania; Representative William A. Oldfield, of Arkansas; and Arthur D. Call, executive secretary of the group. Other members of the party were: H. M. Pindell and J. W. Stipes, of Illinois; Mrs. Harris and daughter; Mrs. Montague and her daughter, Mrs. Moore; Senator McKinley's niece, Miss Julia Mattis, and her friends, Mrs. W. H. Smith and Mrs. Edward Clifford, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; and Mrs. Call.

Your executive secretary had printed and sent to each Member of the Congress a report of the conference, showing that there were 24 nations represented at the conference. In the report there was a record of the officers, of the work of the conferees, and a copy of the resolutions passed. There is also a brief account of the trip to Budapest and to Belgrade. The report includes some 10 pages of "Notes on the Setting in Austria."

(2) Another important event was a supper given to the executive committee by President McKinley at his home, 1736 Massachusetts Avenue, Sunday evening, February 18. During the evening addresses were given by Representatives THEODORE E. BURTON and HENRY W. TEMPLE, by Senators JOSEPH T. ROBINSON and SELDEN P. SPENCER, and by Dr. James Brown Scott. While these addresses were extemporaneous, every effort is being made to persuade each of the gentlemen to write out his remarks for purposes of publication; this with the thought that in the form of a brochure they can be made of service not only at home but abroad.

AN APPRECIATION.

Your executive secretary craves the privilege of recording his deep appreciation of the unfailing courtesy not only of the officers and members of our executive committee, but of all Members of the Congress whom it has been his duty to approach in matters relating to the work of the Interparliamentary Union. [Applause.]

President MCKINLEY. The next in order is the election of officers. Please permit me to say that I deem it a great honor to have been elected three times as president of the American Group of the Interparliamentary Union, but I really think the office should be passed around, and I shall be glad indeed if some one be named in my stead as president.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, for years we have had the same president, and I never could quite bring myself to believe that rotation was the best method for securing efficiency or the proper presentation here and elsewhere of the aims of the local group; and I am going to make a motion that the present officers, excepting Messrs. Steenerson and Rucker, who withdraw, be reelected—that is, for president, Senator William B. McKinley; for vice presidents, Messrs. Andrew J. Montague and William A. Oldfield, and in place of Mr. Steenerson, Mr. Henry W. Temple, of Pennsylvania; for treasurer, Mr. A. J. Sabath; for secretary, Mr. H. Garland Dupré; and for executive secretary, Mr. Arthur D. Call. And I move that the rules be suspended and that the executive secretary be directed to cast the unanimous vote of the group for the members nominated. Are there any other nominations? [After a pause.] If not, I will take the liberty of putting the motion, if it is seconded.

(The motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.)

Mr. BURTON. There are three vacancies on the executive committee: Mr. Rucker, who retires; Mr. Steenerson, who retires; and Mr. Temple, who has just been elected a vice president, and that makes him ex officio a member of the executive committee.

President MCKINLEY. That is right.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the rules be suspended and that the executive secretary be directed to cast the unanimous vote for the reelection of the following-named gentlemen as members of the executive committee: Mr. Fred Britten, Mr. Theodore Burton, Mr. Henry Allen Cooper, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Senator Thomas Sterling, Mr. James C. McLaughlin, and Mr. Merrill Moores; and to fill the vacancies caused by the retirement of Mr. Rucker and Mr. Steenerson, Senator Seldon P. Spencer, and Mr. John T. Raker.

President MCKINLEY. Are there any other nominations?

Mr. BURTON. If not, Mr. President, the motion is that the executive secretary be directed to cast the unanimous vote for the reelection of the present members of the executive committee, and that there be added thereto the names of Senator SPENCER and Mr. RAKER.

(The motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.)

Mr. SABATH. Mr. President, I do not know whether I am in order or not; but it seems to me this is not the most available date or time in the year, rather, to hold the annual meeting and the annual election. A few days before Congress adjourns we are invariably very busy, and everyone is trying to get away and is attending committee meetings, etc. I wonder whether we could not hold the next election early in January, when nearly everyone is here and when they are not so engaged. If that could be brought about, I think it would secure a much larger attendance and more interest in the organization.

Mr. BURTON. Let me make this suggestion: The place of meeting and some other things are usually determined after January. The place of meeting this coming year would not have been determined in January. I think there is a good deal of substance in what Mr. SABATH says, and the question is whether the executive committee should not have the right to call a meeting at an earlier date, especially during the short session of Congress, when everybody is absorbed in the work of the session.

Mr. SABATH. I have spoken to some of the members who would have been pleased to be here, but they are busy and it is impossible for them to come.

President MCKINLEY. Perhaps you will make a motion, Mr. SABATH.

Mr. SABATH. I think we should leave it with the President.

President MCKINLEY. Perhaps you will make a motion to give the executive committee power.

Mr. SABATH. I move the executive committee be given power to call the next annual meeting at the most advantageous date after January 1.

(The motion was duly seconded.)

Executive Secretary CALL. Mr. President, may I call attention to the fact that article 6 of the by-laws of our American Group of the Interparliamentary Union reads as follows:

"The annual meeting of the American group shall be held February 24, except when that date falls on Sunday, when it shall be held on the next subsequent day."

Mr. SABATH. Then I move to amend the by-laws, unless we can do so only at some meeting called for that purpose.

President MCKINLEY. Would we have a right to amend the by-laws at this regular meeting?

Executive Secretary CALL. No.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I move that we give this matter consideration between now and the next meeting.

Mr. BURTON. Then the resolution should be that the executive committee be requested to consider the desirability of changing the date for the annual meeting and make a report thereon at a later meeting of the union.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I accept that amendment.

(The motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.)

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. President, a matter has occurred to me that might be of some interest. What success attended your efforts when you extended your great hospitality for a meeting at the Metropolitan last spring to induce attendance at the Interparliamentary Union? Has any result followed that effort?

President MCKINLEY. Mr. Call can answer that.

Executive Secretary CALL. There are two definite results following that meeting: One is that a number of the ministers and ambassadors who were present have been taking the matter up with their respective governments. In other words, action is being taken. A second result is this: That for the first time in the history of the Interparliamentary Union a South American government was represented at the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union this summer. That Government was Chile.

Mr. MOORES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. The other day the suggestion was made that we extend to the Interparliamentary Union an invitation to meet here in 1924. I remember the first meeting of the Interparliamentary Union I ever had the pleasure of attending was at St. Louis during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition; and it occurred to me that there will be a fair and exposition in Philadelphia in 1926, and that it might be exceedingly appropriate to invite the Interparliamentary Union to meet in this country and at Philadelphia in 1926 at some time during the exposition. That is the suggestion that I have to make. We would probably have a larger attendance and be able to do better work during that year at the exposition.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by Mr. MOORES should have serious consideration. The delegates from the foreign countries would like very much to come here during an international exposition. But I do not think we can decide that question now. The European officers and members are very anxious to meet on this side of the water just as soon as they can. Conditions might arise that would make it very desirable for them to meet here in 1925. The sooner the better. I really think we should not decide that now.

President MCKINLEY. I did not think Mr. MOORES made that as a motion.

Mr. MOORES. I made it merely as a suggestion.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think we should now decide to invite the Interparliamentary Union to meet at Philadelphia during that exposition. There seem to be differences of opinion as to whether that exposition will be held. Conditions might change in a year. I think we had better wait.

President MCKINLEY. Is there any other business?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I move we adjourn, Mr. President.

(The motion was duly seconded and carried, and thereupon, at 11 o'clock a. m., the group adjourned.)

Mr. ASWELL and Mr. JAMES asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama have leave to extend his remarks made awhile ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the remarks of the gentlemen making the request if they are their own remarks.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I present, in 8-point type, the two following letters and one resolution on agricultural extension work:

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY,
Baton Rouge, La., February 26, 1923.

Mr. J. B. ASWELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ASWELL: I have read in full your speech as given in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 20 regarding the States Relations Service of the United States Department of Agriculture. You certainly gave them the plain, unvarnished truth about a situation in the department that ought to be very severely condemned. I most heartily commend you for your straightforward, clear-cut presentation of the facts. I had known of most of the things that you enumerated, and I expect you will find some additional facts that may follow your splendid opening of these questions that are also to be heartily condemned by right-thinking people.

With best wishes, I am,
Very respectfully,

W. R. DODSON,
Dean and Director.

EASTERN FEDERATION OF FEED MERCHANTS,
Bullville, N. Y., February 28, 1923.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ASWELL: Your speech of January 20 before the House of Representatives was called to the attention of the members of the Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants, in convention assembled at Binghamton, N. Y., February 8–9, as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 20.

I am pleased to hand you herewith copy of a resolution that was later adopted, which I think very fitly expresses the opinion of the members present. The writer knows something of the information you gave to Congress and has had numerous occasions to criticize.

With kind regards and best wishes, I am
Very truly yours,

FRANK C. JONES, Secretary.

Whereas the Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL, a Member of the House of Representatives from Louisiana, has seen fit to give to Congress and the country some facts with relation to the extension work of the United States Department of Agriculture; and

Whereas he has shown that the extension work of the department is being operated in a very partial manner; and

Whereas it has long been the belief of the members of the Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants and others that the extension bureau was being operated in such a way as to be not in the best interest of the Nation's agriculture, and therefore not in the best interest of the country at large; and

Whereas it seems to be the object of some of those having direction of its affairs to build up an organization that would create lucrative positions rather than to advance the interest of the people of the Nation; and

Whereas it appears that this operation tends to favor one class of citizens over other classes and some sections of the country over other sections; and

Whereas this tends to weaken the efficiency of the work and defeats the purpose for which Congress established the bureau and provided a fund to defray the expenses of it: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants in convention assembled at Binghamton, N. Y., February 8, 1923, indorse the efforts of the Congressman from Louisiana to have the extension service conducted in such a way that it will serve the best interests of the Nation and to remove it from partisan politics and from the domination of any man or men for their personal advantage; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary be authorized to send to the Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL a copy of this resolution.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, an opponent of the Ford offer recently stated that "the paid propagandist has had his opportunity to shower upon the public a hazy mass of unfounded statements about this offer. Many of these men who are paid to do this sort of thing have thrown truth to the winds and have drawn entirely upon their imaginations." I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that those who are obliged to draw upon their imaginations for their arguments are not the advocates of the Ford offer but its opponents. Its advocates have only to refer to the signed proposal which speaks for itself. What may or may not have been said in the testimony prior to the submission of Mr. Ford's final offer of May 31, 1922, has nothing to do with the case. What counts is the final proposal which Mr. Ford signed. That is the only offer of Mr. Ford's which is before Congress, and when it is accepted its terms will control the operations at Muscle Shoals.

I wish to take emphatic exception to the statement that hired propagandists have been paid to write newspaper and magazine articles and circulars on the subject of the Ford offer. It is true that there has been a certain amount of speculation in lands at Muscle Shoals, but I have it directly from Mr. Ford's representatives that neither he nor his representatives have purchased a single foot of land at Muscle Shoals, nor anywhere in that country, nor taken options on any; and no one responsibly connected with Mr. Ford or his advisers has prepared any newspaper or magazine articles whatever.

Neither is it true that the advocates of the Ford proposal have attempted to make people believe that Henry Ford is a superman, nor that he should be exempted from the law's restrictions, but those who support his proposal do believe that Henry Ford is a master organizer, a man who has successfully solved the problems of labor and production in the large way which eminently qualifies him to undertake to work out the problems of Muscle Shoals.

As for exempting Henry Ford from legal restrictions, there has been no effort, so far as I can learn, to exempt Mr. Ford from any legal restrictions applying to such a case.

It is true that his offer specifies terms not in accordance with certain provisions of the Federal water power act, but it is also true that the Muscle Shoals project is so far different from an ordinary water-power project that the Federal water power act does not apply to it at all. On the other hand, Mr. Ford's restrictions, regulations, and obligations under the terms of his offer far exceed those of any licensee under the Federal water power act; and if he should substitute its terms for the terms of his offer there would be no gain to the country, but, on the contrary, a great loss.

The purposes of public control of water power are best realized when the maximum amount of water power is developed and the power, or the products of the power, are made available to the public at least cost.

The Federal water power act does not serve these purposes. The Federal Power Commission can no more regulate the rates of public-service utilities than can a private individual. The making of those rates is a function of the States in which the power is generated and used; and the States have provided public-utility commissions which make the rates and are wholly independent of the Federal water power act. When Mr. Ford distributes power in Alabama he automatically comes under the jurisdiction of the Alabama Public Utilities Commission; and if he should sell power from Muscle Shoals, in Tennessee, then it becomes the joint duty of the State public-service commissions of Tennessee and Alabama to determine a rate.

Mr. Ford in distributing power could not avoid regulation like that of any other power distributer if he should desire to avoid it, and I have never heard it intimated that he had any such desire or purpose.

Mr. Ford, however, goes far beyond the water power act when he voluntarily agrees to limit his profit on his principal article of manufacture, for it has been shown by the testimony of officers of the Ordnance Department and the United States engineers that the manufacture of fertilizer, which he has obligated himself or his company to make on demand, will require the greater part of the useful power available at Muscle Shoals.

The Federal Power Commission makes no effort to regulate the profit on any product of a private manufacturing operation which obtains its power from a water-power development licensed under the water power act. It has no constitutional right to do so; but there is nothing in the Constitution which will prohibit an individual from voluntarily placing a limit upon his profits from such a private manufacturing operation, and it is this limitation combined with the definite obligation to produce the equivalent of 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate of soda annually and the maintenance of the nitrate plants in modernized condition, ready for immediate use in a national emergency, which constitute the chief considerations in the Ford offer. These are the principal benefits which the country, as a whole, receives from the operations at Muscle Shoals under the Ford proposal; and in comparison the $5,000,000 which he offers for the Government's nitrate plants is merely a cash payment to bind the transaction. It should be remembered that one of these plants is admittedly unsuccessful, and all are agreed that the other plant uses a process which is obsolete for the purpose of making high-grade fertilizer at low cost.

To substitute the provisions of the water power act for those of the Ford proposal would be to eliminate the Muscle Shoals development as a great fertilizer project with possibilities of benefits to the farmers running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and to substitute in its place a mere water-power development which all will agree is of local and not of national interest and importance.

The contention of the supporters of the Ford proposal that it is not his violation of the provisions of the water power act which troubles the opposition was evident last week when the Federal Power Commission granted a license to this same Henry Ford for a large power development on the Mississippi River at the Twin City Government dam at St. Paul, Minn. The consideration was approximately 4 per cent on the Government's investment at the dam, yet no one declared that it was outrageously inadequate. There was no provision that Mr. Ford should pay any part of the maintenance and operation of the dam and navigation locks, but no one complained. There was no provision that in case the dam should be washed out or destroyed by an earthquake, or blasted out by an enemy, that Mr. Ford should replace the structure at his own expense, yet he was not declared to be a robber. There was no requirement that Mr. Ford should distribute a single kilowatt of this power to the surrounding communities—and, according to his own statement, he proposes to use all of this power in his own operations—yet no one objected. There was no regulation whatever on the profit which Mr. Ford should make on any product of his own manufacture in which this power shall be used. There was no provision for a sinking fund to return to the Government its investment at the end of the lease period. Every single provision for the lease of the power dams at Muscle Shoals which has been pointed to as a violation of the rights of the American people was also violated in this license under the Federal water power act with one single exception. The lease of the Twin City dam is for 50 years.

So, Mr. Speaker, we find that this terrible transgression of the rights of the people is right and fair and just if it is for 50 years, and it only becomes an outrageous robbery when the lease is for 100 years. It is right to do wrong for 50 years, but it is terribly wrong to do wrong for 100 years.

The facts are, Mr. Speaker, that the welfare of the people is safeguarded far more in the Ford offer than it is in the Federal water power act; and if Mr. Ford finds that he must have 100 years in order that the cost of the power and the products made by its use shall not be excessive—for it is well known that a 4 per cent amortization fund is eight times as costly over a 50-year period as over a 100-year period—then I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we must have a better reason for rejecting his offer than this clamor of the opposition about the sacredness of the Federal water power act.

If this Congress desires to protect the rights of the people in their water powers, let them protect these rights under the public welfare clause of the Constitution, rather than upon the questionable basis of the commerce clause, for, Mr. Speaker, the great water powers of the United States are not upon navigable streams; they are upon the nonnavigable streams. And the interests which have opposed the 100-year license to Henry Ford at Muscle Shoals have rights on these nonnavigable streams, which are not limited to 50 years nor to 100 years, but are perpetual.

Take the Aluminum Co. of America, for example, who own outright practically the entire watershed of the Little Tennessee River in eastern Tennessee and western North Carolina. Here, unrestricted by any regulation and unlimited as to their tenure, they are utilizing some 72,000 horsepower for their own private use in the manufacture of aluminum, and have planned to install 475,000 horsepower in the future as their needs require. The water of the Little Tennessee River flows down to Hales Bar, where the United States has granted the Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Co. a license for 99 years on an installation of 56,000 horsepower. But when these same waters come to Muscle Shoals, where the problem of cheaper fertilizer for the farmer of the United States is yet to be worked out, then we say that 50 years is as long a lease as should be granted. The situation is absurd. It is no more right for the Aluminum Co. to enjoy perpetual rights for the use of the waters of the Tennessee River and then deny that right to Mr. Ford than it would be right to do so if the position of these parties were reversed.

Under the Federal water power act a licensee of a Government dam does not agree to maintain the dam at his own expense. Mr. Ford was not required to assume this obligation at the St. Paul dam; why should he do so at Muscle Shoals, when it is not required of any other licensee? Should we penalize Mr. Ford at Muscle Shoals because he has money and a disposition to use it in the interest of the farmer?

Suppose, for example, that a great office building is leased for a period of years and during that time is destroyed, we will say, by an earthquake. Does the lessee assume the responsibility for its rebuilding? Of course not. Neither does the lessee of any Government dam assume the responsibility for its rebuilding in case of destruction, and no licensee under the Federal water power act, whether he leases a Government dam or builds a dam of his own, assumes the responsibility of guaranteeing the replacement of that structure at his own expense if it should be washed out or otherwise destroyed.

Mr. Speaker, this effort on the part of the opposition to single out Mr. Ford and make him the target for this unfair and unjust criticism is evidence to any fair-minded man that this opposition is not sincere. It is not the dear public which they propose to protect and whose interests so deeply concern them, but it is the undeniable fact that Mr. Ford has made a better offer than they are willing to make. He is taking chances and assuming risks which they are unwilling to assume. They have no good reason, Mr. Speaker, to fear that Mr. Ford will fail, but, like the rest of us, they know that such masterly organizing ability, backed with practically unlimited capital, can and will do the things at Muscle Shoals which they say can not be done. What they fear is not that Mr. Ford will fail to produce fertilizers but that on the contrary he will cut the cost in half, and perhaps more than half; that he will set up a competition that will strike the control of the American nitrate trade from the grasp of the British and destroy the monopoly control of our supply of such a useful metal as aluminum in this country and reduce the cost of both these and other products to the consumer.

Since this country can secure a guaranteed production of the equivalent of 250,000 tons of nitrate of soda by disposing of war-built plants, formerly costing $85,000,000, for $5,000,000, then I say that this country is fortunate to have such an opportunity. Only two years ago we proposed to scrap these same plants and to get no value from them except what little they might bring as junk, and here comes a man agreeing to produce as much nitrate as all American agriculture together with imports from Chile in normal years, and backing his offer with the assets of an estate worth hundreds of millions of dollars. Under the Ford offer we get this great production annually and at the same time are assured of a national nitrogen industry which will maintain this Nation in the leading position which we ought to hold among the nations in a matter so important to both national defense and permanent agriculture.

The opponents of the Ford offer have little regard for truth in their effort to set up reasons why this offer should not be accepted. One of them says that Mr. Ford "agrees to pay nothing for the great reservoirs that the Government must build to hold the water that is backed away from Dam No. 3."

The United States engineers have testified (Senate hearings, page 35) that there is no storage reservoir back of Dam No. 3. There is a lake there, to be sure, and Mr. Ford pays 4 per cent interest on the cost of the lands and overflow rights required in the creation of this lake; but as for storage reservoirs of value to increase the power at Muscle Shoals, these must be built, not back of Dam No. 3 but on the upper tributaries of the Tennessee River where the sites are available, and Mr. Ford's representatives have testified that he proposes to build these dams at his own expense. This is a purely business proposition, Mr. Speaker, for there is only 241,300 horsepower that can be depended upon all the year round at both these dams combined, even when both steam-power plants are used to their full capacity to supplement the water power. Upward of 500,000 horsepower of generating equipment is without any reliable supply of water for its operation and must stand practically idle until these regulating dams are built. Mr. Ford, however, has agreed to pay the Government 4 per cent interest on its cost, whether he can operate this equipment or not, so that he pays a large annual cash penalty until these dams are built.

As to the Gorgas plant, if the contentions of the representatives of the Alabama Power Co. are correct, that they have a legal right to exercise an option to purchase the Government's Gorgas power plant, then that right is theirs whether the Ford offer is accepted or not, for Mr. Ford specifically provides in section 12 of his offer, dealing with the Gorgas plant, that "nothing in this paragraph shall be held to affect any question of the validity of any provision of said contract"—between the Government and the Alabama Power Co. If the Government has no right to sell the Gorgas plant to Mr. Ford, as these power interests maintain, then under the terms of the Ford offer they get the Gorgas plant and he does not.

And so, Mr. President, summing up the situation, we find that the Government asked for bids on the Muscle Shoals project; that it secured only one bid which the committees of Congress were willing to recommend, and this was the bid from Henry Ford. We have only to review the record to see that, instead of requiring Congress to sign on the dotted line, Mr. Ford has made every effort to comply with the wishes of our committee with whom he was dealing. No less than 27 changes in the language of the Ford offer have been made since it was originally presented on July 8, 1921. In the face of a torrent of criticism and abuses Mr. Ford has remained silent, patiently awaiting the answer to which he is entitled at the hands of this Congress. His offer has been attacked from every angle, but the attackers are those who would play the dog in the manger and prevent Mr. Ford from doing that which they themselves declined to do when they were offered the opportunity under conditions even more favorable than those of the Ford proposal.

Aside from these few selfish interests, Mr. Speaker, there is a nation-wide demand that Henry Ford, the one man with the courage and the money to solve the problem at Muscle Shoals, be given the chance to do it. We may delay and argue and evade the issue, but the longer we postpone our decision the more insistent will be the demand throughout the country that the Congress of the United States shall play fair with Henry Ford.

Mr. HILL, Mr. APPLEBY, Mr. TINCHER, Mr. STRONG, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. TILSON asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, January 28, 1923, a Member of this House made a speech at a Sunday afternoon mass meeting in Baltimore arranged by the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland.

This Member saw fit to attack me as inconsistent upon the question of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. The Baltomore Sun, on Monday morning, January 29, reported this Member as having said of me that in Washington I advocated enforcement of the Volstead Act as a State proposition, while in Baltimore I opposed a State enforcement law. It is true that I opposed, and I am proud of having opposed, the fastening upon the State of Maryland of a law similar to the so-called Volstead Act, which is based upon fundamental untruth and injustice.

It is true that I stand, and have consistently stood, for the proper balance of State rights and State obligations under the Constitution. As long as the Federal Government maintains upon its statute books the Volstead Act, I am entirely opposed to the State of Maryland putting a similar act upon its statutes and thus creating two sets of laws covering the same subject matter, under which a citizen of Maryland could be tried and convicted in a State court and sent to the Baltimore City jail, and could afterwards be tried in a Federal court and sent to the Atlanta penitentiary for buying from one bootlegger at one time in one place one pint of pure grain alcohol to be used to rub a sick baby.

Our colleague who made this recent speech in Baltimore followed closely the line of thought and action of the Anti-Saloon League of America. A short time previous to his remarks the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America unanimously adopted a resolution of which the following is a portion:

> When a daily paper like the Chicago Tribune and a college president like the president of Columbia University advocate nullification of the Constitution by those persons and communities which do not approve of any particular amendment to that document, it is time that the friends of orderly government should enter a united protest against such unpatriotic and individualistic doctrine. The acceptance of this annulment doctrine would result in the flouting of the Constitution in any community where any considerable number of the people, for any reason whatsoever, do not favor its enforcement. As long as this is an inseparable Union, nullification of the Constitution by any State or community is treason, and those who advocate it are fomenters of treason.

The Anti-Saloon League of America obviously forgets that they passed the eighteenth amendment by the use of votes of Members of this House who were sitting in direct nullification of the fourteenth amendment. We do not, however, hear them calling themselves "traitors" and "anarchists" for this reason. To me this is the best example of the warped and fanatical viewpoint of the professional prohibitionist, who sees nothing in the Constitution of the United States except the eighteenth amendment.

The same resolution adopted unanimously by the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America contained the following illustration of this warped viewpoint:

> In view of the many and increasing violations of the prohibition law by aliens, we hereby urge the adoption of a bill by the United States Senate, which has already passed the House by a vote of 222 to 73, to deport such aliens after a hearing has been had before the Secretary of Labor and such aliens have been declared undesirable citizens. (If "aliens," how can they be "citizens"?)

I am delighted to say to you that the Senate has not passed this absurd bill which I fought, and I only refer to it as an illustration that the Anti-Saloon League thinks nothing of other provisions of the Constitution, but would apply the penalty of banishment to aliens who violate a law connected with prohibition, which seems to be the only important thing in the Constitution to those who call some of us traitors because we desire to repeal the Volstead Act.

Because I oppose and have consistently opposed the Volstead Act, and because I oppose the constitutional principle, or lack of principle, embalmed in the eighteenth amendment, this same Member in Baltimore and his colleagues of the Anti-Saloon League refer to me as an "anarchist."

In view of this fact, I will present to this House the following observations on the tenth amendment and the fourteenth amendment as related to the eighteenth amendment. On March 7 I expect to participate in a joint debate with Mr. Wheeler, the general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League; our colleague, Representative KELLY of Pennsylvania; and Mr. Hudson Maxim, of New Jersey, on the subject "The eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act—are they reasonable and tenable?"

Availing myself of the unanimous consent of this House, I present to you the following general outline of my proposed remarks before the Economic Club of Providence, R. I., at the Biltmore Hotel:

Is the eighteenth amendment reasonable? Is the Volstead Act reasonable? Is the eighteenth amendment tenable? Is the Volstead Act tenable? These are the four questions for consideration to-night. To all four of these questions my opponents in this discussion, Representative KELLY of Pennsylvania and Mr. Wheeler, the general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, will undoubtedly give an unqualified "yes." To me, the eighteenth amendment is not reasonable, and the Volstead Act is neither reasonable nor tenable. Whether the amendment is tenable depends on one's definition of "tenable."

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT WAS ADOPTED BY NULLIFICATIONISTS OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The eighteenth amendment was passed in the House of Representatives by the votes of Members whose very presence in Congress shows that the fourteenth amendment is not "tenable." The Volstead Act was passed in the House by votes of Members who sat as the result of the nullification of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment, which provides that when the right to vote for Representatives in Congress is denied to any of the male—now also female—citizens or in any way abridged "the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such citizens shall bear to the whole number of citizens 21 years of age in such State."

If the South had not nullified the fourteenth amendment there would to-day be no eighteenth amendment, yet willfully closing their eyes to this fact, the Anti-Saloon League, whose views Mr. KELLY and Mr. Wheeler represent, call me a nullificationist because I oppose the retention in the Constitution of "stolen goods," which the eighteenth amendment most certainly is.

The fourteenth amendment remains as a scrap of paper, a part of the Constitution, but it has been nullified by almost unanimous consent. When Representative TINKHAM, of Massachusetts, tried even to inquire into its nullification, the Anti-Saloon-League-dominated House in the Sixty-seventh Congress voted down his resolution. If "tenable" means to hold a place in the Constitution as the fourteenth amendment holds its place, then the eighteenth amendment is "tenable," but if "tenable" means vital and enforceable, then I say that the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act alike are neither reasonable nor tenable.

IS THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT REASONABLE?

Is the eighteenth amendment reasonable? The answer to this question depends on one's conception of the fundamental theory of American government.

One of your local prohibitionists recently said, "Three classes of people make up the opposition to the prohibition program—first, those who want to make money out of the liquor traffic; second, those whose craving for alcohol is stronger than their love for the fundamental law of their country; and, third, those who worship at the shrine of the pagan god, 'personal liberty.'"

I do not, nor have I ever, nor has any of my family "made money out of the liquor traffic." When in 1795 my great-grandfather, for 64 years the established minister of a Puritan church in New England, dedicated the second meeting house, the selectmen paid for "entertainment for the ministers." After the morning service they were regaled by a "hospitable mug of cider," and after the afternoon service "an exhilarating draft of hot toddy." My grandfather succeeded him in the ministry of the church thus dedicated; and if the present meeting house is ever abandoned for church purposes, by the deed of gift it reverts to me; yet I do not fall into that second class—those whose craving for alcohol is stronger than their love of country. Therefore I, and perhaps some of you, must be class 3, designated by Mr. KELLY and Mr. WHEELER'S friend as worshipers at the shrine of the pagan god, "personal liberty."

THE PAGAN GOD, PERSONAL LIBERTY.

Are those who say that the eighteenth amendment is unreasonable worshipers at the shrine of a pagan god? Is advocacy of "personal liberty" a pagan thing? I think not, and I call to my support the fundamental theory of government of Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE FOUNDED ON THE WORSHIP OF PERSONAL LIBERTY.

The reverend and learned Cotton Mather, D. D., writing in 1696, relates that about the year 1630 there arrived in New England "one Mr. Roger Williams." He then relates the events which led to the banishment of Mr. Williams from Massachusetts and narrates that—upon the sentence of the court, Mr. Williams and his party going abroad (as one says) to seek their providences, removed into the southern part of New England, where he, with a few of his own sect, settled a place called Providence.

That Providence is the same Providence in which we meet to-night. Although Roger Williams might not recognize some of the physical changes that have occurred, he would find the same worship here of "personal liberty" upon whose faith he founded this city, for Doctor Mather continues the story of Williams and his followers, describing the founding of Providence thusly:

Whereupon they dissolved themselves and became that sort of sect which we term "Seekers," keeping to that one principle that every man should have the liberty to worship God according to the light of his own conscience.

For myself I prefer to follow the Rev. Roger Williams than the Rev. Mr. Tarbell. I worship "personal liberty" as Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Carroll worshipped it in the days of the Revolution; and we have the authority of Roger Williams that when we do worship "personal liberty" we bow at the shrine of the true God and that we do not worship at the shrine of a pagan god. It is the Anti-Saloon Leaguers that worship at the shrine of the pagan god of the Arabs of the Sahara, not we.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT IS CONSTITUTIONALLY UNREASONABLE.

The eighteenth amendment is constitutionally unreasonable judged by the fundamental theory of American government upon which the Union was formed, upon which Rhode Island entered the Union, and upon which the Constitution remained until the adoption of the eighteenth amendment in 1919.

The tenth amendment, adopted before Rhode Island consented to enter the Union, provides:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

THE EIGHTEENTH NULLIFIES THE TENTH AMENDMENT.

The eighteenth amendment is a direct nullification of the express guaranty of the tenth amendment, upon the faith of which Rhode Island became one of the United States. The theory of the founders was that general matters were for the Federal Government, local matters for the States. The tenth amendment was a basic guaranty adopted with the Constitution itself.

The local views of the descendants of those who banished Roger Williams, under this tenth amendment, could be retained in Massachusetts, but the local views of Williams and his people could equally be retained by their descendants in Rhode Island. If Massachusetts wanted to believe in witchcraft it was permitted to do so, but it could not force Rhode Island to burn old women for riding astral broomsticks at night.

Under this theory of the basic law, Rhode Island might and did prohibit murder and arson and rape, but that was never considered the function of the Federal Government. Under the basic theory of our Government, Maine had entire right to pass a law prohibiting the use of alcoholic beverages, just as Massachusetts had a right to maintain the Puritan churches by taxes levied on Baptists and Episcopalians. All these were local powers of the States. The reason for the existence of Article X was that many men of many minds might all live together under a Federal Government of limited powers without rending the Constitution by forcing local views on other localities. Kansas might lie down with Rhode Island, and the Constitution be the guardian of them both.

State prohibition is constitutionally reasonable, but national prohibition of any kind of beverage is no more reasonable than would be national prohibition of dancing or card playing, which are denounced by the discipline of the Methodist Church as two of the trilogy of iniquity of which alcoholic beverage is the first.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT IS NOT "TENABLE."

If the fourteenth amendment is "tenable," then is also the eighteenth, as I have before pointed out. The same combination of prohibition States that passed, may hold the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution, but constitutions, like laws made in pursuance of them, are no stronger than the sentiment of the people of the various States. The New England ministers in 1795 cheered themselves with mugs of cider and warmed themselves with hot toddies of New England rum after preaching in fireless churches. If the prototypes of the Anti-Saloon Leaguers had abused them as they abuse me and some of you to-day, the ministers might have quoted to them the words of our Lord in Matthew, Chapter XI, verses 18 and 19:

For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil.

The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners! * * *

James Madison stated that in all ages in all places "some exciting substance has been sought for as a relief from the languor of idleness or the fatigues of labor." He added that in the progress of refinement "beverages of less intoxicating but still of an exhilarating quality have been more or less common."

The superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland declares, when seeking the rural vote, that any man who owns an apple tree can use his apples for cider, can let it stand and get hard and can give it to guests in his home. The Secretary of Agriculture says that hard cider averages 6 per cent of alcohol. All we farmers—for I own a share in a New England orchard—know that if we put a barrel of cider outside the door in a New England winter, let it freeze and throw away the ice, we get something over 30 per cent of alcohol.

Since prohibition, 60,000 illicit stills have been seized by the Federal Government. The apple tree still bears its fruit, the winter winds still freeze, and the moonshiner's still is easily made in the mountains and in city cellars. The eighteenth amendment, except as a general declaration of a State, not a Federal, principle, is untenable by the laws of nature itself.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT A DANGEROUS PRECEDENT.

The eighteenth amendment will be difficult to remove from the Constitution and therefore the above discussion is more or less academic. It is important, however, to consider the true fundamentals of the Constitution, because the same well-meaning people who backed the eighteenth amendment are proposing further amendments to the Constitution to provide for the extension of the Federal power further into the sphere of the local State power by assumption by the United States Government of the laws of marriage and divorce and of the regulation of hours of labor for children and women. I helped pass the child-labor laws of Maryland, and I am for proper laws on domestic relations, just as I am for proper laws regulating the speed of motors or the flights of migratory birds, but they are matters for the individual States and not for the Federal Government.

IS THE VOLSTEAD ACT REASONABLE?

Is the Volstead Act reasonable? How shall we deal with the eighteenth amendment while it remains a part of the Constitution?

Mr. Chief Justice White said, in the case of Rhode Island versus Palmer, of the eighteenth amendment:

* * * as the prohibition did not define the intoxicating beverages which it prohibited, in the absence of anything to the contrary it clearly, from the very fact of its adoption, cast upon Congress the duty not only of defining the prohibited beverages but also of enacting such regulations and sanctions as were essential to make them operative when defined. * * *

The Volstead Act is one of many possible efforts at enforcement, but the Volstead Act is in two essentials utterly unreasonable.

ONE-HALF OF 1 PER CENT IS NOT INTOXICATING IN FACT.

It is unreasonable, first, because it sets up a false standard of what is prohibited by the eighteenth amendment. The presence of one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in a beverage does not make that beverage "intoxicating." When, therefore, the Volstead Act, posing as an enforcement act, sets up a false standard which is contrary to fact, it seeks to enforce a falsehood.

I do not ask you to accept my statement on this. I shall give you the testimony of Mr. VOLSTEAD himself, of Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, and of the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland that one-half of 1 per cent is not intoxicating, and that therefore the fundamental basis of the Volstead Act is false.

On Friday, June 10, 1921, before the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, discussing cider and homemade wine, Representative CANTRILL asked Representative VOLSTEAD the following question:

According to your construction, it was not the intent of Congress that it would be a violation of law if wine was made at home containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol?

To this Representative VOLSTEAD replied:

No; my contention is this, that it might contain 1 or 2 or possibly 3 per cent without being intoxicating.

On May 2, 1922, Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes wrote me officially that under the provisions of section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act, nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices manufactured exclusively for use in the home of the maker are not necessarily limited to "less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, but must be intoxicating in fact to be in violation of the Volstead Act." He also stated that "no specific alcoholic limit had been fixed," and that "as at present advised his office was not disposed to take action against the manufacture for use in the home of the maker of cider or other fruit juices containing not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume."

I at once, on June 12, 1922, asked him to fix the "specific alcoholic limit" of cider and homemade wine. On June 20, 1922, he declined to do so, and gave as a reason "that Congress has not done so, and the courts have not as yet definitely settled the question."

After some more correspondence, on July 3, 1922, Mr. Haynes wrote me that his statement of May 2 was a "misapprehension." Finally I got the Secretary of the Treasury to ask the Attorney General for a ruling as to what "nonintoxicating" meant in section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act. The Attorney General has not yet rendered an opinion, but these proceedings show that even the Government itself agrees to the falsity of the fundamental one-half of 1 per cent declaration of the Volstead Act.

I have already quoted to you what the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland said as to the permissibility of hard cider under the Volstead Act. We therefore have Mr. VOLSTEAD, the Federal prohibition commissioner, and the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland agreeing that the fundamental statement of the Volstead Act that beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol are "intoxicating" is not true.

THE VOLSTEAD ACT CONTAINS IN ITSELF A DOUBLE STANDARD OF MORALITY.

The Volstead Act in itself contains a double standard of morality. Section 29, Title II, of the act provides that none of the penalties imposed in the Volstead Act shall apply to "nonintoxicating" cider and fruit juices made for use in the home. I have already said that the Member of Congress, after whom the Volstead Act is named, Mr. VOLSTEAD, has said that under this section a beverage might contain as much as 3 per cent of alcohol without being "intoxicating." This section applies a standard of truth to the determination of what is or is not "intoxicating," but the remaining portion of the Volstead Act applies a standard of falsehood to the determination of what is or is not intoxicating, when it states that one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol contained in beer or other beverages makes that beverage intoxicating. It is impossible to have proper respect for a law which bears on its face these utterly inconsistent and unreasonable provisions. If one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol plus malt and hop juices is intoxicating, why is not the same amount of alcohol plus apple juice intoxicating? If 3 per cent of alcohol plus apple juice or fruit juice is not intoxicating, why should 3 per cent of alcohol plus the juices of hops and malt be legally declared to be intoxicating?

Mr. Chief Justice White has very clearly stated that the eighteenth amendment does not define the "intoxicating" beverages which it prohibits. It is therefore the duty of Congress to make such a definition or to permit the States to do so under the concurrent power. The definition contained in Title II, section 29, of the Volstead Act prohibits what is actually intoxicating, but the prohibition of all other beverages containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol makes the Volstead Act totally unreasonable.

THE VOLSTEAD ACT IS NOT ONLY UNREASONABLE BUT UNTENABLE.

Congress has not honestly carried out its duty as set forth by Mr. Chief Justice White under the eighteenth amendment, since it has not honestly defined "intoxicating beverages." No law based on a legislative lie can endure.

Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, in an address delivered at the International Convention of the World League Against Alcoholism, recently held in Toronto, said:

The reason for prohibition of the beverage liquor traffic must rest absolutely upon fundamental truth.

He then quoted "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." There may be some honest ground for difference of opinion as to whether or not claret and the ordinary white wines are in fact intoxicating, but there can be no sincere contention that beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol is intoxicating, when VOLSTEAD himself says that cider and fruit juices containing 3 per cent of alcohol are not intoxicating. Doctor Cherrington is right when he says that the Volstead Act must stand or fall on the basis of truth. It is not based on truth, and therefore I hold that it is not tenable.

THE VOLSTEAD ACT HINDERS TEMPERANCE.

The Volstead Act is hindering the movement toward temperance which was so successfully under way when the eighteenth amendment was adopted. A recent study of statistics shows the evil effects of prohibition in Rhode Island. From 1920 until 1922 there has been a retrogression of temperance in this State. In 1920 there were 12 deaths in Rhode Island from alcoholism, while in 1922 there were 35 deaths attributed to this cause. In 1920 there were 14 insanity cases due to alcoholism admitted to your State institutions. There were 41 in 1922. In 1920 there were 153 cases of intemperate parents responsible for their children being brought under the supervision of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. In 1922 there were 1,036 of such cases. In 1920 there were 620 men sheltered and fed in the municipal lodge. This number in 1922 had increased to 3,266. In 1920 there were 4,118 arrests for drunkenness in your State's six cities; in 1922 this number had grown to 6,912. In 1920 there were 11,995 arrests for all such causes in the six cities, while in 1922 there were 15,692 such arrests.

The same sort of facts are reported all through the country. In Georgia, the home of so-called prohibition, R. Q. Merrick, chief of the prohibition forces, reports that his force of 20 men in the past eight months had captured approximately 40,000 quarts of all brands of imported and domestic whiskies, in addition to more than 100 automobiles and auto trucks transporting intoxicating beverages. He also reports that in Georgia, the State which Representative UPSHAW holds up as a model for the prohibition world, in the same eight months about 1,110 liquor stills and 700,000 gallons of beer mash were destroyed.

I do not believe the Volstead Act is tenable, and I am one of those optimists who believe that it will be modified by the 68th Congress.

POSSIBLE SUBSTITUTES FOR THE VOLSTEAD ACT.

If the false standard set up by the Volstead Act is swept away, what will take its place? It may be that for one-half of 1 per cent, 3 per cent will be substituted. It may be that the test applied by Title II, section 29, will be adopted throughout the Volstead Act, and only those beverages will be prohibited which are "intoxicating in fact," such determination to be left to the individual cases. It may be that a greater than 3 per cent of alcoholic content will be permitted. Some change, however, will, in my opinion, be made.

The question which appeals most strongly to me, however, is how can we possibly reconcile the eighteenth amendment with the tenth amendment of the Constitution and restore the rights of the States without the kind of nullification of the eighteenth amendment which has already been applied to the fourteenth amendment? I suggest, therefore, for your consideration, the following substitute for the Volstead Act:

MY SUBSTITUTE FOR THE VOLSTEAD ACT.

Repeal the Volstead Act and enact the following:

SECTION 1. Each State shall for itself define the meaning of the words "intoxicating liquors" as used in section 1 of Article XVIII of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and each State shall itself enforce within its own limits its own laws on this subject.

SEC. 2. Any person who transports or causes to be transported into any State any beverage prohibited by such State as being an "intoxicating liquor" shall be punished by the United States by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or by a fine of not less than $10,000 nor more than $100,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The first section of this proposed enforcement act is based on the theory of local option; the second section is based on the Webb-Kenyon Act, by which the United States guarantees the States from outside interference. The proposed substitute, taken as a whole, permits concurrent action each in their own sphere by the United States and by the individual States to carry out the provisions of the eighteenth amendment.

LOCAL OPTION AND STATE'S RIGHTS.

In 1907 the Anti-Saloon League approved my declaration for local option, made as a candidate for the Maryland Legislature. In 1914 I advised the American Express Co. that the Webb-Kenyon Act was constitutional, and that they should not ship liquor into West Virginia.

The Supreme Court sustained my view, and Mr. Wheeler successfully argued that view in the Supreme Court in the appeal in the cases of Clark Distilling Co. against Western Maryland Railway Co. and the State of West Virginia, and Clark Distilling Co. against my client, the American Express Co., and the State of West Virginia, which cases were decided in 1917.

The Volstead Act, being based on a misstatement of fact, should be repealed, and a true standard applied to decide what are intoxicating beverages. Under the law I suggest, the States could not say constitutionally that 49 per cent whisky is not "intoxicating," but they could say that 2.75 per cent beer, or beer and light wines of a higher alcoholic content are not "intoxicating," and the Supreme Court would say, as it did of the one-half of 1 per cent declaration of Congress, that a State's declaration to this effect is not improper.

THE PAGAN GOD OF UNTRUTH.

The President, on December 8, 1922, in his message to Congress, referred to "men who are rending the moral fiber of the Republic through easy contempt for the prohibition laws." There is unquestionably throughout this Nation "easy contempt" for the Volstead Act. As I view this act, based on an untrue standard, and containing also one standard for the people of the city and another for the people of the rural communities, I am not surprised at this contempt, but the pitiful thing, and I say this as one who was formerly a United States district attorney, is that this contempt spreads to other laws. The sooner, therefore, we abolish the Volstead Act, the sooner shall we bring back that old respect for Federal law which was so strong in the United States. The sooner we do away with the immoral Volstead Act, the sooner shall we cease to worship "at the shrine of the pagan god," the pagan god of Mahomedan untruth, masquerading in the guise of moral law.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to call the attention of the House to Senate bill 3968, introduced by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, passed by the Senate September 1, 1922, and now on the House Calendar, to improve the navigability of waters of the United States by preventing oil pollution thereof. This bill is exactly the same as H. R. 10956, which I introduced in the House on March 18, 1922.

Numerous hearings were given by the Rivers and Harbors Committee on H. R. 10956, before whom the bill was pending. Testimony was submitted both orally and in the form of briefs by steamship owners, harbor masters, fishermen, bathing-beach owners, fire underwriters, chambers of commerce, and other interested individuals and organizations. The consensus of this testimony was to the effect that the evil of oil pollution as now practiced was a very serious menace to the fishing, bathing, harbor, property, and other interests adjacent to ocean and ocean inlets on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Hearings were also given before the Senate Committee on Commerce on the Senate bill. The measure was passed by the Senate and came to our Rivers and Harbors Committee. This committee, after many weeks of deliberation, reported the bill to the House. The bill as reported amends the Senate bill by more clearly defining navigable waters.

At all of the hearings representatives from the various oil companies were present and agreed that the nuisance should be abolished by appropriate legislation.

Since the bill has been placed on the House Calendar I have made repeated efforts to get it before the House for consideration. Many Members on each side of the House have expressed themselves as anxious to vote upon this important legislation. My friends in this body, as well as Senator FRELINGHUYSEN'S friends and colleagues in the Senate, have urged upon the Speaker pro tempore that the proposed legislation should be enacted into law, but all of the requests and arguments have fallen upon deaf ears. As a result of the Speaker pro tempore's opposition and refusal to accede to the wishes of his colleagues, both in the House and the Senate, no domestic oil pollution bill can be enacted at this session. You will probably recall that the House joint resolution which I introduced in the last session authorizing and requesting the President to call a conference of maritime nations with a view to adopting effective means for the prevention of the pollution of navigable waters, passed both Houses and was signed by the President. This resolution deals only with oil pollution in navigable waters beyond the 3-mile limit.

The oil interests have been most diligent in their efforts to prevent a vote being taken upon the proposed domestic legislation. In my mind there is no question that had the House been allowed to vote upon this important measure the bill could have been passed by a large majority. However, the seed has been sown, a great deal of valuable data on the subject has been developed, and a large amount of information has been printed by the Rivers and Harbors Committee which will be of service in the next Congress when the measure is reintroduced.

In making these statements for the information of the House and the benefit of my constituents who are so vitally interested I desire to clearly indicate where the responsibility rests. I have labored long and earnestly to secure the enactment of this much-needed legislation, and the responsibility for the fact that the Members of this body were prevented from voting on the measure rests not upon my shoulders.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, under leave given to extend I am inserting speech of Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, of Ohio, delivered before the Kansas Day Club at Topeka, Kans., on January 29, 1923.

The speech is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, OF OHIO, BEFORE KANSAS DAY CLUB, TOPEKA, KANS., JANUARY 29, 1923.

I am here to speak to you as a Republican to Republicans. I am here not to apologize or explain but rather to boast of the record of my party, not only of what it has done in the remote past but what it has done since the beginning of the present administration and is doing now.

I come from a State which gave to the Nation the great man whose birthday we are honoring to-night, one of the most beloved of all Presidents of the United States, William McKinley; a State which has but recently given to the Nation a President equally beloved, Warren G. Harding. We Republicans of Ohio are proud of our party and we are proud of its leader. We indicated that in no uncertain way last fall. It is true that a Democrat was elected governor—and it is upon that fact that our opponents base their charge that Ohio in the last election did not support the President. In the campaign for governor, however, national issues were not even remotely considered. The issues which determined that election were purely of a local nature. But when it came to national questions, where the question of support of the national administration was concerned, there the people spoke in no uncertain tones, for they gave to the Republican candidates for Congress a net majority of more than 140,000, one of the largest ever recorded in Ohio in a nonpresidential year.

Far from apologizing for the record of my party in and out of Congress I affirm that no party in the history of the Nation has ever within the same period accomplished so much progressive and constructive legislation, gone so far in the redemption of its platform pledges, done so much for the preservation of the peace of the world as has the Republican Party since the inauguration of President Harding.

We came into power when there was financial chaos at home as well as abroad, when we were still in a state of war—technically at least—with the Central Powers, because a Democratic President had persistently refused to ratify any treaty of peace which did not contain as a vital and integral part that wholly un-American and vicious provision known as article 10 of the League of Nations, which the American people had repudiated a few months before by a majority of more than 7,000,000 votes. We found that the national debt, which had been something less than $1,000,000,000 when the Democratic Party had last assumed the reins of Government had risen to the appalling and crushing total of more than $25,000,000,000, and that the expenses of government, which in 1913 were in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000 a year, had risen to the staggering sum of more than $5,500,000,000 a year.

We at once set about putting our house in order, and how well it has been done is indicated by the fact that the national debt has been reduced by more than $2,000,000,000 and the national annual expenditures by nearly $2,500,000,000.

That debt when we took hold was composed of two principal items, about $14,000,000,000 made up mainly of war expenditures and $11,000,000,000 of loans to our allies in the late war.

No arrangements whatever had been made for the collection or funding of this foreign debt. In fact, it had been contracted in a manner wholly outside the law. The first Liberty bond act, under which for the first time a foreign loan was authorized, provided that all loans should be secured by the bonds of foreign governments similar in terms to the bonds issued by the United States to provide the necessary funds.

The various other bond acts had a similar provision. Did the last administration follow this plain provision of the law? On the contrary, for not one cent's worth of the $11,000,000,000 actually loaned was a cent's worth of security given. All that we received as security was an informal I O U signed by the ambassador or commissioner of the debtor country who happened to be in Washington at the time. As a consequence we have not received a dollar either on account or by way of interest from that day to this from any country except Great Britain, and it has only been in the past few months that Great Britain has made some payments, aggregating, I believe, about $100,000,000. We think that that debt was honestly and honorably contracted and ought to be paid. Some well-intentioned people have thought we ought to forget about it. We take the position that while it is possible that some countries may never be in a financial condition to repay the loan in full, that, nevertheless, we do not intend to officially forgive it. On the contrary, we have passed legislation providing for a commission, which the President has appointed, to take up with the various nations plans for the refunding of the loans. That commission has already met with a similar commission from Great Britain, and we understand that they are very close together on a proposal to fund the entire British debt into long-term bonds and provide for the immediate payment of interest.

The remaining $14,000,000,000 of the national debt is a direct inheritance from a Democratic administration notable for its careless, injudicious, and extravagant methods of administering the country's financial affairs. No such riotous expenditure of the people's money has ever been known in history. Favored contractors literally wallowed in huge profits; the effect of the cost-plus contract system upon the cost of living was immediately felt, because under that system the greater the cost for materials of every sort the greater the profits to the contractor. Billions of dollars were wasted in construction of plants and the acquisition of war materials which were never used.

More than a billion dollars was expended in the building of airplanes, and not one fighting plane was ever delivered to our troops at the front. Several billions of dollars were expended in the manufacture of guns, and less than a hundred cannon were ever delivered to our troops in France. Hundreds of millions were expended in the building of plants to produce nitrates and similar war materials, and not a pound of nitrates was ever produced. Of that $14,000,000,000 it is safe to say that somewhere between a third and a half was an absolutely useless expenditure and represents nothing but waste, extravagance, and worse.

Most of it is gone forever, but a part we hope may be recoverable, and this administration is bending every effort to save something from the wreck. Civil suits have already been instituted for the recovery of hundreds of millions, and I am informed by the Department of Justice that within the next 90 days suits will be filed for the recovery of more than $300,000,000 additional. We are going to see this thing through to a finish. We want to see that all innocent persons are absolved, but we intend that guilty persons shall be brought to justice.

The most difficult and vital problem that we faced at the outset was to restore the running expenses of the Government to something like a reasonable basis. We promised economy and we have given you economy to an extent almost unbelievable. We found the cost of government in the last year of the Wilson administration, three years after the war was over, still remaining at the appalling total of more than $5,500,000,000. The following year it was reduced to less than $4,000,000,000, representing a saving of something over $1,600,000,000. The next year it was reduced to $3,500,000,000, and for the fiscal year of 1924, for which all the appropriations have been acted on by the House, including the deficit for the Postal Service but not including that part of the Postal Service which is self-sustaining, it will amount to only a trifle over $3,000,000,000. When you take from this the nearly $2,000,000,000 of fixed charges—that is to say, interest on the public debt, expenses of the Veterans' Bureau, the sinking fund, and the increases in pensions—the fixed charge for the conduct of every department of the Government is only about $1,080,000,000 aside from the self-sustaining portion of the Postal Service, so that we are now back practically to the pre-war basis.

I say to you, my fellow citizens, that if the Republican Party had done nothing else its record for strict practical economy deserves the gratitude of the people because this colossal and unexampled saving of the public money was accomplished without any undue weakening of the two defensive arms of the Government—the Army and the Navy—or the crippling of any of its civil branches.

Such an unprecedented record could have been accomplished only by a party which has at all times acted with an eye single to the redemption of its pledge to reduce the cost of government.

This retrenchment of expenses and expenditures made possible a very substantial reduction of the tax burden and leaves the way open for a further substantial reduction, I hope, in the near future. One of the major enactments of the last Congress was an amendment of the existing revenue law. It repealed the excess-profits tax—a tax which, if justifiable in time of war, is not justifiable in time of peace, because it is the most damaging of all taxes to ordinary business, and particularly to little business as compared with big business. It reduced the high surtaxes from 65 per cent to 50 per cent, for it had become apparent that the very high taxes were driving wealth from useful investment into investments where it could not be taxed at all. It repealed all taxes on transportation; it repealed the taxes on clothes, musical instruments, athletic goods, soda-water fountains, and many other so-called nuisance taxes. It increased the exemptions in the income tax law applying to heads of families with a salary or wage income of less than $5,000 a year, a provision which will favorably affect more than 90 per cent of the taxpayers. The total amount of reduction in taxes brought about by these reforms amounts to something like $850,000,000 a year—a reduction which seemed absolutely impossible at the outset and could only have been effected by the most rigid sort of economy.

Let me put before you in another way the financial situation as we met it and the manner in which it has been solved. The fiscal year 1922 began with a deficit of $759,000,000, but before the close of the year that deficit had been transposed into a surplus of $313,000,000. The fiscal year 1923, which began on the 1st of last July, opened with an apparent deficit between the income and the outgo of $698,000,000. So far this has been worked down to $272,000,000, and we hope that it will be wiped out before the 1st of next July. So far as we are able to calculate now there is an apparent surplus for 1924, for which the House has just finished making appropriations, of $181,000,000, so that even if the deficit of $272,000,000 for this year is not wiped out we will show for the first three years of the Harding administration an actual surplus of about $220,000,000.

In addition to this we have, as I said before, made a reduction of $850,000,000 a year in taxes, which in three years will amount to $2,550,000,000. That means that we have transposed about $1,400,000,000 of deficits to a surplus of $220,000,000, which, including the $2,550,000,000 saved in taxes, makes a change of substantially $4,000,000,000 from the red-ink side of the national account to the credit side in the first three years of the Harding administration. Such an achievement as this has been accomplished by no other nation in the world, and I doubt whether any business institution could make anything like the same showing.

Full advantage was taken of the Budget system inaugurated in the first few months of this administration by the passage of a bill which had been vetoed by President Wilson, but much of the credit must go to the Committee on Appropriations of the House, of which your Congressman, DAN ANTHONY, is a most influential and valuable member. This year all previous records for speed in the passage of the necessary appropriation bills have gone by the board. A week ago last Saturday the House passed the last of the appropriation bills, 40 days in advance of the earliest time in which the appropriation bills have been passed by any Congress in the short session in the history of the country.

Another of the major enactments of the last Congress was the passage of a law which restored the time-honored American system of protection to American industries and to American labor, under which we have invariably thrived and without which we have invariably suffered. We found the gates of all our ports of entry wide open to the products of the world. We closed them, to the extent at least that fair competition might be had and a fair chance afforded to the American producer to sell in the Nation's market. Let me tell you this, my friends, and it is true as any postulate of Euclid: No Republican tariff bill ever closed a factory, mortgaged a farm, or lost an American workingman his job. No Democratic tariff bill ever failed to do all three.

It was predicted by our opponents that the new tariff law would seriously damage our import trade and utterly ruin our export trade. What are the facts? Receipts from customs since the law went into effect have been larger than ever before in history. If the present average keeps on, they will amount possibly to $500,000,000, and even the most sanguine of us hardly dared to estimate that they would run as high as $400,000,000. For instance, the receipts from the 21st of last September to January 18 amounted to $165,000,000, as compared to $102,000,000 for the same period a year ago.

How about exports? In the face of the prediction of our opponents that our foreign trade would be ruined our exports for the last three months of last year, immediately after the tariff law had gone into effect, were for October $370,000,000 in round figures, as compared with $343,000,000 for October, 1921; for November $380,000,000, as compared with $294,000,000 for November, 1921; and for December $344,000,000, as compared with $296,000,000 in December, 1921.

It is not necessary to remind the people of Kansas of agricultural conditions when the Republican Party took hold on March 4, 1921. Never before, perhaps, had agriculture in all its branches been suffering a depression so severe. It amounted practically to disaster. The farmer had no market for his products and he had practically no means of obtaining credit to tide the situation over. Wool and grain, frozen meat, and all sorts of agricultural products were pouring into the United States from countries where they were being produced under conditions with which no American farmer could possibly compete. We at once passed the emergency tariff law, and from that moment the situation began to improve; and we supplemented that with the agricultural credits bill, the Capper-Tincher bill, and various other measures designed for the economic relief of the agricultural industry, and further improvement in the situation became at once manifest. Other measures of a similar nature are on their way and will be enacted into law without doubt before this Congress adjourns. But even now I say without fear of dispute that during no administration since the Government was founded has so much salutary and constructive legislation been enacted for the direct benefit of American agriculture as has been during the administration of President Harding.

In addition to the farming class of the community there was another class which was suffering almost equally. On the 4th of March, 1921, there were more than 5,000,000 American laboring men without jobs. Show me an able-bodied American citizen to-day who wants work who can not get it. The word "unemployment" in America to-day is practically obsolete. Indeed, the appeal comes to Congress from employers in many cities to let down the bars against immigration in order that they may get more and cheaper labor.

This, my fellow citizens, we resolutely decline to do. When the Republican Party came into power we found the gates of all our ports wide open to the unrestricted entry of the riffraff of the world. We proceeded to close those gates to all whose presence here would be plainly undesirable or dangerous to the maintenance of American institutions. We propose to keep them closed; if anything, tighter. For my own part, if I could have my way, I would go even further, for I would see to it that the anarchists and the trouble makers and the Bolshevists now here should be deported on the first available ships to the countries where they belong.

What was the condition of the credit of the United States Government when the Republican Party took hold? Our bonds were selling at 85 cents on the dollar. Every American citizen who had loaned money to his Government in time of need had lost 15 cents on every dollar that he had advanced. There is not a Government bond to-day which is not selling at around par or better. The credit of the United States Government has been fully reestablished.

Our course in foreign affairs has been wisely steered by the President and by his great Secretary of State, Charles E. Hughes. The state of war existing between this country and Germany and other powers was promptly terminated on terms satisfactory to all, and almost immediately the Executive took steps to bring about a conference of all the principal nations to further establish a guaranty of peace of the world. This conference, presided over by the Secretary of State, did more in a few months to bring about a firm and enduring peace than had ever been accomplished in history. Best of all, it was done without involving this Government in any one of the quarrels between other nations about matters which are of no direct interest to us, or committing us in advance to take orders from any supergovernment or any other than the Government of the United States of America.

We Republicans, whether we live in Kansas or in Ohio, have no reason to be ashamed of our party. We have no good reason, I think, to be dissatisfied with its present leadership, and we have no good reason to do otherwise than boast of its record in the past 22 months. Let me again sum up the situation as it existed on the 4th of March, 1921, when the Democrats went out of power, and as it exists to-day:

Then there was unemployment involving more than 5,000,000 American citizens. That is what they did. To-day there is no such thing as unemployment throughout the land. That is what we did. Then agriculture was flat on its back. That is what they did. To-day it is standing on both feet. That is what we did. Then the credit of the Government was 15 per cent below par. That is what they did. To-day it is above par. That is what we did. Then the bars of America were open to the riffraff of the world. That is what they did. To-day they are closed agajnst all whose presence here would menace our prosperity and our institutions. That is what we did. Then the ports of America were open to the products, agricultural and manufactured, of the world, produced under conditions which we of America would not permit here. That is what they did. To-day they are closed to the extent at least that our products, whether raised on the farm or produced in the factory, have at least a fair chance of competing in our own and in foreign markets. That is what we did. Then we were at war with other nations and there was complete uncertainty as to our future position in the world's affairs. That is what they did. To-day we are at peace with every country and our position and the extent of our participation in the affairs of the world is assured. That is what we did.

I repeat, my friends, that we ought to have no feeling but pride in our party and in its record.

I wish that we would all pull together to make it bigger and better. This can only be done by cooperation. Otherwise disintegration is inevitable. Of course, it is only natural that in a country so big and great and varied, both racially and climatically, as this there should be conflict of interests and sharp clashes of opinion, but I know of no divisions so great among those who believe in the bedrock principles of Republicanism that they could not be compromised by friendly discussion and friendly cooperation. It is a sign of the times that party ties possess less binding force than formerly. To an extent this is quite natural because of late problems which have come upon us entirely unprecedented and upon which public opinion has not yet become firmly crystallized. To an extent also it seems to me regrettable, because it is through parties alone under our form of government, parties well organized and well knit together that the public will can be made effective. Surely those of us who have been elected to high positions on account of our affiliation with the Republican Party should cooperate to the fullest extent possible. Teamwork is necessary to produce results, whether it be in private affairs or in the public business. If our party is not progressive enough, let us make it so. We can do that by pulling together, not by playing with the fellows who oppose us.

The main theater of political activity in the next two years, I think it is conceded, will be the House of Representatives. Whether it be good or bad the majority there can do the things it wants to do. We shall have a Republican majority there of but 15. With the assistance of any 8 men upon our side the opposition party acting as a unit can do what it pleases.

Under these conditions it is apparent that teamwork will be vital if we are to present anything like a solid front to the attack of the opposition.

Another disadvantage under which we shall labor as compared with the present Congress is that we have lost a large number of our best fighting men. James R. Mann, the peer of them all, will not be with us, nor will MONDELL or FESS or PHIL CAMPBELL or WALSH or STAFFORD or GREENE or KELLEY or REAVIS. These were the men who stood up and bore the brunt of every battle, and their places will be difficult if not impossible to fill. On the other hand, our opponents have lost none of their fighting force and have a number of additions of great strength. We as a party will have our work cut out for us if we are to emerge from the parliamentary battles of the next two years with credit to ourselves and to the country, and it can not be done without cooperation and teamwork.

The leadership of the majority under these conditions will be a position of peculiar importance, responsibility, and difficulty. It is a position which ought not to be sought for the sake of the gratification of any personal ambition. It should go to the man best fitted under all the circumstances to discharge its duties. Some of my friends, including my good friend TINCHER here, believe that I have superior qualifications for the majority leadership. If they are right, and this position comes to me, I assure you that I will undertake it with feelings far less of jubilation than with a stern sense of the seriousness of the responsibility which it will involve. I should not want it under any circumstances if I did not feel that it came to me backed by the confidence of a substantial majority of my colleagues.

I have not asked and shall not ask for support from anyone as a personal favor, and I have not the slightest personal ill feeling against anyone who thinks another better qualified. I should want, if I were elected, in the party councils equally men who opposed me and supported me. I should want to be in close touch with men of all shades of opinion and from all geographical divisions of the country. With that end in view, I would ask each Republican delegation to name a man who could constantly advise with me upon matters of legislation in which that State was interested.

I should also be glad to see an enlargement of that committee which under our present system determines in the main the legislative program from day to day. I think that its enlargement from its present membership of seven by two members, making it nine, would give full representation of all geographical divisions and schools of thought.

In the final determination of our legislative program no one would go further than I to compromise honest differences of opinion in the interest of party harmony and party solidarity. My only limit would be the infraction of the principles upon which my party was founded, as interpreted by its leaders and ratified by the people in the administrations of Lincoln and Grant and McKinley and Roosevelt and Harding.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under permission given me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD I wish to make a statement of the accomplishments of the Republican Congress and President Harding's administration.

In 1918 a Republican Congress was elected and President Wilson was compelled to call it into session in May, 1919, to enact the seven great supply bills which his Congress had failed to pass. Carrying out the wishes of the people for economy these bills were reduced $940,000,000 below the sums they carried when approved by the committees of the former Democratic Congress.

The country was at that time technically and officially at war. Foreign trade agreements were impossible. The railroads were still being operated by the Government at a loss to the taxpayers of nearly $2,000,000 a day, with high rates and poor service. The telegraph and telephone systems of the country were still under public control. The war laws were still upon the statute books. The gross debt of the Nation on August 31, 1919, was $26,594,267,878. No industry nor enterprise anywhere was functioning normally. The deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board appointed by President Wilson was being carried out. Money was scarce and rates of interest high. Agriculture was being ruined, while the obnoxious war taxes were still in force.

THE SAVINGS MADE AND LEGISLATION PASSED BY THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

It repealed the so-called daylight saving law and passed the same over the President's veto.

It passed the Budget bill, which was killed by President Wilson's veto.

It passed the Army reorganization bill, rejecting the demand for a large Army and universal compulsory military training favored by the Wilson administration.

It returned the railroads, telegraph, and telephone systems to their owners.

It passed the Volstead Act for the enforcement of national prohibition over President Wilson's veto.

It passed the water power bill and the coal, oil, and gas leasing bill.

It passed the uniform cold storage bill.

It passed the act reviving the War Finance Corporation to finance the marketing and exportation of agricultural products over the veto of President Wilson.

It liberalized the Federal reserve act and the farm loan act in the interest of the farmer.

It passed the bill incorporating the American Legion and enacted liberal provisions for vocational training and rehabilitation of our wounded soldiers and sailors and made generous appropriation for the same.

It amended the war risk insurance act to increase the efficiency of the bureau and liberalize the provisions in the payment of compensation to ex-service men.

It passed the act providing for the return of the bodies of our dead heroes from France.

It passed the Fuller bill providing for the increase of Civil War pensions.

It passed the Sell bill providing for increased pension for Spanish War veterans.

It passed the employees' retirement act and the minimum wage law.

It created a woman's bureau in the Department of Labor.

It made possible the adoption of the woman suffrage amendment.

It raised the wages of all Government employees, including the immense Postal Service system.

It passed the Fess bill providing for Federal aid and cooperation with the States in the vocational training and rehabilitation of those injured in industry, agriculture, and transportation.

It made a total saving to the taxpayers of the Nation, through reducing the appropriations asked for by President Wilson's administration, of $2,414,115,144.13.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS UNDER PRESIDENT HARDING'S ADMINISTRATION.

The Sixty-seventh Congress established a record by holding four sessions, working 624 days, passing 931 laws, practically an average of one and a half a day, besides passing 144 measures which failed in the Senate.

It promptly passed the farmers' emergency tariff act, which stopped the importations of wheat, milk, and cheese from Canada, corn and beef from Argentina, wool and mutton from Australia, eggs from China, and butter from Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, which were being shipped into this country under the free-trade provisions of the Underwood Democratic tariff.

It authorized the use of a billion dollars by the War Finance Corporation to finance the orderly marketing and exportation of agricultural products.

It reduced the Army to 125,000 and the Navy to 86,000 men.

It passed the peace resolution with Germany and brought about a limitation of armament through an international conference.

It passed the Budget bill, vetoed by President Wilson, and put the same into operation.

It discharged 100,000 useless Government employees.

It reduced the expenses of the Government through economy and good business management, and was thus enabled to reduce the national debt from $26,594,267,878, on August 31, 1919, to $22,715,338,730 on February 28, 1923, and in addition has repealed the soda and ice cream, clothing, drug store, and freight and express taxes.

It was able to further reduce the burden on the taxpayer nearly $1,000,000,000 in the new revenue bill, leaving a 50 per cent tax on the large incomes and reducing the tax on all heads of families with an income below $5,000 a year by increasing the exemption from $2,000 to $2,500 and that allowed for children under 18 years from $200 to $400 each.

It combined the activities in behalf of the disabled and injured soldiers in the Veterans' Bureau, as desired by the ex-service man, and provided $500,000,000 annually for soldier-relief work.

It restricted foreign immigration to a 3 per cent basis.

It established a Foreign Debt Funding Commission, which has secured satisfactory settlement of the British debt and is negotiating the settlement of the amounts due us from the other nations.

It passed the maternity bill.

It passed a law regulating the grain exchanges and the packing houses.

It appropriated $38,000,000 to build hospitals for sick and disabled veterans.

It provided for the return of alien property not in excess of $10,000 to each person.

It provided for the organization of agricultural cooperative-marketing associations.

It passed the antinarcotic act.

It passed the bill prohibiting the sale of filled milk.

It provided for the monthly payment of Civil War pensions.

It made possible the independent citizenship for women.

It created the United States Coal Commission, and made possible the prosecutions now being conducted against the war profiteers and grafters.

It passed a permanent tariff law, protecting agricultural products and reviving the operation of our industries, to the end that the 5,000,000 idle men have found employment.

It enacted the Capper-Lenroot-Anderson-Strong bill, establishing a system of rural credits.

Four years of a Republican Congress and two years of President Harding's administration has settled our foreign affairs, protected the products of our farmers and laboring men, given employment to the idle, reestablished business confidence, reduced expenses of Government, paid over $3,000,000,000 on the public debt, lightened the burden of taxation, reduced interest rates, and brought Liberty bonds to par.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about postal legislation. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has considered and favorably reported a great many bills during the present session of Congress, but owing to the pressure of appropriation bills, which have occupied nearly all of the time, we have been denied the privilege of submitting any of them to the House. After consultation with the Speaker and the leader [Mr. MONDELL] I consolidated five of the most important measures into one. This omnibus bill was promised consideration under a special rule, but although the Rules Committee granted it, the rule was never presented to the House.

The first section of the omnibus bill relates to postal savings. It leaves the maximum deposit by one person at $3,000 and increases the rate of interest to depositors from 2 to 3 per cent. Under existing law interest is paid only on deposits which are not withdrawn within one year; otherwise the interest is lost. Thirty per cent of the deposits are withdrawn before the year has expired, so that the average interest paid on the money left on deposit is only 1.4 per cent. The depositors as a rule are people of small means who prefer to leave their hard-earned savings with the Government because they have more faith therein than in banks. We could well afford to encourage them by raising the interest to 3 per cent. The only opposition came from the American Bankers' Association, whose representatives occupied half of the time at the hearings. Among other things they showed that most banks maintained savings departments and paid interest of from 3 to 5 per cent on deposits, and there are a number of banks that pay as high as 5½ per cent. This money is then loaned, mostly on real-estate mortgages for building dwellings, upon which the interest rate is 6 and sometimes 7 and 8 per cent. The bill not only received the unanimous support of the committee but was strongly urged by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, whose letter I will ask to have printed here in 8-point type:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 23, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I received your letter of January 15, 1923, in which you ask my views in regard t· H. R. 8334, to amend the laws relating to the Postal Savings System, as reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

This bill provides in section 1 that the minimum age limit of 10 years, at present placed on depositors of postal savings, shall be abolished and that joint and trust accounts shall be authorized. Under the present law a child under 10 years of age can buy postal savings stamps but can not open an account, nor can a trust account be opened for him. The result has been to discourage thrift among children, whereas every encouragement should be given to promote the saving habit as early as possible. The proposed amendment will remedy this condition. The Treasury has found that trust and joint accounts have operated to advantage in connection with war savings stamps and Treasury savings certificates, and it would seem that these provisions are equally well adapted to postal savings deposits.

Section 2, as amended by the committee, proposes to limit the amount to be allowed as a balance to the credit of any person in a postal savings depository, exclusive of accumulated interest, to $5,000, instead of $3,000, as provided by the bill, or to $2,500, as in the present law. I believe that the maximum amount of $3,000, fixed by the bill, is preferable to the larger sum provided in the amendment. The Postal Savings System, as you know, is operated primarily for the purpose of promoting thrift and encouraging the sound investment of funds that would otherwise be lost through fraud, speculation, or carelessness. It is particularly effective in meeting the needs of wage earners having comparatively small amounts to invest each week and of foreign-born citizens who will trust their savings only to a Government institution. There is no intention on the part of the Government that postal savings should be operated in competition with savings banks or that the Government should be put into the banking business. Statistics show that the average savings account in this country is much less than $3,000, and that depositors who have saved this amount not only should enter the investment class but do so by putting their money in securities or homes. I believe, therefore, that to increase the maximum deposit above $3,000 would serve no useful purpose and might unnecessarily arouse a feeling on the part of the banks that the Postal Savings System is attempting to invade their field of operation.

Section 3 of the bill increases the rate of interest to be paid depositors from 2 to 3 per cent per annum. I am thoroughly in favor of this increase in the amount of interest allowed on postal savings. As stated above, the Postal Savings System is not operated for profit but for the purpose of promoting thrift and providing a safe and acceptable depository for funds which would not otherwise find their way into any other institution. The deposits come from small wage earners and others who, while primarily needing security, need also the utmost return possible on their savings. The Government can not afford to be less than honest with these people or to give them anything less than a fair return for the use of their money. The expense of administration should not be more than one-fourth per cent. The depositors, therefore, are entitled to the 3 per cent rate, which can be paid by charging not less than 3¼ per cent per annum on postal savings funds deposited in banks, as provided by section 4, or by investing in Government securities.

Section 5 terminates the practice of permitting depositors to surrender postal savings deposits and to receive in lieu thereof United States coupon or registered postal savings bonds, paying 2½ per cent per annum. The necessity for this amendment is apparent when it is remembered that the parity of these bonds has been maintained only by the standing offer of the board of trustees of the Postal Savings System to buy them from the holders at par and accrued interest, and that, if this offer is withdrawn, the bonds will depreciate to considerably below par. But, more important still, if the rate of interest on deposits is increased, the trustees would not be able to buy these bonds at par on account of the necessity of paying 3 per cent on deposits; nor would there be any demand for converting a 3 per cent deposit into a 2½ per cent bond.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

If the House had been given an opportunity to consider it, this bill would undoubtedly have passed. It is the belief of those who have studied this question that the enactment of this measure into law would have brought out hundreds of millions of dollars that are now hoarded and would have encouraged the saving habit among the young generally. It would have also increased postal revenues.

Section 2 provided for the establishment of motor-vehicle routes between 50 and 86 miles, which can not now be established, and which would enable the department to serve a large number of patrons who are now denied service.

Section 3 is to encourage commercial aviation. It authorizes the Postmaster General to contract with private parties for air-mail service. It provides for increased postage on first-class mail carried by air to not less than 8 cents per ounce and authorizes the payment of 2 mills per pound-mile for transportation of such mail, and that other first-class mail not provided with extra postage can be carried at the rate of one-half a mill per pound-mile, or one-fourth the rate of air mail paid matter. After careful computation as to the average length of the probable haul it was believed that this air-mail service would not only be self-sustaining but would return a large profit to the Government and would have enabled the department to do away with the present Government owned and operated lines, which operate without revenue and which cost $2,000,000 a year to the Government.

Section 4 provided for insurance and collect on delivery privileges to third-class matter, for which there is a considerable demand. The department believes that the enactment of this provision would result in a considerable increase in revenue.

Section 5 provided for a new basis of computation for overtime of clerks and other employees in post offices. Under existing law the overtime service of these employees is computed on the basis of 365 days of 8 hours each, or 2,920 hours, which is 16.2 per cent less than the pay for regular service. It was the opinion of the committee and the department that the compensation for overtime service should be the same as for regular service and that the rate should be computed on the basis of 306 days of 8 hours each, or 2,448 hours.

There was no opposition to sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the bill, but being in this way tied up to the postal savings section they all failed of consideration.

As soon as it became evident that the measure could not be reached on the regular call of the calendar, and that the only chance for consideration would be either by motion to suspend the rules or under special rule from the Committee on Rules, I applied to the Speaker for recognition, but without success, and to the Rules Committee for a special rule which was in fact granted, but pocketed by the chairman and never presented to the House. The bulletin issued by the Republican floor leader, posted Monday, February 19, included the omnibus postal bill as one of the bills to be considered that week, but later, upon inquiry, I learned that the steering committee had changed the program. It is enough to say—I got no rule, nor did I get recognition from the Speaker for a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. This would have required a two-thirds vote, but I was confident it would have carried. In this way the will of the majority to enact important and needed legislation was thwarted. I will criticize no one. I will simply say "these are the facts." "Let the public draw its own conclusions."

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

This leads me also to add a few words about the lessons taught us by the two years' experience we have had with the Budget system. The concentration of all power of appropriation in one committee was urged as a necessary part of that system, because it was urged only by such concentration could economy in public expenditure be secured. Never was there a greater fallacy. I go further and assert that such concentration is not only unnecessary to its successful operation, but a source of weakness, which will ultimately lead to grave abuses of power. The friends of that system should join in remedying this at once. It is true that the Budget, which throws the responsibility for estimates directly on the President, has simplified the work of Congress in making appropriations, but the concentration of power of appropriation in one committee in no way tends to economy, but has given the Appropriations Committee such a dominating power over all legislation in the House that there is no one left to criticize or oppose.

The arguments put forward at the time of the adoption of the Budget for the concentration of power over appropriation in one committee were mainly, first, that it would tend to economy and prevent duplication, and, second, that the practice of including legislative provisions or "riders" in appropriation bills was in all cases an evil and would be abolished by concentration. The answer to the first is that extravagance or duplication in estimates must now originate with the President, who alone is responsible, and to the second that a rider when inserted by a committee having legislative, as well as appropriating, power is often the best and most expeditious way of legislating. Nearly all of our most important postal legislation was enacted in that form, as witness Rural Free Delivery, postal savings, parcel post, the space plan for railway mail pay, and so forth. None of these measures could ever have been enacted when they were if they had not been riding on the annual appropriation bills which had to be enacted promptly or the wheels of Government would have stopped. The Budget system has not, however, done away with riders. If anything, the practice has become more objectionable than it ever was for the reason that now riders are submitted to the House in the shape of Senate amendments without any opportunity for any legislative committee to consider them, and riders now come from a committee without legislative jurisdiction or experience. The House must vote them up or down without any information, and in most cases they are voted up, for to do otherwise would mean the defeat of the necessary appropriation bill.

This all has a tendency to atrophy the authority and activity of regular legislative committees, and the result will be that legislation and appropriation will be more concentrated than it ever was and the evil sought to be avoided will be increased. Besides, the Executive power, which has been greatly augmented by the Budget system, when it has only one committee to deal with, will be prone to "swap favors" with those on that committee, and not be held to the strict account they would be if there were seven or eight other committees with appropriating power to deal with. Seven or eight critics will be more efficient than one, and eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty but of the control by the people, through their Representatives, of the purse strings of the Nation, and therefore over the power of taxation. The Appropriations Committee of the House, through its affiliation with the Steering Committee, has dominated the legislation during this session. It has actually wasted and frittered away time in order to prevent consideration of bills they objected to from other committees, and which they were afraid to trust to a vote here. And, mind you, this is only the beginning. If it be permitted to develop to its logical result, the individual Member, no matter how able or energetic or how important a cause he may advocate, will amount to nothing as against this powerful combination of Members representing only a small fraction of the people of the country.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is astonishing at times to find how many good citizens of the United States there are who understand so imperfectly the system of government under which they live. Some of our best people, otherwise well informed, would probably be puzzled whether to start toward the city hall, the State capitol, or Washington if they wished to have a law passed to remedy some real or fancied ill. During my own experience in Congress educated men and women and associations made up of such have appealed to me to secure action by Congress affecting matters as to which, if anything whatever could be done, it would have to be done by the board of aldermen or by the legislature at Hartford. Such lack of understanding on the part of so many in regard to things so important has led me to make what may be called an elementary talk on the Constitution of the United States.

We think of ourselves as Americans and are rightfully proud of the title. Bearing this title means that we owe our allegiance and loyalty to the United States over and above any and all other countries in the world, and that we stand ready to defend our country even to the extent of our lives against all enemies, foreign and domestic. All understand this and, fortunately, very few ever fail to live up to it, as was shown during the World War. On the other hand, it is not always so well remembered that each of us owes a double allegiance. A good citizen is equally loyal to his State and to the Union. Each of these is supreme and sovereign within its own sphere. The Constitution as it came from the hands of our forefathers was framed so that there should be no conflict between the two but that instead each might support and strengthen the other.

There was good reason at the time our Constitution was framed why such a government should be established. Before the war for independence what later became States were called Colonies. They were entirely separate and independent of each other. After the Declaration of Independence had been made good by the Revolutionary War a confederation of States was formed. The bond of union thus formed to hold the States together was so weak that any State could at its pleasure fail or refuse to keep its agreement with the other States, and there was no way to compel it to do its part. It was soon proved that such a union of the States was too weak and imperfect to form the basis of a great and strong nation. Our wise old forefathers foresaw the benefits that would come to them and to their posterity from the founding of such a nation, so they conferred together and, after much labor, finally agreed to ordain and establish the Constitution, which they said was "in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

In the Colonies, and later in the States, the people had been learning how to govern themselves, and they had learned the lesson quite well. In New England the town meeting came to be the method of local government, and it proved to be a system well adapted to the purpose. The people of all the States were justly proud of what they had accomplished in working out self-government and they were most wisely unwilling to give up anything essential that they had gained in this direction. They were not willing that some great outside government, made up of all the States, with its capital located at some distant place then unknown, should regulate and exercise control over their local affairs.

The men who framed the Constitution held the same views as to local government as did the other people of the States from which they came, and yet they realized that it was necessary to yield something in order to secure the advantages and greater benefit that could come only from a more strongly united common country. Upon this sound basis of compromise the great Constitution was wrought out and established; but in order to understand it correctly, it must be borne in mind that all rights and powers originally belonged to the States or to the people. The Union formed by the Constitution had and can now have only such rights and powers as have been granted to it.

The Government as established was divided into three branches, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, and to each was delegated certain powers.

The judicial power was vested in the Supreme Court and such other courts as may be established by law. These courts are called Federal courts, to distinguish them from the courts of the States. It is the duty of the courts to declare the law in cases submitted to them.

The President is the Chief Executive, and, with the officers appointed by him, exercises the executive powers conferred by the Constitution. The appointing power of the President is probably the greatest power now exercised by any executive or ruler in the world.

The legislative branch of the Government is the Congress, which is divided into two Houses called the Senate and the House of Representatives, each of which has certain limited powers; but in order to pass any law or appropriate any money out of the Treasury it is necessary for both Houses of Congress to come to an agreement and pass it.

The three branches of the Government are distinct and independent of each other in the exercise of their proper powers; but in certain cases joint action is required. For instance, the President has power to veto an act passed by Congress, and if he does it can not become a law unless two-thirds of both Houses pass it over his veto. The judges and important officers of the Government are appointed by the President, but must be confirmed by the Senate. Treaties with other nations are made by the President, but must be ratified by the Senate. Only the House of Representatives can impeach a judge or executive officer and the Senate sits as a court to try the case. It requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate in an impeachment case to convict the accused and remove him from office.

The powers originally delegated to Congress are contained in 18 clauses of the Constitution:

1. The power to lay and collect taxes.

This is one of the most important powers granted, for without money to pay its running expenses no government can live. The lack of this power was the fatal weakness in the government established by the articles of confederation and the one which more than any other caused that government to fail.

2. The borrowing power.

The power to borrow money on the credit of the United States was necessary to make the new Government strong and to insure it against breaking down in case of a great emergency like a war.

3. The power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

This is one of the greatest and most important of the powers granted. It would have been a constant source of trouble and irritation if the several States had been left free to regulate commerce with foreign countries or among the States themselves. Anyone who has traveled in the small countries of Europe and found himself held up every few hours at the boundary between two countries will appreciate the practical wisdom of the fathers in putting in the commerce clause.

4. The power to establish naturalization and bankruptcy laws.

While this power does not rank with the first three enumerated, it is not without importance, especially the clause concerning naturalization.

5. The power to coin money, to regulate its value, and to fix the standard of weights and measures.

The coinage of money is a proper and necessary function of a national government, while the fixing of a uniform standard of weights and measures is one of convenience for the people in trade.

6. The power to punish counterfeiting.

This is necessary for the protection of the coins and securities of the Government.

7. The power to establish post offices and post roads.

This needs no explanation.

8. The power to grant patents and copyrights.

This has proved a most beneficial power in encouraging useful inventions, literature, and are by securing to inventors and authors for a term of years the benefits flowing from their toil and genius.

9. The power to constitute United States courts other than the Supreme Court.

10. The power to define and punish piracy and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations.

The next six powers enumerated may be called the powers for making war and maintaining the national defense. They are necessary for the very existence of a nation among the other nations of the world. They are the powers—

11. To declare war;

12. To raise and support armies;

13. To provide and maintain a navy;

14. To make rules for the land and naval forces;

15. To provide for calling forth the militia;

16. To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia and for governing such part of them as may be called into the Federal service.

17. The power over what is now the District of Columbia and over other Federal territory.

18. The power to make laws necessary to carry out the powers granted.

There are other powers, more or less important, named in later clauses, such as the power to admit new States and to make rules and regulations concerning a number of things not necessary to include here; but the 18 clauses just enumerated contain the principal legislative powers conferred by the Constitution and the ones upon which the National Government was founded.

There are in the Constitution a number of limitations and restrictions upon what the United States and upon what the States may do, but for the purposes of this talk they need not be referred to here. The limitations and restrictions upon the powers of the United States for the most part only make clear and emphasize the point that powers not granted are not to be exercised.

There have been 19 amendments added to the Constitution. The first 10 were added at one time in pursuance of what was practically agreed upon before the Constitution itself was adopted and in effect may be regarded as a part of the original document. They add no new powers. In fact, their purpose was to restrict as well as to make certain the powers already granted. They contain some very important provisions and are sometimes called the Bill of Rights.

The eleventh amendment made it clear that the United States courts have no power over suits against a State brought by a citizen of another State or of a foreign nation.

The twelfth amendment changed the manner of electing the President and Vice President, and was adopted because in the election of 1800 the old method did not work well.

The thirteenth amendment abolished slavery.

The fourteenth amendment attempted to confer civil rights on the former slaves and to restrict the power of the States in certain other matters.

The fifteenth amendment sought to give the former slaves the right to vote.

The sixteenth amendment gives power to the United States to lay income taxes without fixing the amount to be collected from each State in proportion to the population.

The seventeenth amendment changed the manner of electing United States Senators, so that they are now elected by popular vote instead of by the legislatures of the States as was originally provided.

The eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture and the sale of intoxicating liquors and gives to Congress, as well as to the States, the power to pass laws to enforce the amendment.

The nineteenth amendment takes away from the States the right to keep women from voting.

All the power that can be exercised by Congress or by any other branch of the Government must be found within the limits of the original Constitution or one of the 19 amendments. If a law is passed for which there is no authority in the Constitution, the Supreme Court will declare the law to be void and of no effect. Those who desire good laws, before trying to have a law passed, should first be sure that the lawmaking body has the power to pass it and, second, that the law, if passed, will not make matters worse instead of better.

It should be ever kept in mind that the Government at Washington is one of limited powers. Many are prone to forget this and to proceed upon the theory that Congress ought to pass laws regulating everything that they think needs regulation. If bread, or milk, or ice, or coal, or house rent, or any other necessity of life seems high in price, there are those who would have Congress straightway pass a law to bring the price down. Of course Congress has no power to pass such a law; but even if it had the power, it would probably find an equally strong demand from the owners of the articles named for a law to raise the prices even higher. Power to lower a price means also the power to raise it. Also, the power to lower the price of an article means the power to take it without paying for it at all; but the Constitution itself forbids taking property without paying for it.

Our honored forefathers showed their great wisdom by limiting the things upon which Congress might act to those necessary for carrying on the Central Government, while reserving all else for the State and local governments. Even the thirteen original States occupied a long stretch of territory whose people had different customs, different local laws, and different notions of government. It would have been unwise and dangerous at that time to have lodged power in a central government to make the laws most closely relating to the daily lives of people residing in widely separated communities.

With the growth of the Nation the wide range of difference between the widely separated parts of the Nation has become still wider and the difficulty of making laws in Congress that will best serve all the remote parts of the country has become all the greater. In spite of this there is a growing tendency to leave untried our State and local governments and hie away to Washington for all kinds of legislation. And when the law on the desired subject is enacted, if it fits Kansas rather than Connecticut, there is no just ground for complaint. The basis of the trouble is in the National Government attempting to enact and enforce such laws at all.

Our dual form of government has worked well for a century and a third. It has made us strong as a Nation, and yet has left the people free to work out their local problems in their own way. It is important to the welfare of this Nation that this principle of government be preserved. It will be lost if the people insist upon carrying to Washington the problems that should be solved at home.

The labor of love that it has cost to bring forth this little talk will be more than repaid if one additional person is thereby induced to study the Constitution more diligently than he has heretofore done. The recompense will be so much the greater if thereby some may come to better understand what are the proper spheres of the State and National Governments and where to go for needed legislation, whether to Washington or to Hartford, Albany, or Harrisburg.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, since long before I came to Congress I have regarded the immigration problem as one of the most perplexing and important questions confronting the country. There are few matters that deserve the attention of this House more than the enactment of a permanent, constructive restriction law. I am bitterly disappointed that this Congress is to close without the performance of platform pledges and the satisfaction of public expectations, as well as the specific promises given time and again during the past two years by those in charge of immigration bills and by leaders of the party in power controlling the legislative program of Congress that a permanent, constructive, restrictive measure would be enacted into law.

I followed the hearings conducted two years ago by both the House and Senate Committees on Immigration with hopeful anticipation of the needed legislation. I believed the assurance repeatedly made, for instance, by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration, such as that found on page 6 of the 713-page volume of hearings published by that committee two years ago, to the effect that a "permanent" "constructive" law would be proposed and passed "after a thorough investigation of the whole matter in view of world conditions."

I have no particular fault to find with the House committee for it has been industriously active, and after months of hearings both in Washington and throughout the country, reported to this House several weeks ago, as an amendment to or substitute for Senate bill 4092, a comprehensive measure that would go far toward meeting the serious immigration situation confronting the country and toward satisfying immigration officials and expert students of the problem.

There have been assurances on the part of those high in authority that the House committee bill would be put through the House and either concurred in by the Senate or sent to conference; but the days have gradually slipped by without action, and here in the last 24 hours of this Congress we find the splendid measure so glowingly eulogized by the House committee report (No. 1621), forty-odd pages in length, abandoned, and that a new bill, House Joint Resolution 494, not even considered or reported by the House committee, is proposed to-day to be thrust upon us, under suspension of rules, and therefore not open to amendment, but to be voted up or down, just as some one Member introduced it.

There seems to be a disposition to legislate in this field for foreigners and to let America and Americans "shift for themselves." I can not permit such an attitude to go unnoticed and uncriticized.

The meritorious restriction bill that has been on the House Calendar since February 15, and which this House would pass as decisively as any other bill that has been voted on, would, as the House committee declares in its 43-page report recommending it to pass, "prevent the arrival of unfortunates at our gates," permit the legitimate "near relatives of persons here to come," thus preventing the separation of families, "minimize hardships" that exist under the existing "temporary emergency quota law," enacted two years ago, provide a practical plan of registering aliens as urged by the President and favored by the people of this country, cure the "wide open doorway" defect existing at present by which loathsome, contagiously and dangerously diseased, and other objectionable aliens get into the counry as seamen by the thousands, and exclude from the country aliens ineligible to citizenship.

I believe our first duty to be to our own. I am for America first. I do not approve the Senate bill that came to us proposing to repeal existing restrictions and admit thousands upon thousands of one particular race of refugees, the expense of bringing here each one of whom would cost far more money than it would take to feed and clothe 10 over there almost indefinitely. I can not join those who would further import poverty for the sake of further exercising and overloading our benevolence.

I have read the statements and arguments of certain generous, charitable churchmen who want us to open our gates to the poverty stricken, homeless victims of the various wars and massacres now going on and likely to go on for years in southeastern Europe and western Asia, but the more practical and sensible solution is to do what the bill reported to this House on February 15 proposed, namely, admit merely those very near relatives of foreign born here who are naturalized or who intend to become citizens and who are able and willing to care for those destitute near relatives; and then through organized charities like the Red Cross and the Near East Relief take care of the rest of the millions of starving and naked somewhere over there.

We have our almshouse, our asylums and even our jails bulging with foreigners already. As I understand the charts now on display in this House that were prepared by the House Committee on Immigration, after a two years' intensive study of State public institutions, foreign-stock inmates of those institutions, in spite of our immigration laws excluding all such dependents, delinquents, and defectives, cost some States as much as 30 per cent of all taxes collected. It is a matter of history that various foreign countries for decades shipped their public charges, their degenerates, to this country and simply unloaded their objectionable public charges and defectives upon us. We exclude defective seeds, defective cattle and horses, and even will not permit shrubbery and other inanimate life to be imported. Can it be that this and future generations of Americans are less important? America is worthy of the best and none but those clean of limb, clear of eye, and free from taint and disease! Only those at most should be allowed to come, and very few of those until we can Americanize and civilize the great mass of foreign born and children of foreign born now among us. Only yesterday the Secretary of Labor, Hon. James J. Davis, an immigrant himself, called public attention to the fact that there are in this country nearly 15,000,000 foreign born, half of whom have not even taken out naturalization papers. The melting pot is full to overflowing and its contents should be refined before more are added.

The heart of every generous person goes out to the refugees, but his heart must also go out, if he is a real American, to Americans—our kith and kin—as well as to our institutions, to our standards, to our ideals, and to this civilization of ours which has made us great, prosperous, and free. The American llama has its load of foreignism and alienism, foreign poverty and pauperism and other isms and asms, and until we can set our house in order very few more aliens should be admitted, regardless of how many go back to their native land.

The war awoke the public to the situation as never before, and opinion seems to me stronger to-day than ever before in favor of rigid, restrictive immigration laws. No more patriotic group of men could be associated together than the boys who fought the country's fight in France. The American Legion demands that the doors be absolutely closed for a period of years, and those boys' demand is entitled to go a long, long way in determining the action of Congress and the attitude of the President on this important public question, in which only the racial, the employing, and the transportation groups have a selfish mercenary interest.

I am aware of the demand of some manufacturing and employing and labor-importing interests that alien labor be imported to man their industries, fill their ships, and stock their labor pens, but this very month the United States Department of Labor reports there are over 250,000 idle miners and over a million and a half unemployed workingmen. Cable dispatches state there are millions of unemployed in Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, and other north European countries, and yet those countries are not sending here their full 3 per cent quotas. The Secretary of Labor, in his annual report for 1922, states that even with existing restriction laws the United States is still the greatest immigrant-receiving nation on earth. With this in view can it be true that we have to import foreigners to mine our coal, harvest our cotton and grain, till our fields, run our trains, dig our ditches, and man our industries? I do not believe it. The real issue, it seems to me, is well put by that great American national weekly, the Saturday Evening Post, in its timely issue of February 24, 1923, only last week, in a leading editorial entitled "Do we want coolie labor?" as follows:

Early in the year the representatives of various interests appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives and cried a loud cry in favor of letting in more immigrants. They stated with singular unanimity of thought and language that there was a scarcity of labor in America, and that the scarcity could be met only by more immigrants. They further stated that the existing immigration law is not giving to the United States the number of immigrants to which the country is legally entitled, and for this reason:

America is entitled to 40,000 Italians, for example, by the terms of the immigration law; 40,000 Italians therefore entered America last year. But in the same period 53,000 Italians left America and went back to Italy. Consequently America has received no net immigration at all from Italy—has received, in fact, 13,000 less than none of them. Therefore she should have been permitted to receive not only her 40,000 legal immigrants but also 53,000 more to replace the 53,000 that went back to Italy.

These are the things that different interests say; but theirs is a purely superficial view. If there was a careful analysis of conditions, we should find that there is really no labor shortage in this country, and that in order to get the labor that these men want they would have to pay a little more money for it than they like to pay. What is really wanted is a supply of the cheapest and most easily controlled laborers in Europe—coolie labor—for the sole purpose of fattening incomes and swelling the already overswollen production of this country.

Now, in all the arguments advanced by these interests there is a singular lack of foresight and of desire to further the well-being of the Nation. The uttermost range of their vision seems to be limited by their bank accounts as they will appear in three months' time.

One of the organizations that called for more immigrants during the recent uproar was an association of farmers. One of the legislative agents of this organization (the American Farm Bureau Federation) appeared before the Immigration Committee and made a strong plea for the admission of more immigrants.

Chairman JOHNSON, of the committee, asked the agent whether his organization believed that there had been overproduction of farm products during the past year. The agent, of course, could not do otherwise than reply that it did so believe.

"And they need more laborers just the same?" asked the chairman.

"Yes, sir," replied the agent; "they want to produce crops cheaper."

Here is an excellent sample of fuddled reasoning. The farmer has been assailing high heaven with his passionate demands for additional markets in which to dispose of his goods. He has even asked that the United States hold an economic conference with European nations in order to provide a market for the produce that he could not sell in this country. And now, according to one of this organization's agents, he thinks he can cure himself of overproduction by producing more cheaply, and he therefore asks that thousands upon thousands of the lowest forms of laboring life be admitted to this country from Europe to assist in that cheap production. Even a child could tell him that the sane, sound, and infallible way in which to cure overproduction is to stop overproducing.

Again, before the House Immigration Committee, the counsel for an association of manufacturers demanded more immigration on behalf of the organization that he represented. After a great deal of wordy testimony he threatened darkly that if this country doesn't soon get more immigrants "we'll have to slow down industry." The chairman of the committee at once asked, "Is it better to enlarge our problem by bringing in immigrants or is it better to slow down industry?"

There is no reason at all why the manufacturers of the United States and the legislators of the United States and the consumers and producers of the United States shouldn't ask themselves this question and the other questions that are allied with it.

The population of the United States, including Alaska, is somewhere in the neighborhood of 115,000,000 people. Starting with this as a basis, the people of the country ought to ask themselves a few simple questions. What, for example, will be the population of the Nation 77 years from now, in the year 2000, even without the addition of another immigrant? It will be at least 200,000,000 unless some great catastrophe rips the country to pieces. If within the lifetime of many persons now living the population of the country will reach such an enormous figure, why should its present population be so anxious to utilize every square foot of its land, and to do it by importing the poorest races of Europe? Why should every resource of the country be developed immediately, and why should millions of southeastern Europeans be admitted for the purpose? What reason can possibly exist for this country to drag in the dullest and dumbest people in Europe in order that the United States may raise more farm produce and manufacture more goods than the world can absorb? Why should there be all this hot haste to import coolies by the million in order that every ton of coal may be wrenched from the earth immediately? Why, with the action of Esau held up before all men as a horrible example, should this Nation or any other nation sell its birthright for a mess of pottage? Why shouldn't the American people be working partly for the 200,000,000 American of 77 years from now, instead of entirely for alien peoples of the present day? Why should anyone babble of an existing labor shortage when there is no shortage, but merely a failure on the part of employers to effect a proper distribution of labor? Why should anyone yammer about our net immigration being too small when there are 14,000,000 foreign born in the United States, and more than 7,000,000 who can neither speak nor read our language? And why should a request for more immigrants on the part of any representative of any association or organization be heard with any patience by our legislators when the immigrants who came to America last year from the countries of northern Europe—Great Britain, Sweden, Norway, Germany, Holland, and Denmark—were less than half the number of those who could legally have come if the incentive had been sufficiently great?

Selfish interests may be able to answer these questions to their own satisfaction, but they can not answer them to the satisfaction of 90 per cent of America's citizens.

And although coolie labor may sometimes be a solution for labor shortage, it is doubtful whether the people of America are ready to admit that the time is ripe for the admission of Europe's cheapest coolie laborers, the maintenance of these laborers as coolies during their stay in America, and their shipment back to Europe as coolies—and that is the only way that coolie labor can properly be handled.

In fact, probably the only thing that the people of America could be made to admit, after having their attention called to the manufacturers' claims, is that those among them who howl for more low-grade immigrants are wasting a great deal of valuable time that might better be devoted to working out plans for labor distribution, labor-saving machinery, and a wage scale that will attract American labor and decent immigration from northern Europe as the demand becomes greater.

I do not wish to be understood as picturing all large employers as back of this propaganda to feather their nests by importing servile, slavish, cheap foreign labor, but this is to be noted, that those that howl the loudest for free trade in foreign pauper labor are the first to shout themselves hoarse for a high protective tariff on the products of their plants, and they declare they want the high protective tariff in order to protect the American workingman from the baneful effects of foreign pauper labor, when they employ it and object vociferously to any real direct protection to American workers which would keep them from importing the foreign coolie labor itself.

Outstanding Americans like the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Mr. Daniel Willard, who himself rose from the ranks of labor and who sees beyond the company's own immediate financial gain and patriotically considers the country, her institutions, standards, and ideals, represents, I hope, and "may his tribe increase," the majority of large employers of labor. Mr. Willard took issue with the National Manufacturers' Association in its drive to repeal existing temporary restrictions, stating, according to the House hearings:

I am in favor of a broad policy of selective immigration, but I am not quite able to harmonize such a policy with the latter part of the statement wherein you say that the National Association of Manufacturers is in favor of letting down the bars sufficiently to give our industries and our agriculture the immigrant labor it previously has had to draw from. Previously in our country there was little in our immigration policy of a selective nature. The bars were so thoroughly let down as to permit everybody to come in, the good, bad, and indifferent, and I should regret very much to see that policy resumed. * * * I would much prefer to see the supply of such labor held at a point less than the actual requirements, if necessary, rather than to remove or lower the proper standard of admission.

Here is also what Mr. William J. Faux, president of the Logan Coal Co., said in reply to letters urging him to join in the drive for the modification of existing restrictions. Mr. Faux's company is located in West Virginia, where recently again foreign cheap labor has turned on its employers and where conditions resulting therefrom led Mr. Faux to state:

My preference is that the immigration law should be more drastic than at present. I do not believe it necessary for the United States to make all the goods in the world, and we are certainly producing our share when we produce two-thirds. We have got enough of the immigrants of southern Europe to last for the next 50 years, if we are to maintain our Americanism.

I firmly believe that Mr. Willard and Mr. Faux more nearly represent sentiment even among large employers than do some captains of industry who appeared before the House committee and stated that they wanted to import adult males, without their wives, for a period, under conditions amounting to slavery and peonage, and "quite abhorrent," as the House committee's report well says, "to the institutions of the United States." I have here an excellent article by Mr. E. V. Wilcox, entitled "Immigration goulash," that appeared in the Country Gentleman February 24, 1923, not only covering the attitude of and demand for labor among employers but also going into the whole question in a most enlightening and entertaining way, and which reads as follows:

Do you feel flattered that apparently the whole world wants to come to the United States?

Italy has a million or more which we are assured could well be spared largely because they do not harmonize with the Italian Government and cause too much trouble. The Turks would also like to purify their national structure and have a big spring house cleaning by sending us C. O. D. another million of assorted Armenians and Greeks which they don't need. The war-hatched Balkan States are perfectly willing to lend us their malcontents and trouble makers for 99 years or longer.

Every nation in Europe would gladly send us most of their Hebrew citizens. The Japanese wish Roosevelt had never thought of such a thing as the gentlemen's agreement. The Chinese look upon America as far more celestial than Cathay. The political broth brewers of India would prefer to change their address to San Francisco or Chicago. Russia is simply aching to donate us a few more certified bomb throwers and soviet incubators. And since the 3 per cent restriction doesn't let all these hordes in at once, they are coming as fast as boats will carry them to Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, and even to Canada, with the intention of getting into the United States later by the under-the-fence method if necessary.

A WAR-TAUGHT LESSON.

Europe is simply carrying out the lesson learned during the war that every race has its own desires, ideals, aspirations, traditions, and methods of thinking; that every race is passionately devoted to its own institutions and future development and resists to the last breath assimilation or absorption by another race. In a desperate attempt to prevent the recurrence of racial wars Europe drew a new map of itself, with national boundaries so far as possible along racial lines. In putting together this jigsaw puzzle map of Europe there were found to be millions of people who didn't fit in very well. And, since America is supposed to be the asylum or melting pot or dumping ground or back yard of the world, these misfits are to be shipped here where, we are told, a few more millions of heterogeneous elements won't make much difference in the ultimate brew!

What do our various kinds of citizens think of the prospect? Nearly all Americans who have recently visited Europe agree that unless we safeguard ourselves against the further influx of undesirables there will no longer be an America for the Americans. But if foreign-language newspapers may be taken as reflecting the sentiments of the foreign born within our gates our non-Anglo-Saxon citizens are far more interested in forcing their own customs and institutions upon us than in helping us build a superstructure to fit the foundation upon which America rests. An Italian journal published in New York City recently said editorially: "We not only need organization but also a rapid increase in births among Italians here." A Jersey City Polish newspaper exclaims: "We pride ourselves on having a Polish judge here and there." And a second Polish journal asserts that there is abundant work for another 100,000,000 aliens in the United States, and that anyhow Americans are too lazy to work. The son of a naturalized Jew at a recent congressional hearing on immigration made an appeal against the use of English as the official language of the United States, and urged that Yiddish should be placed on an equal footing.

If your imagination will bear stretching to that extent, just try to picture to yourself what would happen if in 1923 a million Americans should seek asylum and employment in Japan or Italy or Russia or Germany. They are all glad to see Americans come with well-lined purses, but they expect us to cable home for more money before we escape, not to gather any to send back to our uncles and aunts. And yet the Hungarians in the United States boast that in 1922 they sent $40,000,000 back to their relatives. Must we assume that Europe and Asia reserve the right to send over enough of their population to take from us the money which American tourists didn't happen to carry to foreign countries voluntarily Why must this rule continue to work only one way?

But for several decades immigration has been closely connected with industrial conditions and the demand for labor.

THE FACTS.

After a year or more of business depression and extreme unemployment things began to look up, until finally in December certain manufacturers started complaining of a shortage of labor. And one of our commerce journals, with the usual American propensity for immediately applying an onion poultice or a patent medicine to every bump, headache, or stomach trouble, promptly recommended an amendment of the immigration law so as to permit the entry of any and all workmen mentally and physically fit and willing to work.

What is the truth about the employment situation? In order to pick up at first hand the facts on this point I visited New York, Bridgeport, Providence, and Boston, calling upon labor organizations, chambers of commerce, and associations of builders, manufacturers, and merchants for such information as they had collected, and I also consulted with the State departments of agriculture and labor, as well as with Congressmen, Senators, bureau chiefs, and the United States Chamber of Commerce in Washington.

On account of the big boom in building operations, I had a talk with C. G. Norman, chairman of the board of governors of the Building Trades Employers' Association of New York.

"In the building trades," said he, "common labor is abundant and has been during the past two years. The wages are $7 a day for hod carriers and $7.50 for plasterer's helpers. The common laborers in our lines of work are 60 to 70 per cent Italians, a few Irish, and a sprinkling of other races, including Poles. We employ about 15,000 common laborers in the building trades, but the demand is falling off by reason of the slowing down of building operations, partly seasonal, of course. Commercial building is going on about as usual, but the housing boom has passed its peak, having been somewhat overdone by speculative builders.

"Yes; our common labor is quite satisfactory," Norman added. "The Italians are physically capable of doing the hard work. Many of them started in with railroad work and rose to employment in the building business. Newcomers find work in the excavation operations and work up to hod carriers or become plasterers. The pick-and-shovel men get $4.80 a day. There are between 3,500 and 4,000 plasterers in New York City, 50 per cent of whom are Italians. All labor in the building trades is organized.

"For the past two years we have been constantly threatened with an artificial shortage of skilled labor. The unions restrict the number of men in each group or trade. There are too few plasterers and they have an artificial wage scale. The Greeks tried to limit the number of mosaic workers to 85 for the whole city of New York. So long as the labor unions keep closed books there is, of course, no satisfactory apprenticeship possible. Some of the union leaders have been indicted for their attempt to limit the output or work, and in order to escape conviction it is likely that they will accept a consent decree requiring them to open their books to additional members and permit apprenticeship.

RACIAL CHANGES IN LABOR.

"There has been here and there," Norman replied in answer to a question, "a slight shortage of labor in the manufacturing trades because they didn't pay enough. The steel and cement industries first reduced wages and then had to advance them again. No; the wage is not too high in comparison with living costs. There is always considerable lost time in the building trades on account of weather and change of location. But the best grade of our labor is already engaged for the first six months of 1923, rather longer in advance than usual. We have had to accommodate ourselves to many racial changes in labor. In the early days nearly every plasterer and stonecutter in New York was English or Scotch. Now they are Italian. Our carpenters were first Germans, then Swedes, and now Jews. The Jewish fraternal organizations, without consent of the carpenters' unions, boosted wages by resolution from $9 to $12 a day. But rents will have to fall soon and builders will not be able to pay so much."

In further investigation in New York I learned that clothing makers are in a bad way, not on account of a scarcity of labor but because the tailors' unions prevent the discharge of a man after he has worked two weeks. Everywhere I was told that the efficiency of common labor is up to the pre-war level but that the efficiency of skilled labor depends entirely on the supply and demand. The more you have to pay the less service you get. The whole United States and Canada seem to be short of plasterers for the simple reason that the unions have not allowed others to join, thus making it necessary for builders to hire them at extra wages for overtime—$26 a day, for example, in Pittsburgh.

INDUSTRIAL HIGHWAYMEN.

But according to the census, there are only 38,000 plasterers in the whole country. And because this little bunch of men has limited the output there are men who would let down the immigration bars and flood the country with more millions of aliens rather than do the obvious thing and admit into the plasterers' unions some of the thousands who want to join. By contrast with this little group of 38,000 dictators who tell us what our plastering will cost, there are about 11,000,000 wage earners on farms. Suppose they should form a union of only 3,000,000, force the others to quit farming, declare an eight-hour day, and charge double for eggs and potatoes gathered after 4 o'clock. Then there would be some honest-to-goodness excitement which would totally eclipse the little tempest in a teapot caused by the impudence of a small group of industrial highwaymen. The outstanding, conscientious industry and loyalty of the farm population show by contrast the peanut-headedness and pettiness of some union leaders.

In Boston I spent some time in the State veterans' bureau. They were receiving about 300 applications a week for jobs and were having great difficulty in finding employment for the men. Young, fine-looking, able-bodied men came to see if there were any chance at a job. And the best job on the list was only a bit of temporary work for four or five days. These veterans were coming back day after day looking for employment without finding it. I couldn't see any argument in that situation in favor of letting in more millions of aliens.

I called on L. E. Archibald, statistician of the Massachusetts department of labor and industries. "There is no shortage of either skilled or unskilled labor in this State," said he. "Building operations were greater in 1922 than in 1921, but November showed the regular seasonal decline from October. According to returns from 1,061 unions, with a membership of 216,000, about 20 per cent of their members are idle. Reports from 214 manufacturing establishments show 79 per cent working full time and 21 per cent only part time. Our industries are approaching the normal point, but are still a little below. Even the demand for tailors fell off in November and December, as compared with October, and 13 per cent of our garment workers are now unemployed."

In a talk with C. D. Woods, of the Massachusetts department of agriculture, I learned that there is no trouble in securing all the farm labor needed, mostly Americans. "Poles are raising onions on their own account," said he, "and the Portuguese go in for poultry, strawberries, and truck crops. Otherwise foreigners are not interested in our farms. Green farm labor gets $30 to $40 a month and board, and milkers $50 to $60. But for the most part city dwellers do not go on farms." Evidently Massachusetts doesn't need to have the Nation's gates pushed any further ajar.

But in New Haven the Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut reported a shortage of 3,500 laborers and complained that they had to pay 35 to 40 cents an hour, or $2.80 to $3.20 a day. I wonder what the general run of the American public thinks of such a complaint. Are they in favor of filling up the whole country with people who care to live on an income of less than $2.80 a day If not, there is only one thing for the Connecticut manufacturers to do—pay enough to attract better workmen.

The United States Department of Labor has just completed an employment survey of the whole country, finding labor conditions everywhere better than last year. But last year there were 4,000,000 or more unemployed. States affected by seasonal suspension of logging operations, farm work, or building construction are not so favorably supplied with jobs. But in all manufacturing centers there is active increase of employment for skilled workers. And if the demand should exceed the supply the unions have merely to enlarge their membership by a suitable apprentice system.

FARM-SHUNNING ALIENS.

But perhaps the farmer begins to wonder why he should worry about immigration troubles. He gets little help from immigrants. Almost none of the great flock of orientals in California work for American farmers. They rent farms of speculators and work for themselves. In fact, there are more white men working for Japanese farmers than Japanese working for American farmers. In Massachusetts, with 700,000 foreign-born wage earners, there are only 160 of them in orchard work, while over 700 are policemen. Of all foreign born gainfully employed in the United States only 12 per cent are in agriculture, and those mostly for themselves. In this as in many other respects the American farmer must practice self-reliance. Farmers don't have to come to us to find a job. They are wanted in their own countries.

Where do the immigrant aliens go after coming through our gates? Of the 805,000 admitted in 1921 more than 264,000 located in New York State and only 180 in the agricultural State of Arkansas. That doesn't make it look as if they were coming here to farm or to become a permanent part of us. Moreover, 432,000, or considerably more than half of the grand total, were Jews, Italians, Armenians, Greeks, Japanese, Chinese, and Finns, races which generation after generation maintain their own churches, customs, languages, schools, and social affiliations almost as intact as if they had remained in their native countries.

JUST IN THE NICK OF TIME.

And yet all these years we have heard much loose talk about the American melting pot, just as if the antagonistic and heterogeneous elements in our population had really fused or amalgamated, or as if the mongrel product would be an improvement over the pure races. History teaches us that there is a displacement or submergence but no amalgamation. Melting pot is not the right name for America. It is more nearly a dice box, yielding a different result every time you shake it. On the first throw the Jew may come out on top, on the next the Italian or Russian or Pole, or occasionally the American. That the stranger within our gates remains in big unassimilated groups is evident from the fact that more than half of the 14,000,000 foreign born in the country are located in New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Illinois near manufacturing centers. In fact, New York State, with a total population of 10,385,000, has 2,825,000 foreign born as compared with 2,810,000 foreign born in the 45,731,000 population of the 30 States south of the Ohio and west of the Mississippi, excepting North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri.

When the House of Representatives picked its present Immigration Committee it selected for chairman ALBERT JOHNSON, a man who is interested in preserving the social and political texture of the United States as well as its permanent industrial position. I had a talk with Mr. JOHNSON about the recent immigration excitement. "The present 3 per cent admission on the basis of the 1910 census," said he, "is the first attempt of Congress to restrict immigration. It was passed just in the nick of time. A veritable flood of destitute, restless wanderers and adventurers had an eye on the United States. The law kept out at least 2,000,000 who wanted to forget about worthless rubles, kopecks, kronen, and other imitation money and learn the feel of a real dollar. They would come in by millions if the bars were removed. The law has substantially checked the alien flood.

"We talk glibly about inspection of immigrants," JOHNSON added. "But how careful an inspection could be given when they poured in a million a year? Most of them come through Ellis Island. Even the experienced force at that station can not really examine 2,500 new aliens every one of the 365 days a year. That is over 300 an hour, or about 10 seconds to the alien. Can we really ascertain very much about the make-up, quality, and viewpoint of the aliens we admit if we run them through the inspection mill at that rate?

"The worst of it all is," JOHNSON continued, "that the northern races, the ones who alone amalgamate with us, do not send more than half as many as the law would admit, while all southern European nations exhaust their quotas and howl for more. In 1922 the Poles gave passports to America to more Jews than the Polish quota would allow, and induced the genuine Slavic Poles in America to return to their native land in such numbers as to more than counterbalance the Jews they sent us. Other countries in Europe have adopted the same plan. They are giving us the odds and ends, while they purify and homogenize their own racial composition.

"No; I am not greatly impressed by the cry for cheap labor," JOHNSON proceeded. "A great part of it is due to the fact that the wages of common labor have greatly advanced. But we can not Americanize aliens without paying them enough to maintain their self-respect. We surely can not afford to admit them so fast that they will be standing about by millions waiting for an occasional job. That procedure has already proved too expensive."

THE FARMER'S HEAVY LOSS.

All the populations of the world gravitate so automatically toward the United States as a universal asylum that we often fail to realize how stupendous, though noiseless, is the pressure of this immigration avalanche. By contrast the great noise made about the Zionist movement, for example, might lead one to think that a large Jewish migration to Palestine was in progress. But the records show that last year 58,524 Hebrew aliens came to the United States, while 18 left this country for Palestine, where there are only 50,000 Jews all told. And yet a New York rabbi recently asked, "If you object to the Jew in London and also in Jerusalem, where will the Jew go?" Of course, the answer is, "To New York." That is precisely the place for which all the world seems to be headed.

If, then, only 2 per cent or less of the inpouring aliens go to our farms, how does immigration affect the farmer? Well, he has lost billions of dollars as a result of strikes fomented by foreign-born leaders. Scarcely a month goes by without some alien-engineered disturbance which interferes with the marketing, distribution, and consumption of farm products. And the farmer is vitally concerned in having to pay taxes to care for other aliens who are not physically able to raise an industrial rumpus.

And is not it about time to have a showdown on the labor-shortage argument for unrestricted immigration? Not even at the peak of our activities was there a shortage of labor. In all shipyards, camps, munition plants, and essential industrial centers men were so plentiful that they stepped on one another's heels.

Perhaps we can look to our farms to preserve the original traditions, purposes, and blood lines of the founders of America. If so, the farmer will be able to speak the authoritative voice of the Nation. In the meantime we shall have to deny ourselves to millions of would-be visitors from foreign countries while we take an inventory of the human assets and liabilities within our borders; do a bit of house cleaning and set our domestic affairs in the better order. There are enough social and economic problems to study in connection with the 14,000,000 foreign born now in the United States. And in this study we shall do well to think of posterity and the permanence of our most cherished institutions, and not merely of industrial profits and labor surpluses.

Can any good American view the facts described in the article by Mr. Wilcox without alarm? The Commissioner General of Immigration says in his report for last year that 432,505 aliens were inspected, examined, and admitted to the United States, only "13,731 aliens were rejected" at our gates "for all causes," and in addition 973,804 alien seamen landed, making a grand total of 1,420,040. And yet this Congress will end without the personally promised and platform-pledged constructive permanent immigration law. The existing temporary quota, or so-called 3 per cent law, expires June 30, 1924. Congress will not meet again, probably, until next December, right on the eve of a presidential campaign, when the various hyphenated foreign blocs will be uppermost in the minds of certain master politicians, and when it behooves Americans to be on guard to guard the gates; for one may well say with Aldrich, the patriot poet:

O Liberty, white goddess, is it well
To leave the gates unguarded? On thy breast
Fold Sorrow's children, soothe the hurts of fate,
Lift the downtrodden, but with hand of steel
Stay those who to thy sacred portal come
To waste the gifts of freedom. Have a care
Lest from thy brow the clustered stars be torn
And trampled in the dust. For so of old
The thronging Goth and Vandal trampled Rome,
And where the temples of the Cæsars stood
The lean wolf unmolested made her lair.

CRITICISMS OF CODE BILL, MARCH 2, REVIEWED.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, on the 2d day of March, after 22 months of delay and 24 hours before the lawmaking body disperses, for the first time we get an idea from a reviewer, on March 2, of why that committee never held a meeting and never made a report upon H. R. 12. They have gotten together an array of petty details of suggestions from law clerks in the departments, disposed of by the revisers and the committee two or three years ago. They brought to the task an employee of the committee who was discharged because he wanted to change and improve the law instead of following the laws of Congress. As to those, we long since thrashed out and disposed of them, because the committee was determined to adhere to the laws made by Congress. Much of the material that he hurls at us at this last hour, while we have no time to go over it, he thinks, has already been fully presented to the House, as, for example, the law on ambassadors and ministers, on which I addressed the House January 26, 1923, presenting a letter from the Department of State, which demonstrated that the House committee was correct in its view. So far as I have been able to learn in three or four hours of investigation this afternoon, since I discovered this dying gasp of the distinguished gentleman, there is not a single, solitary objection they raised March 2 on which they have not been fully informed by the House committee, and not an objection which has not been thoroughly disposed of in the material we have presented to the House in the last week or so. It is just repetition of petty details of no importance and of suggestions impelled by a total lack of conception of the purpose of a code. He has made just one new suggestion, and that is when he calls attention to the decision in 253 U. S. 149, which on May 17, 1920, declared unconstitutional one of the laws which was in force March 4, 1919, and was necessarily included in the code bill.

In the few hours at my command I can not, of course, cover everything he presents in 14 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You will notice that the criticisms that he presents from the Interstate Commerce Commission were, as he admits, practically all withdrawn. As a matter of fact, out of 49, 1 suggestion was discovered to be correct and the bill should be so amended. There are 4 others of slight importance possibly open to debate and over 40 were withdrawn by the commission, and let me add that except the Department of the Navy, practically every criticism ever offered except a few, which we conceded to be correct and prepared for insertion in the bill, has long since been withdrawn and we follow herewith with the indorsements substituted for their criticisms.

THE CODE.

Webster's Dictionary says: "Code: A compilation of laws by public authority." The reviewer of March 2, 1923, says that this is not a code. The reason he says that is because he does not know any better. Webster states it correctly—and what difference does it make anyway what general appellation is applied. The suggestion is made that in 1874 they called the same book the Revised Statutes. As a matter of fact, the Constitution of the United States does not provide for any statutes. There is no such thing as a statute under our Constitution. They are all laws and so denominated by the Constitution, and therefore this book is properly called the code of the laws of the United States.

The reviewer says there are repetitions in this great book of nearly 2,000,000 words. Why the laws of the United States and the Statutes at Large are full of repetitions, and when we repeat the laws in this code we repeat the repetitions. Over and over repetitions appear, and in making a code particularly, this becomes essential. A general provision of law may necessarily be repeated in several sections in order to give the context the benefit of the neighborhood of the general proposition. A suggestion that it is repetition is so puerile that it is silly, and could only be presented by somebody who held a bill for 20 months without having a committee meeting and who employed to review the work a party discharged by the committee from making the work because he desired to constantly amend the law instead of getting it together. It is not surprising that this review of March 2 should be of no value and of no materiality when you remember that it is presented by a party who wanted to constantly amend the law.

3420 AND 3462.

The debater claims that our section 3420 is repealed by our section 3462. They are both items in appropriation bills and do not even mention each other, and there is not a line of repeal connected with this 3462 anywhere that would repeal anything. He is just dreaming.

Section 3420 refers to reapportioning space among departments now occupying the State, War, and Navy Department Building and laws governing that and the watchmen, and a law providing that no rooms vacated may be used for museum purposes.

Section 3462 does not repeal it at all. Instead of discussing the reassignment of the folks in the State, War, and Navy Building, it talks about controlling space in owned or leased Government buildings in the District, and gives it absolute control of the space in the several public buildings owned or leased in the District, with certain exceptions. It says nothing whatever about the repeal of the museum clause, which, of course, is still the law. It says nothing whatever about several things mentioned in 3420. If 3420 were eliminated, considerable law would be gone. If there is some amendment partially of one by the other, the only way to do was to print them both in the same chapter and let the courts decide just what the effect was. There are many laws made by Congress which partially repeal other laws by implication, but it is absolutely essential to retain the old laws because of parts of them, and the only way a court can know what result is reached by making the new law is to print them both and let the courts pass on it. Anybody who understands the first principles of the rules of codification knows that one of the heaviest duties of the courts is to decide just what effect new laws have on old laws. One of the greatest misfortunes in our system of laws is that there is so much loose and confused repeal by implication and otherwise. Of course, there are in so big a book many instances in which the courts will be compelled to compare sections and interpret the effect of the later upon the earlier, and state just how much is left standing. It is difficult to analyze with patience the puny and presumptuous criticisms of men who do not know enough of the law to realize that fact.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Under the head of the Department of State a number of suggestions are made which have long since been met and disposed of.

The claim is that the law with regard to foreign ministers and ambassadors in sections 3221 and 3214 is wrong. Section 3221 says that there shall be one minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua. We are told that there are now five and that our section is wrong. The Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 672, found in our section 3214, says that—

Hereafter no new ambassadorship shall be created unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress.

It is claimed that that is not the law. As this is the only suggestion of error, we will take it right up. I urged upon the gentleman that if he would name 10 mistakes we would soon dispose of that number and it would be a better evidence of his good faith. My colleague, Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, who was with me, will verify the fact that he only claimed to point out one mistake, to put his finger on one statement of the law that was wrong.

By the way, my colleague suggested that probably the committee was right, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], an eminent member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, said to me this morning that our committee did the only thing it could do, putting it in.

As you know, the purpose of House bill 12 is to present the law as made by Congress, unless it has been repealed or decided to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The committee has no earthly excuse for just quietly omitting some law, and we have had some considerable opposition because we declined to allow interested people to induce us to omit the law.

The situation is this: The Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 672, says:

Hereafter no new ambassadorship shall be created unless the same shall be provided for by act of Congress.

This is the law of the United States as made by Congress. No court, so far as I can learn, has ever held that it is unconstitutional. Therefore, in the judgment of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, it is still in force and effect and it is inserted as section 3214 of House bill 12.

While the other people have not directed our attention to the Constitution of the United States and probably had not thought of it in this connection, the basis of their suggestion, which they evidently got from somebody else, is Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the President shall appoint ambassadors and consuls, with the advice and consent of the Senate, but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

In the case of United States v. Eaton (109 U. S. 331–352) it was held that Congress may vest the appointment of a vice consul in the President if it wants to.

The act of March 1, 1893 (27 S. 497), authorizes the President to direct that the representatives of the United States to other governments shall have the same title that is given by the other governments to their diplomatic representatives to the United States, and this law was in force until March 2, 1909, when it was repealed by the specific statement of repeal in 35 S. 672, and Congress said what is embodied in section 3214 of House bill 12.

Nevertheless, the department and the President have acted on the theory evidently that it is unconstitutional, as many good lawyers have, and it is quite probable that the courts would so hold, but the Committee on Revision of the Laws does not feel that it is authorized to suggest to Congress that it repeal the law or hold it unconstitutional. We do not attempt to govern or even suggest the position that the President and the Secretary of State should take in enforcing the law or in not enforcing it, but we feel that it is our duty under our pledge to the House to repeat the law as Congress wrote it and make the same mistake that Congress made, if any. [Applause.]

The President has appointed quite a number of ambassadors and ministers plenipotentiary to various countries, which appointments are not authorized by any law except by Article II of the Constitution, if it governs. That article can be found by all comers in the Constitution of the United States, but it is not found anywhere in any laws enacted by Congress, and that is all the committee has reported.

There is in section 3221 of the proposed code a law providing that only one minister shall be sent to the five Central American Republics. The President has since provided a minister for each of them and Congress has made appropriations to pay them, but Congress has never amended the law embodied in section 3221 and in section 3222. This Committee on Revision is the servant of the House and therefore of the Congress, and until we are directed by Congress that there is an amendment of the law embodied in sections 3221 and 3222, it would seem to me that it is absolutely imperative that these laws shall be presented in any code that may be proffered in the House or in Congress.

The laws of the United States, as found in the Revised Statutes, 1682 (18 S. 484 and 40 S. 1326), embodied in section 3221 of House bill 12, state that—

There shall be but one minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua.

THE SECTION IS AS MADE BY CONGRESS EXACTLY.

There has been no repeal of this by Congress; there has been no declaration that it is unconstitutional by any court. However, the President has appointed five ministers to those five States, and Congress has appropriated for them. As this law has never been repealed and never declared unconstitutional, it is, of course, still in effect, but the appropriations by Congress are paying the five gentlemen who go to Central America.

Having found no repeal and having learned of no decision declaring it unconstitutional, the committee had no option but to place it here in House bill 12. It will not be any more in effect if the bill becomes a law than it is right now, and the situation will continue just as it is with five ministers being paid down there. That is a difficulty in the law for which the committee is in no way responsible. The Congress should keep the laws in better shape and more understandable.

We undertake to repeat what you have done, not to correct it. If there is a flaw in it, it is yours, not ours. [Applause.]

As to the ambassadorships, Thirty-fifth Statutes, page 672, which is presented in section 3214, specifically provides that hereafter there shall be no more ambassadorships after that date except by authority of Congress. There is not any other law on the subject except what is in the Constitution, which is quite accessible, and which will not be interfered with by anything Congress does any time. As the law in the Thirty-fifth Statutes, page 672, has never been repealed and has never been declared unconstitutional, as far as I can learn it is still the law and should be right where it is in this proposed legislation.

On November 22, 1922, the chairman of the Revision of Laws Committee wrote the Solicitor of the State Department that whenever this H. R. 12 may become a law, having thus assembled all the statutory enactments on the subject, an amendment to the present laws should be arranged for by the State Department which would bring the ambassadorial appointments down to date and embody them in a statute.

THEY CAN AMEND IN FIVE MINUTES IF AN ERROR IS LOCATED.

If they wish to make an amendment, it can be done in five minutes. Let them bring it back here then, and we will see what we will decide about it. We will have no trouble in acting promptly on it.

It is the judgment of the committee and of every lawyer in the House with whom I have consulted that the law as presented in House bill 12 with regard to the ambassadors and ministers is the law just as it was made and just as it stands.

The law provides for a chargé and consul general at Teheran and there has never been any change in it. Under the authority of the Constitution, but without any authority from Congress, the President has appointed a minister, and Congress pays him and the Senate has confirmed him, but the law as made by Congress is just as it has been for years. He says that it is obsolete. There is no such thing as obsolete law; law desists when repealed or declared unconstitutional.

He says that the legation at Constantinople was a number of years ago raised to the rank of embassy. It was by the President, under the authority of the Constitution, but not by Congress, which has never made a law authorizing it. No Member of the House or Senate has any right to declare law unconstitutional, and the only law there is on the subject says just what this code says. He wants to change the word "legation" in the law to the word "embassy." The President has done so but the law does not do so. The Constitution probably authorizes the President to do it, and I think it would be well if we could arrange a publication including all the things that the President has authority to do under the Constitution but which are not a part of the statutes.

Everything under the Department of State is included in these answers, and the attitude of the department is shown by a letter from the Secretary, which follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 27, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 23, 1923, in which you state that in a communication dated November 22, 1922, to which no written reply has been received, you advised the department of the attitude of the House Committee on Revision of the Laws regarding certain suggestions which the department had made concerning sections 3214, 3221, and 3222 of bill H. R. 12, and that you understood that the department concurred in the view of the committee. You add that Senator ERNST, chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws, has informed you of the receipt from the department of a communication criticizing sections 3221 and 3222 of the bill, and inclose a statement of the law as understood by your committee, concerning which you desire the department's comments.

I beg to inform you that in response to a communication dated November 10, 1922, from Senator ERNST, requesting that the department give to the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws the benefit of any suggestions it might desire to make concerning bill H. R. 12, the department on December 7, 1922, stated that at the time bill H. R. 9389 was receiving the consideration of the House committee a memorandum had been prepared in response to a request from you containing brief comments on certain sections of the bill. A copy of the memorandum was transmitted to Senator ERNST for the information of the Senate committee and he was advised that the department at that time had no additional suggestions to offer concerning the sections covered by that memorandum.

It is observed that the title of H. R. 12 is "A bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919." At the time the department's memorandum was prepared it was assumed that it was within the scope of the work of your committee in revising the laws of the United States to make all the changes suggested in the memorandum. In any event it was thought desirable to give your committee the benefit of such suggestions as occurred to the department with respect to the sections covered by the memorandum. The question, however, whether the scope of the work of the committee in revising the laws of the United States would permit the adoption of the suggestions which the department made concerning sections 3221 and 3222 of the bill (none was made respecting section 3214), is obviously a matter for determination by the committee, concerning which I would not feel free to express an opinion.

I have noted your statement that after the bill becomes a law you intend to suggest to the department that an amendment be prepared for the purpose of correcting such inaccuracies as may appear.

I am my dear Mr. LITTLE,
Very sincerely yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The laws of the United States provide that in many oriental countries the Government has extraterritorial powers. By a series of treaties and neglect the Government has abandoned those powers in many cases. The chairman of the Committee on Revision of Laws when he represented this country in Egypt exercised for this country those extraterritorial powers there and was quite familiar with those conditions. He found to his surprise that the Congress of the United States had never kept pace with the treaties and that all the laws were in effect still, so far as Congress could go. There is no man in this country has the right to say that those laws were not in effect March 4, 1919. No court had so decided, and Congress had never repealed them. All this alleged argument he has presented under foreign relations is based on the theory that the statutes made by Congress could be repealed by proclamation. One of the greatest difficulties in the laws of this country is that Congress has never kept the statutes and the treaties together, and it has been the hope of this committee that as soon as this bill presenting the laws made by Congress was enacted we could take up the treaties and present them in full and get them all in touch. The argument on this subject presented says that the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States in Egypt results from a treaty with the Ottoman Empire made in 1830 and not with Egypt as stated in the section. The extraterritorial powers in the Turkish Empire sprang originally from an ancient treaty with the Turkish Empire, which included Egypt. If you will turn to section 4803 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 you will find that it says:

To carry into full effect the provisions of the treaties of the United States with China, Japan, Siam, Egypt, and Madagascar, respectively, the ministers and consuls of the United States, duly appointed to reside in each of those countries, shall, in addition to other powers and duties imposed upon them, respectively, by the provisions of such treaties, respectively, be invested with the judicial authority herein described.

The gentleman did not know what he was talking about. All treaties that have effect in Egypt were long since ratified by Egypt and became treaties with Egypt, and there is no authority exercised there by any foreign officer, for the reasons stated in section 4803 of the Revised Statutes. They might have permitted the chairman of the revision committee to have had knowledge of that, because he exercised those powers himself. All this matter was thoroughly discussed long since with this department and long since disposed of, and you will see from the above letter from the Secretary of State, under date of January 27, 1923, that he advised Senator ERNST that his department at that time had no additional suggestions to offer. The gentleman should have read section 4803 of the Revised Statutes.

Referring to section 6295, the criticism of March 2 suggests, with regard to this section, that so much of this section as relates to arrest and imprisonment of officers or seamen deserting, or charged with desertion, and for the cooperation of the local authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, is specifically repealed by the act of March 15, 1915 (38 S. 1184). Well, what does he tell us that for? If you turn to section 6295, you will find that it so says. The fact is that on May 31, 1921, the criticism which he has just stated above was made and was O. K'd by the committee on revision, and so appears in section 6295. What is he repeating it for? Section 6295 says:

If on the examination provided for in the preceding section it is made to appear that the person so arrested is a citizen of the United States, he shall be forthwith discharged from arrest and shall be left to the ordinary course of law.

Our section provided that this former law should not apply at all whenever it appeared that the person arrested was a citizen of the United States, and this gentleman got gravely up and said:

This Government has abrogated all treaty provisions which would permit arrest or imprisonment for desertion.

Why, that is what section 6295 provides—that an American citizen can not be arrested. The fact is that when they went to the State Department to ask for suggestions they simply handed them the old suggestions of May 31, 1921. The committee had long since followed every one of them that was correct, and the man who prepared this argument of March 2 had not the slightest idea of what he was talking about. He just blindly repeated the letter of May 31, 1921. Secretary Hughes has not said a word about this. This came from a former letter of 1921. The gentleman seems to have an idea that a treaty can repeal a law. A treaty may supersede a law, but the treaty can not take the words of Congress out of its mouth and strike them out of the statute books. The courts must decide what effect the laws and the treaties have upon each other. This gentleman should not have undertaken a review of a difficult and complicated matter which he does not understand. We took this up two years ago with the department and reached a mutual agreement about it. He has just simply swelled his aggregation of alleged criticisms by repeating something like a parrot.

The gentleman says that this Government has abrogated treaty provisions which would permit arrest or imprisonment for desertion. Our code says that the minute it appears that the man is an American citizen he shall be discharged from arrest forthwith. It is extremely astounding that anyone should venture into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and put himself in such a situation as this stuff puts the author of it.

THE JUDICIARY.

Some years ago the Committee on Revision of the Laws employed a gentleman to assist in preparing another revision, which he did at a cost of many thousands of dollars. In his earnest desire to improve the laws he made many changes. The committee of course realized that they could not get through a thousand amendments at one swoop and never even made any report of the bill, which cost thousands of dollars. When we began this work the gentleman offered his services without cost, but was employed at a regular salary and paid, but carefully instructed that he must make no changes whatever. He undertook to do the work on the judiciary and did, but the chairman discovered that he was making law of his own to improve the other law. After careful examination the chairman called in the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and called his attention to it, and he joined in the judgment that the gentleman was making law of his own and we were compelled to rewrite the entire judiciary end of this work and subsequently to discharge the gentleman because of his determination to insert his own views of the law. He has been employed over at the other end of the Capitol for $650 to review the work done by the committee in which he joined. I regret to say that after the gentleman had done considerable of this bill he proceeds to criticize his own work. I present herewith some correspondence between the reviewer employed at the other end of the Capitol and the chairman of the House committee, which explains the difference in their views of what the law should be:

On January 27, 1920, Mr. Lott, the reviewer of March 2, wrote me:

With respect to the Navy title and the 26 sections proposed you sent me I can only repeat there is so much left-handed, back-handed, over-the-shoulder legislation with respect to that title that the only way to make it intelligible is to begin at the beginning and rewrite it.

The committee on revision, however, was confined to repeating the work done by Congress and could not avail itself of Mr. Lott's desire to rewrite the law.

On February 7, 1920, the chairman wrote Mr. Lott as follows:

I am greatly puzzled that you should find the work more difficult. As a matter of fact, our method cuts the work you have been doing about in two and makes it much easier for you. As I have written you several times, the simple purpose of this bill is to present to Congress the general and permanent laws in force March 4, 1919, without a single, solitary change in them as far as can be avoided intelligently. We shall make no effort to "improve," but take it for granted that Congress knew what it wanted to say better than we do; and I must be able to say to Congress that we present the law just as it was. If we cut a long sentence into smaller sentences the question arises to the court at once as to whether the meaning is just the same. Furthermore, every critic in the House arises to insist upon a discussion of that section. If this bill should be read by sections and so discussed, it could not get through either House in two years and would be impossible. We must make no changes at all.

On October 9, 1919, Mr. Lott wrote:

In but few instances have I supplied a gap to which no person can object.

But the committee on revision did object, and therefore Mr. Lott is now the reviewer of March 2, telling why he thinks the gaps should have been supplied. In his letter of February 14, 1920, to the chairman the reviewer of March 2, 1923, says concerning section 1426:

This section, as finally corrected by me and returned to you, likewise contains new language.

This the committee decided it could not use. We did not employ the gentleman to furnish his language but to supply the language of Congress.

On July 26, 1919, before the gentleman had taken the trouble to read our instructions, he refers us back to his effort to establish a revised statutes some 15 years ago, and speaks of his chapter 5. The man simply wanted to rewrite the whole thing, and this was his continuous and steady attitude whenever he could get away from the instructions long enough to draw a deep breath, and now he glories in being able to explain why the laws should be varied from the laws made by Congress.

In February, 1920, it was discovered by the committee that he was making law himself, one particular section being produced that was purely original with him. The chairman of the committee then wrote him as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1920.

Hon. JOHN LOTT, Tiffin, Ohio.

MY DEAR LOTT: A telegram with regard to 1606–7 is at hand and I shall read your letter with interest. I have examined the sources from which this section of yours was made, and you have probably about stated the law, but you have changed its words and its order so it would require a court decision to decide whether the law was the same as it was before. You have so changed the words that anybody in the House who wanted to make an objection could raise the issue, and it would take quite a debate to demonstrate that the law was the same, even if it is. If I should undertake to amend these sections that way, a debate would be precipitated that would make it impossible to pass the law at all. I seem to have been unable to have secured your attention to the fact that the purpose of this book will be to reproduce the law just exactly as it is without any improvement.

This section, unless your letter states something that I don't now have in mind, fails to comply with this rule and will necessarily be eliminated from the book. I will assemble the sections in the law as they are and insert them, but, Mr. Lott, how many more are there like that in this judiciary? Are there so many that I must go through all this work and do it over again? If so, nothing has been done on the judiciary that is of any benefit to the work. In order to be useful, this copy must come here ready for the printer, just as it was before, except that it is consolidated, codified, and revised, without any amendment or change.

This is an admirable illustration of the danger of which I have been cautioning you against all the time, and which would wholly make impossible the accomplishment of our purpose. From 18— to 1873 a board of "experts" revised the statutes. Ben Butler's committee saw at a glance that it would be impossible to pass any such code, and hired a lawyer a year to work taking out the alleged "improvements" those experts put in. Then he secured the passage and gave the world the greatest law book it ever saw, the only work of the kind ever published in the United States for the United States, a book where a man could find the law and know it was the law. Let me hear from you as to whether or not there are many more sections like this.

Some time last September I returned to you your first copy, because of so many sections having taken too much liberty with existing law, and I marked on the margins of several of them where change had been made. I find it difficult to comprehend how such a section as 1106 could have crept into the work after my letter of last September, especially in view of all the instructions. We can't go on with this work unless our revisers adhere strictly to the methods I have arranged and which the committee very warmly indorses. It is absolutely necessary that from now on the rule be strictly adhered to. I will investigate the judiciary and decide as to whether any of it is outside the rule besides this section.

Very sincerely yours, E. C. LITTLE.

Under the head of the judiciary attention is called to the Knickerbocker case, found in United States 253, page 149, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States made May 17, 1920, declaring a certain law unconstitutional. This bill undertakes to present the law in effect March 4, 1919. The bill does so present it. On May 17, 1920, a certain law that was in effect March 4, 1919, was declared unconstitutional and ceased to be in effect, but that does not void the fact that it was in effect March 4, 1919, and in the years to come the student who desires to know what law was in effect on March 4, 1919, would know just what the law was, and it is put right where it belongs and ought to stay and no man who was competent to work on such a bill would raise such a point.

He then devotes considerable space to the headlines of the sections. There is nothing the matter with any of the headlines that he mentions. They are just like they ought to be. They are just a matter of taste, anyway, and the able men who revised these laws for this committee think their headlines show better taste than the gentleman's might. This bill specifically provides that the headlines are no part of the law. This talk about the headlines, of course, is just an attempt to throw dirt in the faces of the examiners and to distract attention from the book.

The reviewer of March 2 calls particular attention to section 3705. He says:

Comment upon the foregoing section is hardly necessary. It is a most remarkable work in the art of statute making. It does not slight either the Revised Statutes or the Statutes at Large or the Code of the Laws of the United States.

This section is taken from the act of May 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 547). It deals with the immigration laws. The reviewer of March 2 criticizes the manner in which the section was written. I do not know who wrote this section; I did not. Ex-Senator Hardwick was chairman of the committee when it was passed. Former Senator Penrose, Senator Dillingham, Senator Sterling, and Senator Hiram Johnson were members of the committee at that time. I suggest that he take his criticism to them. Our committee can not omit or change the existing law. Congress authorized us to print the existing law as it is contained in the statute books. The reviewer of March 2 does not seem to understand that the purpose of this bill is to print the law as it was when Congress made it. He thinks the committee can omit or change the laws already passed at will.

He says:

It does not slight either the Revised Statutes or the Statutes at Large or the Code of the Laws of the United States.

I hope not; why should it? The aforesaid act in the Fortieth Statutes spoke of the provisions "of this act." "This act" then referred to the Fortieth Statutes, pages 542 to 548, inclusive. If he means that we should have let it remain as it was, the words "this act" would refer to the act to establish a code and would be stating a deliberate untruth. It became necessary to strike out the words "this act" and substitute something intelligent, which brings us to refer to the Fortieth Statutes, page 547, so that we did not slight the origin. Of that act, a major portion appears in section 3675 of the Code of the Laws of the United States, so that you find this act now either in section 3675 of this code or in the Fortieth Statutes aforesaid. He evidently does not understand the point, or perhaps his mind can not carry two statements of the same thing. We had in our employ at one time a reviser who could not catch that, and he made us a lot of trouble by forcing the chairman to go over his work and correct it. Evidently that gentleman is the reviewer that was employed to correct the work he was not allowed to fix to suit himself.

In many places in the old law reference is made to "this act," or some similar phrase. It becomes necessary to substitute for it the statement of what act it was, and anybody that has any serious appreciation of making a code would see that that is necessary. It is also convenient to locate the same law in the new code, and that we have generally been able to do. The section which he criticizes is one of the best examples of excellent codification that could be produced. I am glad he cited attention to it. You will notice that he does not pretend to say what his criticism is. He just indulges his satire. The Bible says that the laughter of fools is like the crackling of thorns under the pot. You will hear them crackle as you read that review constantly. There is not the slightest change in the law in the section he criticizes. It is printed just as it was made, and there is not any earthly reason why it should be subjected to any suggestion of criticism.

Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago while I was not in the Chamber several gentlemen took a kindly interest in the bill to establish a Code of the Laws of the United States, which passed the House two years and four days ago, and made inquiry as to what had become of it during the last two years. I can not now go into this in much detail, but I can perhaps answer a few of the questions that were asked at that time. Let me preface my remarks by saying a word in respect to the history of what was done before the bill left here. Twenty-two months of hard work were put on the bill before it came into the House. We had the assistance and encouragement of more than 100 Members of this House who came in to see us and personally observed just what was being done. We followed the plans of the old, original Revised Statutes, taking advantage of that experience, and, we hope, considerably improved the work that was done, especially as we had more time in which to do it.

HE WANTED TO LOAN ANOTHER BILLION.

The bill passed the House May 16, 1921, unanimously. As far as I know, no other man who ever tried a lawsuit has ever made any objection to the bill. We sent the bill to every department, and some of them helped us considerably. For example, the War Department made a very careful research of the bill as it affected laws respecting the Army. They found two mistakes, which we were very glad to correct. I was glad to be able to say that we found that in their array of military law there were 27 omissions which we had supplied and which they inserted. Other departments took different views. The then Secretary of the Treasury, for example, found a "terrific blunder of such serious character" that he stated the bill could not possibly be any good. It seems a law had been passed authorizing an issue of $1,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds. The law was executed. That gentleman was greatly distressed to find that it was not included. He said the $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds were out, and it would be very embarrassing if they did not have anything to stand behind them; he was not quite sure whether the bonds could ever be paid. I suggested that since the law had been executed and was not in effect any more it would certainly be very embarrassing if we reenacted it, as we would if we included it in this bill, because he could then issue another $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds. I said I did not believe that was the best thing to do. I asked him who his attorney was, and he said that it was not practical to say. Gentlemen can judge from this of the kind of some of the help that we received.

NAVY THROWS OUT 71 SECTIONS ON THE "BEST OF OUR INFORMATION AND BELIEF."

The Secretary of the Navy called our attention to the fact that the rear admirals, the General Staff, the war council, and some other great men had very carefully considered certain legislation enacted by Congress and had reached the conclusion that it could not be put into effect, and not being putable, so to speak, "it evidently was not in effect," and therefore it would be necessary for us to drop those laws out of the bill. Not being gifted with any special authority we did not feel that we could drop them out, and we declined to do so. Let me show you a little something else about that Navy Department. They called attention to 71 sections which "to the best of their information and belief" were not any longer the law.

Just exactly what would you do, gentlemen, if you were a judge and a fellow laid a brief before you in which he stated that to the best of his information and belief such and such was the law? That is the way they started. What it really meant was that there were certain sections of our law they had entirely overlooked and did not have. We looked the stuff over very carefully. And there was one thing we thought was open to debate, and I think we took their advice. We had the very liberal assistance of gentlemen who wanted to leave out the law which was about a matter of precedence.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In a minute. There are certain sections they wanted to omit, because "to the best of their information and belief" they were not there. I think they are right about it, "to the best of their information and belief." [Laughter.] But I am referring to questions of precedence ordered omitted because the war council, the General Staff, and three or four rear admirals objected and ordered it not to be put in; high treason; ought to be court-martialed and shot. They called attention to the little headlines at the head of sections, which are no part of this law, specially provided, and we did not ask the gentlemen to do anything but take the law as it is now. Their taste did not approve our headlines, which are no part of the law, but satisfied the committee. So we did not change them. That introduced into this matter from the beginning a misunderstanding, very unfortunate, and we were compelled to overrule many suggestions, because we could not omit the law on their "information and belief." They became indignant and are so still. They demanded that we omit the law, change our section headlines, and omit 71 sections on their information and belief. We declined, and for that reason, and that alone, the Judge Advocate Generals and rear admirals of the second nine have kept up a continuous and baseless attack upon this bill, and you will see by their letters of May 25, 1920, and March 1, 1921, they demanded this omission because the General Staff and the rear admirals of the second nine had decided that your laws could not be put in effect, and they would therefore beat the bill, because we published the law as you made it, about who should go into dinner first, and hence these tears from the naval lawyers and rear admirals of the second nine.

Nevertheless, these very gentlemen, who know less of the law than any similar force in any department, have registered more alleged criticisms than probably all the rest put together. Hon. James R. Mann once remarked to me that there was more incompetence in the Department of the Navy than in any other in Washington. You wonder why such presumption should go with such ignorance, but I will show you. Perhaps the greatest difficulty that the revisers have had has been avoiding the malice of people who insisted that we should leave out the law or should put in something that had long since ceased to be the law. The most egregious and unpardonable offender has been the Department of the Navy.

When the Committee on Revision began this work and got it under way, they invited the assistance and cooperation of the legal staff of every department and bureau. Some of them were very prompt and helpful. The War Department made a thorough and careful examination of our work, comparing it with their aggregation of the laws of the Army. They found two mistakes, which we gladly corrected. They also found 27 sections of the military law that they did not have in their compilation and promptly utilized them, giving us credit for them. But witness the Department of the Navy. In response to the committee's letter the Secretary of the Navy at that time, on May 25, 1920, wrote the chairman of the committee that he had found many sections of the naval law of which he had never heard. He evidently had no intelligent compilation of the laws of his department with which to compare ours, but he promptly announced all the law he did not know was not there.

He said on May 25, 1920:

> The department has noted a large number of sections which to the best of its information and belief are no longer in force. * * *
> The following sections in said compilation have been noted as not in force March 4, 1919, and should be omitted therefrom: 2444, 2448, 2449, 2460, 2463, 2465, 2486, 2489, 2512, 2513, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2526, 2527, 2531, 2534, 2542, 2544, 2546, 2551, 2555, 2556, 2563, 2576, 2577, 2582, 2587, 2589, 2590, 2598, 2609, 2610, 2614, 2617, 2618, 2626, 2633, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2644, 2653, 2654, 2659, 2660, 2663, 2664, 2679, 2718, 2719, 2721, 2743, 2744, 2749, 2758, 2759, 2760, 2764, 2767, 2772, 2773, 2775, 2784, 2815, 2899, 2900, 2915, 3019, and 3023.

You will note at once the difference between the intelligent law department the Army then had and the gentlemen who had never tried a lawsuit who purported to be lawyers for the Navy. They actually expect people to give consideration to the criticisms of men who undertake to write a law brief beginning "to the best of its information and belief" this is not the law. That there should be anybody in the world so supremely ignorant as to ask a committee to accept such a statement on information and belief as of any value is almost beyond imagination. We knew, of course, then that there was nobody down there who could be of any assistance to us, and we have never had any reason to change our minds since May 25, 1920.

NAVY SAYS CAN'T USE THE LAW CONGRESS MADE AND CODIFIER MUST OMIT IT.

But that was mild. Turn to the last page of the letter of May 25, 1920, which reads as follows:

> Section 2757 demotes rear admirals instead of promoting brigadier generals, as was intended by section 3 of the act of October 6, 1917. Further, so much of said act as provides that brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the War and Navy Departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that all reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half of the grade should be omitted. The provision of section 1446, Revised Statutes, ranking commodores with brigadier generals is still in force and should be included in this section.

The gentleman gravely states that the law embodied in section 2757 "is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the War and Navy Departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that all reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half of the grade should be omitted." We, of course, explained to them that we had no place in our plan that permitted us to omit any law. Of course you realize, gentlemen, that a man must be either extremely ignorant or wholly lacking in personal integrity to ask a committee to omit the law, but what shall we say of a man who, after being thoroughly informed of the situation, came back a year later on March 1, 1921, and repeated and again urged that we should omit that law, the letter reading as follows:

The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the war council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect, and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject; whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect, and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

As a matter of fact, gentlemen, you see at a glance why it is that the Navy Department has accumulated more alleged errors than anybody else, or than all the rest, probably. They were determined that we should omit the law, and we incurred their rancor and vicious opposition from that moment till now because we would not omit the law.

NAVY INSISTS CAN'T ADMINISTER NAVY IF LAW ON SEATS AT DINNER BE PUBLISHED.

If it were a matter of any importance it would be easy to understand, but as you glance at the letter of May 25, 1920, you will see that it is nothing at all but a little matter of social prestige, of what they call "precedence"—a quarrel as to whether a brigadier general or a rear admiral of the lower grade shall go in to dinner first—and, gentlemen, as astounding as you may consider it, they actually tell us that "it has been impossible to put it into operation"; and later they tell us that they could not administer the Navy unless we leave it out.

Kitchener of Khartoum once told me that with a commissioner from France and one from Germany, he representing Great Britain, he took part in investigating some points on the African coast line, each having a ship of his own. They went ashore in one boat every day, and the other two gentlemen quarreled constantly over a point of precedence as to which of them should go ashore first, until finally one day one of them fell into the water during the quarrel; and afterwards they went in three boats. An immense percentage of the obstacles that have been so viciously thrust in the way of this great code has been because the Navy did not want a rear admiral of the second nine to go in to dinner alongside a brigadier general. I have too much respect for the Government of the United States to state in full my views of such conduct; but you will see at once, gentlemen, that anything coming from the Navy must be discounted at least 99 per cent.

When House bill 9389 passed the House in December, 1920, they went into spasms because we did not omit the law, rushed down and told the Senate committee that they could not administer the Navy if this code went into effect, and began piling up an array of infinitesimal and contemptible criticisms. For example, in their first essay of May 25, 1920, they criticized section 2437 of House bill 9389, which is now section 2438 of House bill 12. We were worrying a bit over that and had about decided to make a slight change, and were glad to have their correction and made it. The first section, of course, in the Navy had their exact approval, which was just the way they wanted it; but when they found we had not omitted the rest they began by starting in again with another criticism of that section. Either they were ignorant when they made the first one or they were malicious when they attacked it again, and they were both. Let us proceed another step in reviewing their letter of May 25, 1920, showing the basis of the work which is still hurling bricks at this committee.

NAVY REQUIRES HEADLINES IN CODE BILL BE CHANGED.

We asked the Department of the Navy, as we did the others, to compare our compilation of their laws with their own and to tell us what, if any, we had omitted and what dead law we had inserted. They evidently did not know that that was all they could do, and they proceeded to make 103 criticisms of the wording of the headlines to the various sections in the code. This bill especially provides that the headlines are no part of the law. They were simply matters of taste and were written by the chairman and the revisers and the committee. Naturally, we felt that our taste was sufficient, and we did not ask for their criticisms; but, instead of proceeding to look up the law, they stated that "to the best of their information and belief," and gave full rein to their literary tastes and interests, changing the heading of one section from "Dentists' qualifications" to "Qualifications for appointment to Dental Corps"; changing "Enlisted strength" to "Enlisted strength defined," and so on ad infinitum. The committee, with their strenuous and extensive duties, found themselves unable to give consideration to the literary tastes of gentlemen who knew no law. By the time they had read our disposition of their original criticisms, some of which were adopted, the alleged lawyers from the Navy were far beyond control, and since then, over and over again, they have multiplied and dignified every possibility to make a suggestion into some criticism. One of the greatest mistakes of this Government is having Judge Advocates General of the Navy who never studied law. No man who never studied law should be permitted to occupy such a position.

REAR ADMIRAL OF SECOND NINE'S DINNER SEAT AT STAKE.

The whole difficulty has been because some Judge Advocate General, like the present one, a rear admiral, is worried about where he will sit at dinner when a brigadier general comes in, and has kept the gentlemen doing the work on the jump to find more and more imaginary objections.

The Assistant Secretary of the Navy recently said in testifying before a Senate committee that they had three Judge Advocates General in St. Elizabeths Hospital. I am going to be perfectly frank and say that from the best of our observation of the Judge Advocates General during this great work, every one of them ought to be in St. Elizabeths, and we suggest that as an improvement in the Navy legal department.

A few months ago for the first time we finally got somebody in the Navy to give us the name of some lawyer that was working at it, and they did, two very pleasant gentlemen, neither of whom ever tried a lawsuit. The chairman, after a conference with them, found 41 things they suggested, most of which did not amount to anything, and conceded their being placed in the book as perfecting amendments and so wrote the chairman of the Senate committee and suggested that when he brought the bill in he might make those amendments. At that time they had brought with them about 90 others and it was absolutely agreed between the gentlemen and myself in my office that practically all of them were not worthy of consideration and should be eliminated from the question. After returning to the Judge Advocate General and rear admiral of the lower half of the grade, whose place at dinner was at stake, they repeated the 41 that we had already agreed to put in and turned up with 96 more alleged criticisms, most of which they had already conceded to be of no value. Gentlemen of the House, this was done simply because we would not let them compel us to omit the laws of the land from the code of its laws, and not one of those objections was made in good faith, all just a malicious effort to make trouble.

WHY AREN'T ALLEGED ERRORS CORRECTED, IF ANY?

The committee has been told by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision that the Navy had some objections. Well, why does he not state them like I have? Why does he not say they are right? He has received from the House committee a full and clear analysis of even these 96, most of which were supremely silly. His committee has been drawing $6,800 a year for revision of the laws. Why should he not sit down and go to work, and if 96 of them are right say so and amend the bill? That is what he is appointed for. The House committee gave 22 months to this work. Is there some society gentleman whose fingers must not be stained with a few minutes' honest toil? If there are some objections that are good, he ought to be just as able as the House committee to find them, and he is just as much at liberty to move their insertion. We will be glad to have the arguments in favor of why the Navy thinks the law should be omitted and why we should follow the "best of its information and belief." If there are no arguments in favor of that view, let us hear no more about it and let us take up something serious and finish this great bill, which has cost so much time and so much honest effort and which is so enthusiastically indorsed by members of the Cabinet, by solicitors of the departments, by United States judges, by great authors of the law, and by eminent attorneys.

Mr. Speaker, continuing my remarks with regard to the code, I depicted somewhat its history and condition up to date. We kept working on it in the House for 22 months. When it went over to the Senate it was just 22 months from that time until the close of this present session. In other words, the other people had the same time that we had. But they have had this great advantage that an immense amount of work had been done which would be wholly unnecessary to do again, and they could put in their time on such parts as they desired. For that reason there never was any reason why it could not be done. Now, the question arises, why has it not been done, and why have they never had a meeting until yesterday? I think I stated before that after that bill left us everybody in the world who had a real objection to make in good faith had made it. I repeat that in my judgment any objections made after a year from May 16, 1921, were made from some motive other than a desire to make a good bill or to have one. I am going further to suggest that every suggestion since a year after it was passed here was made for some ulterior motive, unless they have done what the Senate did in 1874, and, as I have said, they have never made any objection I know of personally except one. Every department, I think, except one has withdrawn its criticisms. There are none that have not been gone over thoroughly and accepted if correct. In 1874 Roscoe Conkling was chairman of the revision of the laws committee of the Senate, and Matt Carpenter and some of the ablest lawyers who ever lived were members of that committee, and after spending a month or so looking at it Mr. Conkling took the floor and in 40 minutes procured a unanimous approval. They were asked if they did not think there might be some mistakes in it. Conkling and Carpenter replied in effect that they supposed there might be, but there could not be any mistakes in it half as important as not to have the bill, and so the bill was passed in 40 minutes. I take it these distinguished gentlemen have reached the conclusion they will do the same thing, and possibly for that reason have not devoted any time until yesterday, and have concluded they would adopt that policy.

I feel the more assured of this because of the fact that the chairman of the other committee had so often informed me and others that he had decided to report the bill favorably. He had told me that one Member was very much opposed to the bill and would fight it.

ERNST SAID WOULD REPORT CODE FAVORABLY.

When Congress was last in session, prior to the recent election, I met him, and he voluntarily informed me that he had smoothed out all the difficulties and he was now prepared to report the code bill favorably, and he would do so, and that it would pass, so informing others, too. In the Kansas City Kansan of September 28 last, United States Senator ARTHUR CAPPER said:

The code bill, of which LITTLE is the author, is virtually sure of passage at the next session. Senator ERNST, chairman of the Senate Revision Committee, told me just before I left Washington that he would make a favorable report on the measure, which he highly commended.

As far as I know, no department has now any criticisms to offer with regard to the bill, except the Navy Department, which will always object until we omit some of the law that they and the General Staff decided could not be enforced. If there are any remaining criticisms any lawyer with any qualifications whatever can, in a few days, prepare and insert in the bill the amendments necessary. All it needs is a little ordinary sense, some reasonable knowledge of the law, and some industry, of which there was plenty in the House for 22 months to the general knowledge of most of the House Members. Of course, it is quite possible that errors may still be discovered occasionally. More than 300 were discovered in the old Revised Statutes of 1874, after they had been in print for several years, including some that the bill (H. R. 12) people have discovered and corrected. The great point is to get an assembly of the laws so that people can use it. What if there are a few mistakes in 2,000,000 words? Conscientious men will endeavor to find them and finish the work. I think it best that I shall now take advantage of my leave to extend and present here a fairly full discussion of the attitude of the Navy Department toward this bill, and the reasons, and make some reference to the bill (H. R. 9389) which was the code bill that passed the Sixty-sixth Congress and received four months' careful review before it was introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress as the bill H. R. 12.

On February 27, 1920, the committee chairman wrote the Secretary of the Navy that the committee had now the galley proofs of all the Navy part of the codification and would be glad to have his department look it over, the Secretary replying that they would be glad to do so, and on March 9, 1920, the Secretary was sent a preliminary copy of the bill, including the part with regard to the Navy. On May 12 the Secretary replied that it was received and had been referred to the office of the Judge Advocate General, adding:

I am advised, however, that the proper consideration of this matter is a very tedious and onerous task, requiring considerable time for its consummation.

On May 14 the chairman wrote that the War Department had received similar material about that department and had already compared it with their own collections of military and departmental law and returned it. (I may say right here that the War Department discovered two mistakes at that time.) The chairman said:

The task is greatly simplified as they simply take their collection and mine and ascertain what sections they have that I have not in the bill, and vice versa.

On May 25, 1920, the Secretary of the Navy returned his views and the views of his Judge Advocate General's Department, and said that—

The department has noted a large number of sections which, to the best of its information and belief, are no longer in force.

And added:

That lack of time and personnel qualified precludes the possibility of undertaking a further review at this time.

He further said:

The following sections have been noted as not in force on March 4, 1919, and should be omitted.

Then he just offhand points to 71 sections that he tells the committee have no place in the code. As the committee had been working, then, for nearly a year on it, it seemed better that he give in detail his reasons for omitting 71 sections, but he did not.

Then he proceeds to speak in some detail of 147 sections. He devotes a good deal of his time to suggesting changes in the titles of the sections. We had asked the Secretary to suggest any omissions or mistakes in the law. The section headings are no part of the law and nobody asked his views about those titles and nobody wanted his views. The committee felt quite competent to write its own headlines, and he could have been of some service if he had devoted his time to the matter that was submitted to him for his suggestions.

As to the rest of the views he presented, they are so juvenile in nature as to absolutely demonstrate the correctness of his statement in that letter that—

A lack of time and personnel qualified for the task, which could be detailed for such work, precludes the possibility of undertaking a further review at this time.

JOCK LOST ASHORE.

Let me add that after two years and seven months I am now prepared to state that his original statement to that effect was thoroughly well founded, and I shall now indorse it by saying a lack of lawyers who ever tried a lawsuit in his department has been so marked that he has never been of any serious assistance. The newspapers announced yesterday that Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, said that three of his judge advocates were now at St. Elizabeths. I will frankly say that the whole outfit of judge advocates in the Navy ought to be in St. Elizabeths, and I will cheerfully support a bill to appropriate money to take care of them till they can be returned to a normal mental condition.

The same paper stated that the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, Rear Admiral of the Second Nine Latimer, testified that a marine had died at Parris Island before finally accepted in the Marine Corps, and that the department could find no law or method of getting rid of the corpse. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy should be a lawyer, which he is not, and much of the difficulty that has been made by that department has been made by judge advocates who were neither lawyers in peace nor sailors in war and never served under fire. The law should provide that a judge advocate general should be a lawyer of long experience and ability, and these difficulties the committee has run into have made this entirely obvious.

For example, suggesting changes in little headings, which are of no legal importance and no part of their duty, they say that the title "Extension of term of enlisted men" should read "Extension of term of enlistment" and that the title "Limitation of total number of clerks' should read "Limitation of total number of pay clerks," and that the title "Inconsistent laws relating to Dental Corps repealed" should read "Prior inconsistent laws relating to Dental Corps repealed." The prodigious talents of the lawyers of the department conceived evidently the idea that the words "prior laws" should be inserted for fear that without that some subsequent legislation would be wrecked, ruined, repealed, and destroyed. While we have long since learned that the Navy Department knows no law, we did suppose that they could furnish us some common sense. And so they continue almost indefinitely with silly suggestions which require just as much time to be considered by the hard-working force of the committee as if they were drawn with ordinary intelligence.

The Judge Advocate General's Department, over the signature of the Secretary of the Navy, rose to the highest and loftiest flight in their final suggestions of May 25, 1920, when they said:

Section 2757 demotes rear admirals instead of promoting brigadier generals, as was intended by section 3 of the act of October 6, 1917; further, so much of said act as provides that brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade is defective and it has been impossible to put it into operation, for which reason the departments have requested its repeal. It is the opinion of the department, therefore, that the reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals in the lower half of the grade should be omitted.

LAW BY GENERAL STAFF.

In his letter of March 1, 1921, Secretary Daniels said:

The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the War Council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject. Whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

Probably in the entire history of this country no member of the Cabinet before ever wrote such a remarkable and astounding letter. The Secretary sympathetically informs us that after a conference of "experts" from the War and Navy Departments, "including the General Staff and the War Council," actually held to decide whether the laws made by Congress should be enforced, they decided that they would not pay any attention to the law, and adds:

Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion * * *; whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

NULLIFICATION BY NAVY EXPERTS.

What was this that challenged the attention of both departments and all their experts? Just simply a question of how brigadier generals and rear admirals of the second nine should go into dinner. There was not another thing involved, but this distinguished gentleman had stepped into the breach and saved the country from ruin by carefully considering it and announcing that it was not necessary to repeal it, but that they would just drop it out. This was simply a nullification, and every man engaged in it should have been court-martialed and dismissed in disgrace, and the Secretary who encouraged it should have been impeached, and yet, because the committee declined to give any serious attention to such rot, for three years the work of the committee has been hamstrung, handicapped, and subjected to continual assaults by people who had no qualifications to criticize, but who time and time again after finishing up their criticisms began another series.

The committee undertook to assemble and codify the laws made by Congress without changing them. In his first letter the Secretary of the Navy demanded that we nullify and drop out the law as above shown, and gravely said that it was defective and must be left out. The committee, of course, pointed out that we were not endeavoring to repeal any laws or omit any laws, but we worked on the theory that Congress knew all the laws it wanted and all we were doing was to get them together. All the difficulties that have arisen since then about the Navy have sprung from the declination of the committee to change the laws Congress made in order to please the department.

H. R. 9389.

On December 20, 1920, the bill (H. R. 9389) to make a code of the laws unanimously passed the House of Representatives and went to the Senate, which adjourned on the following March 4. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws was sick and called to Florida and was not able to get the bill before the Senate, though he frequently told me he would call it up and ask for its passage just as Senator Conkling and his committee did in 1874 with the Revised Statutes. A few days before the bill passed one of the force in the Navy Department that had been doing the work on it telephoned the House committee inquiring for a copy and said he wanted to see if we had followed his suggestions. As most of his suggestions were crude, puerile, and foolish, we had not followed all of them and he flew into a rage and immediately began a vicious assault upon the bill, which has been continuously maintained by his successors. He was mad because we did not drop out the law about the brigadier generals and rear admirals, which is a matter of no importance whatever, just a question of precedence as to who should go into dinner first. He then began to pour in every objection he could conceive or think of to the bill, sending it to the Senate committee, which referred it to the House committee, which gave it immediate and careful attention. Every suggestion which was worthy of serious consideration, that was worthy of being approved, was promptly approved, and the House committee sent to the Senate committee reams of matter, thoroughly explaining everything else, and the poor fellow dropped dead one day and others succeeded him. Before dying he had gone down to the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army and had induced another poor fellow down there to get up and send in a ridiculous set of criticisms without any foundation whatever, a man without any legal experience.

Attention was called to the absurdity of these, and Secretary Baker withdrew those objections and wrote the chairman of the House committee very highly indorsing the whole bill and urging its passage.

The Senate adjourned without getting time to take the matter up. When this gentleman and anybody he could stir up began his efforts to compel us to omit the law about who should go in to dinner first in the Army and Navy, the House committee began a four months' careful analysis of all the criticism that was made, and a very thorough one, and when the Sixty-seventh Congress convened the thoroughly revised revision was placed before the House after a review of four months, having the benefit of all the criticisms from all the departments that were offered. Some of them were very good and useful. Probably 90 per cent of them were of no force or value. I have yet to learn of any lawyer that ever tried a lawsuit that has made any real criticism of the bill, though there have been some very excellent suggestions.

WANTED $1,000,000,000 MORE.

The absurdity of them is indicated by a letter, for example, that the committee received from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Houston. The Secretary said that the bill H. R. 9389 had omitted certain authority for the issuance of certain Liberty bonds. He said sadly:

It is entirely omitted—

And added—

In view of the $2,000,000,000, or thereabouts, of outstanding bonds of the first Liberty loan, a repeal of the statutory authority under which they were issued would be unfortunate and embarrassing.

The committee wrote him that in view of the fact that all the bonds authorized by law had been issued, and that law had been fully executed, it would be very unfortunate and embarrassing if the law should be reenacted, which is what the code would do, because if it were the law on the date the code should go into effect, and it would be if reenacted, the Secretary of the Treasury could issue another $2,000,000,000 of bonds, which we declined to assist him in doing. Furthermore, it was suggested to him that even if the law were repealed that it was executed and that would not affect the validity of $2,000,000,000 of bonds. Of course, it is a suggestion that no lawyer could possibly make and that nobody with any sense would make, and of course that precipitated a few onslaughts from some people, and with such silly stuff as that we have had to contend for three years.

GEOLOGICAL LAW.

Another excellent illustration of the vicious and silly character of the criticisms which we had to examine carefully, just as if somebody fit to make suggestions had made them, came from the Geological Survey of the Interior Department. In the last days of the Wilson administration somebody in the department sent word around to see what flaws could be picked in the new code bill. The "brilliant and learned scholarly lawyer" at the head of the Geological Survey, who probably was never in a law office in his life, wrote that the geology laws seemed to be in, though not as well arranged as they would have been by his bureau, but that section 10742 did not meet with his approval and if permitted to stand would ruin the whole work. He said section 10742 changed the whole bill and made it a jumble of confused absurdities without form and void and simply a bundle of nonsense. He was informed that that section was prepared in 1874 by Luke Poland, Benjamin F. Butler, James Lawrence, of Ohio, George F. Hoar, and other great lawyers, and approved by Roscoe Conkling, Matt Carpenter, and other great lawyers; that it had stood unchallenged since 1874 as the governing section of the Revised Statutes, the greatest law book the world ever saw; and that our committee had copied it exactly on the theory that with such famous names authorizing it and its approval for nearly half a century, it would be all right. We thanked him for his scholarly advice and informed him but for his wise prudence and caution we would have been involved in what was evidently a total wreck, and that we had sons studying law and we would like to know where he acquired his profound and erudite legal scholarship; but we have never had an answer. We asked Secretary Houston who was his legal adviser, but he said it was not practicable to say. In this statement I think he was correct.

On May 16, 1921, the bill went to the Senate committee, and 20 months have elapsed and it has never had a meeting. Of course, long since every man who in good faith had any criticisms to make has made them. On May 26, 1922, a year after the bill passed the House the last time, the chairman of the House committee wrote the chairman of the Senate committee:

All those who in good faith wish to make suggestions have long since had ample time in which to do so.

Since then nobody who in good faith wished to assist in making good laws has offered any criticism. The bill had then been before the country over a year as it now stands, and anything offered since that date was, of course, done just to annoy and necessarily was of a trivial nature and a matter of no importance.

ASKED OPINION OF ALL BUREAUS.

In the spring of 1922, nearly a year ago, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, through its chairman, entered into conversation and correspondence with all the departments. Most of them had long since declined to offer any suggestions of correction. A few departments had some on file with the Senate committee, though not many. After the chairman of the House committee had conferred with the attorneys and solicitors of those departments an agreement was entered into as to just what changes, none of them important, should be made, and the department and the committee joined in suggesting to the Senate committee that those changes be made. A bill has just been introduced in the House to make the 66 perfecting amendments to the code on which the departments and the committee agreed, including finally those made by agreement with the Navy's attorneys, and there was no more work for the Senate committee to go over, everything being fully placed before them. Since that time the Navy presented what they call 137 criticisms, 41 of which were fully settled upon and agreed to by the Navy lawyers and the committee, and they are inserted in the corrections suggested to the Senate committee. Yet just for purposes evidently of confusion they include them in the 137. Of the remaining 96, it had been absolutely agreed between the committee and the representatives of the Navy that practically all should be discarded and not utilized because they were of no value, yet they come back repeating them. The balance were just an endeavor to create an array of pretended suggestions and criticisms in order to make the work seem more extended and difficult. The Navy Department is the only one that has permitted itself to stoop to such conduct. None of those criticisms made since May last is entitled to any consideration whatever, because they were not made in good faith, but simply to create an appearance of confusion and criticism. This bill went before the country in December, 1920, and again in May, 1921. Long since every man who was entitled to be heard has made what suggestions he has to make and there is no reason why anything made in recent months should be given any time whatever.

The Navy, I believe, has 96 criticisms of 96 sections which the other committee should examine. The House committee has 96 answers thereto. All that is needed is that the attacks and explanations and answers be read and a decision thereon be reached, and amendments be made if needed. That is what legislators on committees are for. Let them work a little, about 10 minutes; a total of 960 minutes will be enough to reach conclusions. If they make 96 amendments it will require about five minutes each to write out the amendments. Three days of good work will dispose of all the Navy has said, at the most. We worked 22 months.

INDORSEMENTS.

FEDERAL BENCH ADMIRES THE CODE.

Here is a letter I received from a judge in Arkansas:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS,
Little Rock, Ark., March 24, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE:

* * * * * * *

I am going over your act as I find time, but confining myself solely to the title of the judiciary. I can not express my admiration for this work. People, especially the bench and bar, owe you a debt of gratitude which can never be repaid. How you found time with your other congressional duties to do this work I am unable to understand. I have read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your remarks when you presented your report on the act, and also the remarks made by other Members of the House, which show that your work is being appreciated by the Members who have examined it. You are entirely too modest in claiming credit for your work.

I hope that some day in the near future I may have the pleasure of meeting you in person, that I may express to you my admiration for this work.

With very highest regards, I am,
Yours sincerely,

JACOB TRIEBER,
United States District Judge.

ATTORNEY GENERAL FINDS CODE PERFECT.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1921.

Hon. JOSIAH O. WOLCOTT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR:

* * * * * * *

In reply I beg to advise you that the only portions of this bill submitted to this department were section 965 to section 1612, relating to the judiciary, and section 503 to section 551, relating to the Department of Justice.

So far as such portion of the bill is concerned there is no criticism to offer on behalf of this department.

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., August 10, 1921.

Hon. E. C. LITTLE,
Chairman Committee on Revision of Laws,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 1, sending a copy of H. R. 12, to establish a code of laws of the United States, and asking me to look over it and advise you of any views I may have in regard to it.

The sections which seem to relate in any way to the criminal law or criminal procedure have been carefully examined, and, so far as it is possible to discover from such an examination, no errors or omissions have been noted.

Respectfully,

W. C. HERRON, Attorney
(For the Attorney General).

SECRETARY BAKER STRONGLY INDORSES CODE.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 21, 1921.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: I have received your letter of January 19 and am delighted to have the marked copies of committee reports which you inclosed. Senator Carpenter's speech, to which you direct my attention, of course correctly states the answer to the difficulty always raised in the enactment of a great piece of codifying legislation. If we wait until perfection is achieved and the possibility of error removed, we never get the code. In the meantime practicing lawyers, judges, and district attorneys all over the United States are making vastly many more errors by reason of the fact that they have to rely upon an uncodified mass of legislative enactment, through which it is impossible, even with the greatest industry, to trace out the existing state of law.

Cordially yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

SOLICITOR OF INTERIOR SAYS CODE SHOULD PASS WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, April 7, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
Committee on Revision of Laws,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant requesting my views in relation to H. R. 12. This proposed bill has been before the department for some time, and I think with very few exceptions no objection has been made thereto.

As I understand the proposed legislation, it is merely a compilation of the present existing laws and does not purport to contain new legislation. I have not gone over the matter with the idea of suggesting corrections for the reason that in my opinion it is very advisable that the present laws be consolidated and brought into some one volume where they will be easy of access. As it is at the present time, many enactments of Congress are contained in different volumes and, as you appreciate, may sometimes be very easily overlooked. I am of the opinion that if Congress will enact the proposed bill and thus get into a workable condition the present existing laws, that the future Congresses can then make such amendments as may be deemed proper in a much more satisfactory manner.

I trust you will pardon a few personal observations in relation to this character of legislation. It happened to be my privilege to be chairman of the legislative committee of Montana on two different occasions when the question of codification, consolidation, and revision of the then existing laws was before the legislative assembly. I found that it was impractical and almost impossible to undertake to make amendments and to get the legislative assembly to approve them, and in both instances our committee recommended, and the legislative assembly pursued, this course and adopted the report of the committee appointed to compile the existing laws without amendments, leaving to the succeeding legislative assemblies the corrections that might seem best. This method we found so satisfactory that at the last work of the assembly in compiling the laws of Montana we adopted the same course. For these reasons I am strongly of the opinion that H. R. 12 should be passed without any amendment other than those which the committee itself might report, and thus get into some practicable workable shape the present existing laws covering the several matters of public concern. Believing as I do, I am not making any suggestions of proposed amendments and hope and trust that this legislation will pass at an early date, as it will, in my judgment, be of incalculable value to all concerned.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN S. BOOTH, Solicitor.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 18, 1922.

Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ERNST:

* * * * * * *

In a conference between Colonel LITTLE and the solicitor of the department yesterday the department's report to you of December 16 last was carefully gone over, resulting in Colonel LITTLE's concurrence in my suggestions with reference to the following sections of the bill: 837, 4866, 5055, 5051, 5061, 5249, 5258, 5282, 5299, 5300, 5320, 6677, 7187, 7323, 7326, 8868, 9489, 9497, 10326, and 3344.

I understand that Colonel LITTLE will take up with you the necessary action to effect the changes in the above-stated sections suggested by the department.

The remaining sections of the bill upon which I reported to you may stand as they appear in the bill.

The department realizes very keenly the enormous task involved in the preparation of this bill, and the only wonder is that it is so generally free from errors and omissions. It is also realized, as Colonel LITTLE suggests, that it is practically impossible to enact a bill of this kind which will be perfect in every respect. That result seems never to have been accomplished in any revision of the laws which has ever yet been undertaken. It seems to me that it is better to have a consolidation of the laws with a few errors which can be corrected by supplemental legislation when discovered than to delay the consolidation indefinitely, striving for perfection which it is more than probable never could be attained.

Very respectfully,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 27, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 23, 1923, in which you state that in a communication dated November 22, 1922, to which no written reply has been received, you advised the department of the attitude of the House Committee on Revision of the Laws regarding certain suggestions which the department had made concerning sections 3214, 3221, and 3222 of bill H. R. 12, and that you understood that the department concurred in the view of the committee. You add that Senator ERNST, chairman of the Senate Committee on Revisions of the Laws, has informed you of the receipt from the department of a communication criticizing sections 3221 and 3222 of the bill, and inclose a statement of the law as understood by your committee, concerning which you desire the department's comments.

I beg to inform you that in response to a communication dated November 10, 1922, from Senator ERNST, requesting that the department give to the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws the benefit of any suggestions it might desire to make concerning bill H. R. 12, the department on December 7, 1922, stated that at the time bill H. R. 9389 was receiving the consideration of the House committee a memorandum had been prepared in response to a request from you containing brief comments on certain sections of the bill. A copy of the memorandum was transmitted to Senator ERNST for the information of the Senate committee, and he was advised that the department at that time had no additional suggestions to offer concerning the sections covered by that memorandum.

It is observed that the title of H. R. 12 is "A bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919." At the time the department's memorandum was prepared it was assumed that it was within the scope of the work of your committee in revising the laws of the United States to make all the changes suggested in the memorandum. In any event it was thought desirable to give your committee the benefit of such suggestions as occurred to the department with respect to the sections covered by the memorandum. The question, however, whether the scope of the work of the committee in revising the laws of the United States would permit the adoption of the suggestions which the department made concerning sections 3221 and 3222 of the bill (none was made respecting section 3214) is obviously a matter for determination by the committee, concerning which I would not feel free to express an opinion.

I have noted your statement that after the bill becomes a law you intend to suggest to the department that an amendment be prepared for the purpose of correcting such inaccuracies as may appear.

I am, my dear Mr. LITTLE,

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

WIGMORE ON EVIDENCE FINDS CODE ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY.

JANUARY 15, 1923.

Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been very hopeful that the Senate would proceed to the prompt enactment of the new United States Code, passed by the House a year ago last April. During the past year I have used the copy of it in preparing a new edition of my Treatise on Evidence, and have been through every page of the work and find it entirely satisfactory.

For 20 months it has lain in the hands of your committee. Is there any reason that you care to give explaining the delay?

Very truly yours,

(Signed) JOHN H. WIGMORE.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, December 18, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE, M. C.,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE:

* * * * * * *

In the report of this office of December 12, 1922, to the Secretary of Labor in re H. R. 12, this office has stated to the Secretary that Senator ERNST may be advised that all the changes suggested by the report of this office of April 1, 1921, in re H. R. 9389 have been taken care of in H. R. 12, with the exception of a few, and as to these you have in a conference with a representative of this office recently stated that you would offer an amendement to the present bill to take care of these suggested changes, and that, therefore, there are no suggestions as to changes in H. R. 12 to be made to Senator ERNST.

Very truly yours,

THEODORE G. RISLEY, Solicitor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 12, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Recept is acknowledged of your letter of April 5, 1922, addressed to the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, requesting any suggestions which he may have to offer with respect to H. R. 12, which passed the House of Representatives on May 16, 1921.

The solicitor has been requested to review the codification in a detailed manner in order that you may have the benefit of any suggestions or criticisms which may be offered. You will understand that the revenue act of 1921, which was enacted subsequent to the passage by the House of Representatives of the bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919, made some very material changes in the assessment, collection, and refunding of taxes for prior years and the bringing of suits or other proceedings by or against taxpayers. In fact, the changes are so vital and far-reaching that many sections of your proposed code have been practically superseded. In view of the fact that the codification proposed attempts only to cover laws enacted prior to March 4, 1919, you may not be interested in the new and vital changes, but in the event it is your desire to make your codification more comprehensive, I should be pleased to render you any assistance which may be deemed advisable in connection therewith.

Sincerely,

D. H. BLAIR, Commissioner.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 8, 1921.

Hon. JOSIAH O. WOLCOTT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WOLCOTT: Replying to your letter of February 2, asking for any criticism I may care to make on the bill (H. R. 9389) to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919, which bill appears to have passed the House and is now in the Senate for consideration, I beg to state that some months ago a copy of the first 335 pages of the bill was received in this department and referred to the solicitor for examination. At that time a complete copy was requested, but it does not appear that it has been received.

The solicitor reports that a few slight errors have been found in the sections of the advance part relating to the Post Office Department, a list of which will be included in a report on the complete bill, if these errors are found in the bill as passed by the House.

A copy of the complete bill has again been requested, and as soon as it is received a prompt examination and report will be made on such sections as relate to the Postal Service and the Post Office Department.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
Chairman Committee on Revision of Laws,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: Referring to your telephonic inquiry of yesterday, I take pleasure in transmitting herewith a copy of a letter dated November 25, 1922, addressed to Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST, chairman of the Senate Committee on Revision of the Laws by the Postmaster General making certain suggestions respecting H. R. 12, a bill "to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919."

Sincerely yours,

H. J. DONNELLY, Acting Solicitor.

Hon. E. C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

DEAR MR. LITTLE: I am in receipt of your letter of May 20, 1920, inclosing copies of two letters received by you concerning your bill to codify the laws from justices of the Supreme Court. I thank you for sending me copies of the letters. I congratulate you upon the splendid work so far accomplished by you.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 29th ultimo and have just received a copy of your bill for the revision of the statutes of the United States. So far as opportunity has offered, I have examined it, and it seems to me that the work is well and thoroughly done. Thanking you for the favor, I am,

Very truly yours,

Hon. E. C. LITTLE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have received the calendar print of the Laws of the United States, and thank you very much for the same.

The amount of research and industry which you exhibit in your bill is wonderful.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH MCKENNA.

FEDERAL JUDGE EVANS, OF KENTUCKY.

LOUSVILLE, KY., January 9, 1923.

Hon. RICHARD P. ERNST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I regretted very much not seeing you again while we were in Washington, but circumstances did not seem to favor your plan of dropping in on us on your way to the Capitol the morning after I saw you. I regret that such was the case, but know how busy you are and how likely you are to be diverted from one thing to another under the necessity of the situation.

The one thing which I desire to bring to your attention was the effort now being made to revise the statutes of the United States and to have the code of laws published as promptly as possible. I wanted to talk to you about this because of its importance to the United States courts and especially to the judges. I need not remind you of the enormous size and number of volumes which have accumulated since the last revision and the trouble the courts have in looking through all of them for possible enactments. It is because of this situation that I venture to bring this matter to your attention and to ask, if it be possible, that you will facilitate the enactment of proper laws. My attention has been directed to you in the matter because I saw in the newspapers that one of your committees was the one which had the matter under consideration for action.

Hoping that you are well, and that the new year will bring you blessings, I am Very cordially yours, WALTER EVANS.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 26, 1921.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LITTLE: During the recent vacation I took occasion to examine very carefully your codification of the United States Statutes. I did this with a special interest as a lawyer and as a member of the Judiciary Committee of Congress. I want to say to you that I am very familiar with codification work, having done a lot of it myself. I have never seen it as well done as you did it. I believe you have rendered a very great service not only to the professional bar but to every man who wants to know what his rights and what his duties are under United States law, and I have the honor to subscribe myself

Your obedient servant,

JAMES W. HUSTED.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1921.

Col. EDWARD C. LITTLE, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: I have just taken the opportunity of looking through the new codification of the Federal laws, which is now pending before Congress and which, without doubt, will shortly be passed by both Houses and signed by the President.

I am astounded at the amount of work that has been involved in this great undertaking of revising, harmonizing, and systematizing the laws of our country. Without in any way reflecting upon the other members of the commission, I know that practically all of this work has been done by yourself. From my experience as a lawyer and a judge on the bench, I know it is impossible to praise too highly the great work you have done. It is the most important piece of legislation that has come before Congress in many a year, and I would rather go down to posterity as the author of this great work than to be known as the author of any bill that has passed Congress in the last five years.

Allow me to congratulate you on the magnificent work you have so well accomplished.

Very truly yours, PHIL D. SWING.

PRESIDENT DAVIS, OF AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION.

STETSON, JENNINGS & RUSSELL,
New York, January 31, 1923.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLE: Your letter of January 10 reached my office while I was absent attending the midwinter meeting of the executive committee of the American Bar Association. Since my return a few days ago I have been hoping that I might have time to make the critical inspection of the bill which you suggest, but with the pressure of other matters it is quite clear that I shall not be able to do so in time to make my views of any service to you during the present session of Congress. There can be no question on the part of anyone that such a recodification is urgently necessary, and it will be a great pity if Congress adjourns without putting its stamp of approval upon the work. I know, of course, how difficult it is to get attention for such matters in the closing days of a busy session; but, after all, a bill of this character is distinctly a work for committees rather than for either House as a whole, and the general body, I should think, would be willing to adopt with a minimum of discussion a bill which comes to it with a favorable report.

Believe me, very sincerely yours, JOHN W. DAVIS.

LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States have been patient and long-suffering in dealing with the beverage liquor traffic. They have tried every kind of regulation, taxation, restriction, local option, and the other known methods of dealing with this well-recognized evil. The history of the adoption of national prohibition is one of the finest illustrations of the development by a self-governing people of methods of control over appetite and greed.

The Colonies from the earliest days tried in vain to solve the problem. From 1633, when the Colony of Massachusetts, after declaring that many are "distempering themselves with drinke," ordered that the governor's permit be necessary to sell liquor, for over a century there were few years in which laws and ordinances were not passed, tried for a time, and repealed that others might be passed, in the attempt to control that which never has been controllable—the liquor traffic. In 1654 the preamble of one of these early liquor laws sets forth that "notwithstanding the great care this court hath had and the laws made to suppress that swinish sin of drunkenness, yet persons addicted to the vice find out ways to deceive the law." Various forms of the license systems were tried, but none curbed the growing evil.

THE WHISKY REBELLION.

The Revolutionary War brought forth an edict much like the order forbidding the sale of intoxicants to men in uniform during the recent World War, for in Cambridge General Washington issued orders to the officers of the Continental Army to prevent so far as possible American soldiers from frequenting tippling houses. The Continental Congress on September 20, 1776, prohibited the sale of all kinds of liquors to soldiers by sutlers. Even then liquor was formally and officially recognized as an enemy to the Republic and its use a treason to the State.

Taxes and imposts upon distilled liquors, proposed by Hamilton, were adopted by Congress in 1791, the anticipated revenue being estimated by Hamilton at $826,000 annually. Amendment of this act to impose the tax upon distilleries resulted in the whisky rebellion of 1793, when 13,000 soldiers had to be called out and $1,500,000—a sum larger than the three years' receipts from the liquor taxes—expended by the new Nation to curb the first open and avowed attempt to substitute the rule of advocates of personal liberty and liquor for the rule of the majority.

The fact that the action of the State of Pennsylvania in calling into question the authority of the Federal Government to thus control the liquor traffic encouraged the leaders of this insurrection is suggestive to-day, when new rebellions against the Constitution are being advocated by men who for appetite or profit would demolish orderly government.

THE GROCERY STORE FAILURE.

Aside from taverns and tippling shops, the forerunners of our saloons, liquors were for sale at the grocery stores of that day. Then, as now, impractical folk believed that sales of liquor in quantities at places not devoted wholly or principally to the liquor traffic would check the evil. The modern cry, "The saloon—never" is curiously reminiscent of the full and complete trial of the alternative grocery-store method of dealing with the liquor traffic. The failure of this method may be illustrated by the report of the judiciary committee of the Illinois Legislature, presented in 1839, when Abraham Lincoln was a member of the assembly, in which it was declared:

> Constituted, as the great majority of your committee is, of practicing lawyers from the various quarters of our State, we feel bound to add our testimony to the mass of evidence already given on the subject. In a large majority of the violations of the criminal law which have come under our observation in the courts of the State the original cause of the commission of the crime was the use of intoxicating liquors; and in that large class of cases of violations of the personal rights of individuals, as affrays, assaults and battery, riots, assaults with deadly weapons, manslaughter and murder, we are fully convinced from our observation that from three-fourths to nine-tenths have their origin in the same unfortunate source.
> * * * They are fully convinced from the result of their inquiries that not less than three-fourths of the paupers in Illinois have become so from the use of intoxicating liquors obtained at groceries. * * * The reports of lunatic asylums exhibit the fact that a large majority of the cases of lunacy and insanity are produced by this same fruitful source of misery.

That assembly passed a law to regulate the sale of intoxicants in groceries, but the regulation was as vain as earlier attempts. Liquor obeyed no laws. It was as lawless when in a grocery store as in a tavern.

LICENSE FAILS.

Various systems of license failed equally to accomplish the conversion of the rum devil into a respectable citizen. The higher the license the greater the number of violations of the law. The liquor dealer had to secure the money to pay his high license fees, and no statutes were able to prevent him.

In 1910, according to the internal-revenue reports of the United States and reports of licensing bodies in Massachusetts, there was a dealer in alcoholic drinks licensed by the Federal Government, but without a license from the town or city, for each 3,557 of the population of no-license cities and towns, and one for every 1,479 of license cities and towns. The bootlegger and the speak-easy were twice as numerous where license existed as where it did not. Aside from those who had protected themselves from Federal prosecution by a Federal license, there were the host of illicit dealers who held no license whatever. The license system failed wherever it was tried. Neither the limitation of the hours or the days on which liquor might be sold, the character of the persons to whom it might be sold, or the quality of the drink furnished was as the law required. Few holders of liquor licenses obeyed the law.

BEER EXEMPTION TRIED.

The exemption of beer and cider from the prohibition laws was attempted in Massachusetts in 1870, in response to some such campaign as is being waged to-day by the brewery interests. In New Bedford, Mass., there was an immediate increase of over 68 per cent in the aggregate number of crimes committed in the first year of beer, and over 120 per cent increase in drunkenness cases. Justice Hamlett Bates, of Chelsea, declared, January 3, 1873:

The sale of beer should not be legalized; almost every beer saloon is a rum shop.

Clarke Jeilson, justice of the first district court, Worcester, and mayor of Worcester, asserted:

To permit the sale of beer by law is only a deceptive method whereby the sale of all kinds and quantities of intoxicating liquors is legalized and clothed with a kind of respectability which does not belong to that nefarious business.

To control the drink evil by banning distilled liquors and legalizing the sale of beer was tried and found as complete a failure as could be possible.

STATE CONTROL IMPOSSIBLE.

America has tried and found lamentably wanting the system suggested to-day by those who cry out for "wine and beer, but the saloon never." The State monopoly plan, which by eliminating private profit, with the corruption always associated with private ownership of places where liquor was sold, was intended to afford better control of the traffic, and was tested with thoroughness in South Carolina under the dispensary system. This system was advertised as a reduction of the entire problem to the simple terms of the State regulating itself and preventing itself from violating the law. Saloons were made impossible. All manner of safeguards were thrown around the manner of sale of liquors. The beverages were to be sold in bottles, not to be drunk on the premises, could not be sold to minors, could not be sold between sunset and sunrise, must undergo a chemical test for purity, and were to be sold only on written application of the purchaser. Gov. Benjamin R. Tillman was the conscientious advocate and defender of the system.

After one year Governor Tillman, in his message to the legislature, said of the dispensary law:

The liquor dealers have resisted its enforcement and tried to evade it by every device that cunning and greed can suggest, and they have had as active sympathizers a large proportion of the people and police of nearly all the cities and towns in the State. * * *

If it had not been for the animosities engendered by politics and the determination of political partisans to sustain the liquor dealers in every possible way, it is not likely that the tragedy which followed would have ever occurred.

The tragedy referred to was a conflict between the State constabulary and the citizens of Darlington, in which several were killed and wounded.

"The whisky rebellion," continued the governor in his message, "had broken out in full fury, and for 24 hours men held their breaths not only in this State but throughout the whole United States, for it appeared that we were on the verge of civil war."

Daniel C. Roper, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, said of this dispensary system in South Carolina:

The belief grew that the management of the dispensary had degenerated into a political and graft machine using every effort to increase sales and make profits. The result was a greater consumption of liquor, especially among the negroes and lower class of whites, than ever before.

The evils brought by the liquor traffic to the community were numerous and diverse. It is substantially accurate to say that the dilatory influence which it exercised could be measured principally by the amount of alcoholic liquor consumed, the extent of immorality and lawlessness which it promoted, and by the baneful and demoralizing influence upon politics and government which it produced. * * *

Nevertheless there is sound philosophy in the statement that the South Carolina dispensary law rendered a service to the people of the State as well as of the Nation by demonstrating as probably could not have been done in any other way the fallacy of the State monopoly method of handling the liquor question.

NO SURRENDER IN MAINE.

There is nothing new in the struggle of the wets against the law. Maine has had State prohibition for over 50 years. Again and again in county after county the liquor interests would secure the election of officials who would wink at violations of the law. Liquor would be shipped in, a fee per gallon paid by the shippers to be divided up among the officials who were in the game, and the liquor would go on sale. Public opinion would revolt and the dishonest officials would be removed, the community cleaned up again, to remain sober and decent until the same liquor-drinking and liquor-selling element once more succeeded in buying or in electing a complaisant official.

This letter, written apparently from the office of the local political committee of Lewiston, Me.—so it proclaims itself—under date of February 25, 1901, addressed to Messrs. Frank O. Dame & Co., reads thus:

Gentlemen: Our spring election comes off Monday, March 4. We are in need of funds to continue in office the present administration, which must have proved satisfactory to your line of business. Will you help us a little? Any contribution will be highly appreciated. Hoping to include your name among the list, we remain,

Yours respectfully,

CITY COMMITTEE.

Make checks payable to W. S. Keene, secretary, and mail by March 1.

The Boston wholesale liquor dealers who received this letter could hardly have misunderstood its clear significance.

In Kennebec County Sheriff Charles M. Richardson was accused by the Civic League of being unable to find his own father-in-law's liquor shop. The league found it, however, and had the sheriff's father-in-law fined $225 for maintaining a liquor nuisance. Officials sworn to enforce the law were again and again found disloyal to their State, unfaithful to their oath of office, but obedient and devoted to the corrupt liquor element in politics.

That the law could be enforced was demonstrated just recently, when Fred E. Stevens, retiring sheriff of Androscoggin County, on December 31, 1922, gave this report:

For six years the total commitments in this county for drunkenness have been 662, and the police departments of our cities have not allowed an intoxicated person to roam the streets to any extent without their being arrested and put before the court.

In 1912, the year before Stevens's first appointment, 1,044 were committed for drunkenness. In 1916, when another held the office, 818 were committed in the county for drunkenness.

Maine knows that there is no law of God nor man which the liquor crowd will not violate without compunction, but Maine has not surrendered. Maine has never hauled down its flag. Maine has never even considered repealing its oft-broken law just because liquor will not play the game, but Maine has fought, is fighting, and will fight until the disloyal, criminal, drink-selling, and drink-loving element are dead, in jail, or departed for countries where drunkenness is a virtue and not a vice.

KANSAS FIGHTS IT THROUGH.

Kansas and prohibition almost seem contemporaries. They are as twins in our thought. The thought of one recalls the other. But in Kansas, although a generation has grown to manhood without seeing a saloon in the greater part of the State, it is not long since Carrie Nation found enough saloons and enough saloon mirrors as targets for her hatchet to set Kansas and her fight against the organized law-breaking liquor element on the front page of the country's newspapers. Kansas had cleaned most of her house of these parasites, but they lingered in her great cities. By corruption, by organizing all the vice interests in the community, by presenting a united front, they fought the enforcement of the law until after a long fight, and a hard fight, the people whose voice had been heard in majority after majority successfully ousted them. Kansas did not permit her flag to be hauled down that the brewers and distillers might substitute the Jolly Roger, but continued to fight for prohibition until to-day, as Gov. Henry J. Allen said:

An attempt to repeal the prohibition laws would be voted down 10 to 1.

Kansas, according to the census longevity statement issued August 7, 1922, has the longest lived people in the country; her crime, insanity, and pauperism rates are almost the lowest in the world. Her prosperity has become proverbial.

CORRUPTION BY LIQUOR.

The history of the prohibition movement shows the liquor interests bribing public officials to wink at violations of the law, buying protection with money or political place, corrupting the electorate, and breaking whatever laws might have been adopted by the people for control of the traffic. Whether under local option or prohibition, high or low license, tavern, grocery, saloon, or dispensary system, the record is the same. There is no law the liquor element will obey but the law of self-interest.

While it has happened again and again that a local unit, a ward or a town or some division within a State which has adopted prohibition, has been dominated by the liquor forces and the law has been broken, it has never been true that the majority has surrendered to the lawless minority, repealed, weakened, or annulled the law to satisfy this minority, or even rested until the will of the majority was obeyed.

The majority of the people, seeking law and order, have in their own hands the legal means to repress the lawbreaking minority. The problem is not to compromise with lawlessness but to suppress it. Even if a compromise were offered, nothing but a complete surrender of the rights of self-government would satisfy the liquor element, since no laws touching this traffic have ever been obeyed. Either a lawless traffic or the law itself will be destroyed.

WOULD BOYCOTT RELIGION.

No institution is respected by the liquor element. In Baltimore in this month of March the Young Men's Christian Association is threatened with boycott by the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment because this organization will not permit the liquor forces to use the association as a forum to preach nullification and to advocate the return of legalized intoxication.

In declining to grant to the A. A. P. A. the use of its meetings for liquor propaganda, the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. quoted the resolutions adopted at the international Y. M. C. A. convention at Atlantic City, which said:

That this association assert its most emphatic belief in the moral, economic, and political, as well as Christian righteousness of the cause of prohibition as enacted in the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and we call upon the entire membership of the Young Men's Christian Association to stand solidly for a complete enforcement of the prohibition laws.

The acting chairman of the antiprohibition organization, replying to this, wrote:

If, as you say, your organization is resolved to support and preach prohibition, you will, of course, want to have the fact published so that hereafter no one may contribute to or otherwise participate in the work of the Y. M. C. A. under a misapprehension as to its aims and objects.

MUST EXECUTE SENTENCE.

Neither the home, the cradle, the toil of man, the health and life of the race, the courts of justice, the temples of religion, the safety of the Republic, nothing man has loved, honored, and fought for has ever been respected by this lawless traffic. On no other terms than an unconditional surrender or a war to extermination can we meet it. Our patience, through three conturies of forbearance, has been exhausted. Not only the sobriety but the very life of America and her institutions of orderly Government depend upon the issue of this conflict. The sentence has been passed against intoxicants. That sentence must be executed with firmness and without compromise.

RELIEF WORK FOR SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the American Legion of Chautauqua County, N. Y., has done such splendid work in looking after the claims of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war that I feel their procedure will be of interest to every Member of the House.

The members of the claims committee of the American Legion are entitled to the highest credit for their unselfish devotion to this most worthy work. The Legion renders this service to the injured service men without compensation, which includes the claim agent, who is assisted by men who have become proficient in this work, all serving without compensation. The purpose of this claims committee is to handle and assist in all claims of ex-service men in the county without charge, whether members of the American Legion or not.

It may be of interest to Legion organizations throughout the country to adopt a similar course or procedure, which, supplemented with the aid of the Members of Congress, can greatly expedite the disposition of the ex-service men's cases.

When a claim is reported and received by the claims committee of the American Legion the claimant is carefully examined to make sure that he has a just claim; that he is the party that he represents himself to be; that his discharge certificate is bona fide; that no erasures or changes have been made upon the same; and such other proof as may be of value in expediting the claim is secured. The value of this preliminary examination by members of the Legion self-trained in this work, who are in sympathy with the applicant and jealous of the good reputation of the American Legion, gives assurance that the case is bona fide at the start. When this committee has made a careful and searching examination and is satisfied in every particular that the claim is just, it assists the applicant to make out his application, sees that it is properly executed, prepares a certified copy of his discharge certificate, assists him to make a full claimant's statement, which may include obtaining the necessary affidavits from former comrades, no matter where located, and then forwards his papers to the Veterans' Bureau.

The care with which these claims are handled by the claims committee, especially the claim agent, adds materially to the character of the claims, and the thorough manner in which the facts are marshaled has proven a great factor in facilitating the work of the Veterans' Bureau.

When all the facts in a case have been assembled and filed with the Veterans' Bureau the claims committee keeps in touch with both the claimant and the bureau to make sure that no delay is incurred due to lack of information or evidence. The work of this fine organization in my district does not end here.

When a decision is rendered by the bureau which is believed to be unfair to the claimant and not in accordance with the facts and the law, then an appeal is taken and is followed through to a final conclusion.

There is another feature in connection with the work of the Legion in my county that I wish to stress. It has been my observation that the claims committee has spared no expense and trouble in an effort to help each and every worthy comrade and to cooperate in every way with the Veterans' Bureau. The organization has paid its own way, and the men have devoted long hours each day—the claim agent giving all his time gratis—in obtaining evidence and following appeals. There are many cases where it has arranged to have the applicant X-rayed, medical examinations given by outside physicians, and even observations made to be sure that the man's claim was just. The importance of an organization of this kind in his district must be apparent to every Member of the House.

I understand the work being performed by this organization has received the commendation of the highest medical authorities, and as a result of the thoroughness with which the work has been handled it has received the cooperation of the entire medical fraternity in helping to secure justice for the disabled. The work of this organization does not stop here.

It not only assists distressed comrades but extends the helping hand to their wives, widows, mothers, daughters, and children. And there is another feature of their work that has been of great value.

This organization inaugurated the idea of holding joint conferences in various localities in the country, between the Veterans' Bureau representatives, the Red Cross, ex-service men, and the claims committee. As a result the attention of many a worthy comrade has been called to this agency established for his relief. There have been a large number of tragic cases discovered by this organization—men who did not know that they were entitled to compensation, hospitalization, or vocational training.

Another feature of this organization, aside from its human aspects, which pleases me beyond measure is the fact that it has established a close cooperation between the soldier and the Government, and also between the Legion and the ex-service man.

The work of the Legion in my district has made it possible for me to look after the claims with the full assurance that I could rely upon the facts as presented without fear of doing injustice to the men or to the Government.

It is my earnest belief that if every Member will bring this matter to the attention of his local Legion it will be of great value to the soldiers in his district and greatly simplify the work of the Members here.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and myself may have permission to extend remarks in the RECORD for 10 days after Congress adjourns, to make a report on the appropriations of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] may have 10 days in which to file their remarks on the work of the Appropriations Committee in the Sixty-seventh Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois, Mr. MCSWAIN, Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, and Mr. HAMMER asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it it is their own remarks and not an extension of magazine articles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair assumes that they desire to extend their own remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection if they are their own remarks; if not, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair assumes they are their own remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the railroad question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article in the New York World by Senator JAMES E. WATSON, of Indiana, on the work of this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending remarks in the manner indicated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full, as follows:

COMPARISON OF 1924 APPROPRIATIONS AND BUDGET ESTIMATES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the passage by Congress of the appropriation bills at the session which has just come to a close marks the completion of legislative action on the second Budget submitted to Congress by the President under the new system. It was the most satisfactory Budget which has ever been presented to any Congress, considered both from the standpoint of the Treasury of the United States and the administration of Federal activities which will function under it. In my experience as a legislator I have never seen estimates of appropriations so free from obvious padding, so carefully squared to actual needs, or so void of proposed extravagant expansion of Government activities as these. The best test of the integrity of any Budget is reflected by the action upon it by the Representatives in Congress of the taxpaying public. The results of the action of this Congress upon the 1924 Budget and the supplemental and deficiency Budget estimates amount in the net to practical ratification of the aggregate as submitted by the President in the Budget in December and in the various supplemental and deficiency amounts as submitted by him from time to time since then.

The total of the Budget estimates submitted by the President in December, 1922, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, amounts to $3,676,606,523.19. The supplemental Budget estimates for that fiscal year submitted by him from time to time during the session aggregated $37,995,758. Of this amount the sum of $36,716,853 was submitted to provide for the fiscal year 1924 the additional compensation—$240 per annum—and the remainder, $1,278,905, constitutes the figure of actual supplemental estimates submitted subsequently to the Budget. This latter figure is an achievement in itself. In past years a flood of supplemental estimates for the new fiscal year usually followed immediately upon the submission of the Budget or Book of Estimates, and the flow continued uninterruptedly as long as there lingered any hope of having them attached to any appropriation bill. The supplemental estimates of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress—$110,334,269.97—speak in eloquent praise of the low figure to which the supplemental estimates have been held at this session. The aggregate of the regular and supplemental estimates for the fiscal year 1924 considered by the Congress amounted to $3,714,602,281.19. Against this sum the Congress has appropriated $3,706,777,163.12. The net reduction in the Budget estimates for 1924 is therefore $7,825,118.07. At this point, however, an explanation should be entered of this net reduction. The Budget estimate for river and harbor improvements called for $27,625,760. This sum has been raised by the Congress to $56,589,910, making an increase over the Budget estimate for that purpose of $28,964,150. This increase, fortunately, has been absorbed by decreases effected in other items in the Budget. If it had not been made, the net reduction in the 1924 Budget would have been $36,789,268.07. I shall incorporate as a part of my remarks a comparison of the Budget estimates for 1924 with the appropriations that have been made for that year. (See Table II.)

The supplemental and deficiency estimates submitted to Congress from June 30, 1922, to March 4, 1923, for the fiscal year 1923—the current year—and prior fiscal years amount to $236,411,166.57. The amount of the supplemental and deficiency appropriations for the fiscal year 1923 and prior years contained in the three deficiency acts under which these estimates were considered amount to $233,492,526.37. The reduction made by Congress in these estimates is $2,918,640.20. (See Table III.)

The total of reductions in the 1924 Budget estimates of $7,825,118.07, added to the foregoing reduction of $2,918,640.20, makes a combined reduction in all estimates of $10,743,758.27, or a net decrease of less than 1 per cent of the total amount requested.

The Committee on Appropriations in consideration of the regular annual appropriation bills and deficiency bills reported them to the House in the aggregate $34,690,631.67 less than the amount of the Budget estimates. The additions made to the bills by the action of the House and Senate have resulted in a decrease in this amount to the net reduction in Budget estimates heretofore stated of $10,743,758.27.

The narrowed margin between Executive request and congressional grant is ample cause for congratulation both to Congress and the Executive. It shows for the first time in many, many years that the Executive and the Congress are in substantial accord on the amount of money that the Government ought to expend in these days of stress. The decrease effected by the Congress in the first Budget, which was prepared in the first few months after the organization of the Budget Bureau, and in the deficiency estimates which were considered contemporaneously with that Budget, was approximately $312,000,000. This sum contrasted to the $10,743,758.27 reduction made in the second Budget and deficiency estimates is ample indication of the care with which the Budget was prepared.

The budget system is not perfect. In the very nature of things it can not attain perfection except through many long years of evolution. The improvement evidenced in the second year of its operation is remarkable and a source of great satisfaction to those who firmly believe in its efficacy.

COMPARISON OF 1923 AND 1924 APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 aggregate $3,706,777,163.12. The appropriations for the fiscal year 1923, including those sums for that year carried in deficiency acts at the present session, aggregate $3,940,579,667.72. The reduction for 1924 under 1923 is $233,802,504.60. Included in the 1923 appropriations, however, is the sum of $125,000,000 of discount accruals on war-savings securities which matured in January, 1923, and which figure is not repeated in the 1924 appropriations. Deducting this sum the reduction for 1924 under 1923 is $108,802,504.60. (See Table I.)

For the information of those who desire to visualize by large groups the principal objects of appropriations for the fiscal years 1923 and 1924 in comparative array, I shall insert the following table:

General classification of appropriations for 1923 and 1924 arranged to show the principal large objects of appropriation.

	1923	1924
Interest on the public debt	$1,100,000,000.00	$950,000,000.00
Sinking fund and other funds for reduction in the principal of the public debt	330,088,800.00	345,097,000.00
Veterans' Bureau, compensation, insurance, hospitalization, and vocational training	431,398,843.45	428,160,773.00
Pensions, all wars prior to the World War	268,000,000.00	253,000,000.00
Post Office Department	573,079,833.21	584,872,991.50
Military activities of the War Department (Army)	[1] 263,338,388.52	[1] 252,150,231.00
Navy	[1] 325,297,184.16	[1] 296,586,578.00
Shipping Board	100,459,000.00	50,411,500.00
Increased compensation ($240 per annum)	38,735,173.00	35,811,893.00
Roads	35,000,000.00	32,300,000.00
All other purposes, including the Congress, the Judiciary, the executive departments, independent bureaus, and the District of Columbia	475,282,445.38	478,386,196.62
Total	3,940,579,667.72	3,706,777,163.12

[1] Include amounts under permanent and indefinite appropriations.

A new item of $90,000,000 appears in the 1924 appropriations for the first time. This sum has been granted to the United States Veterans' Bureau for the payment of losses on term insurance. The amount of insurance of this character in force is $1,850,000,000, representing 245,000 policies. The original appropriation for this purpose—$23,000,000—was made in 1917, and this sum, together with premium receipts, has been sufficient to pay the losses to the present time. From now on it will be necessary to appropriate from $90,000,000 to $120,000,000 annually to supplement premium receipts in the payment of losses. The excess of payments over receipts will average approximately $7,500,000 a month.

Another new item of considerable consequence not included in the totals of the appropriations stated herein is the amount which will be required to establish the Federal intermediate credit banks created in the closing days of the Congress to aid the agricultural and live stock industry. Each of the 12 banks is authorized to have a subscribed capital stock of $5,000,000, to be subscribed and held by the United States. While the sums needed to subscribe the capital of each bank will have to be advanced from the Treasury of the United States and will be accounted an expenditure, they are not an expenditure in the usual meaning of the term and should more properly be denominated an investment. In arriving at the estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1923, hereafter referred to, allowance has been made for withdrawals from the Treasury on this account.

The committee recommended and the Congress approved a change in the method of printing a large portion of the securities of the Government at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Provision has been made for the purchase of 58 new power presses to replace 196 hand presses. There are in the bureau 242 power presses and 246 hand presses. A power press can produce from three to four times more work in a day than a hand press. The new law permits the full utilization of power presses and also permits the printing of faces of securities from eight-subject plates in lieu of the requirement heretofore existing that faces of notes should be printed from four-subject plates. These two changes in law will permit the full utilization of power presses and eight-subject plates in the normal operations of the bureau—a practice which was permitted and successfully conducted during the war period—and will result in a substantial economy to the Government without any deterioration in the quality of the securities. The net saving during the fiscal year 1924, after paying for the cost of purchase and installation of the new presses, will be approximately $450,000. For each subsequent year the annual saving will approximate from $800,000 to $1,000,000.

The annual appropriation heretofore made for the purchase and free distribution of garden and flower seeds by the Department of Agriculture from quota allowances to Members of Congress has been discontinued. The sum appropriated for several years past has been $360,000. The Department of Agriculture has recommended the discontinuance of the practice for several years. The acquiescence of Congress in the elimination of this item is a decided economy and eliminates an expenditure that has been the cause of much criticism and of doubtful value in the results it produced. In addition to the direct saving of $360,000, there will result savings from other appropriations, such as the transportation of the mails, which has borne the cost of distribution of the seeds, and other miscellaneous expenses connected with the distribution paid from other appropriations.

It came to the attention of the committee that the interpretation of certain provisions of the new act adjusting the pay of the military and naval forces of the Government was not uniformly considered by all branches of the service affected thereby. Ambiguity of that part of the law with reference to the granting of allowances of heat and light to officers who were granted rental allowances where no public quarters were available made it necessary for the committee to insist that such an interpretation was not within the intent of the framers of the law. Communication by the committee with all of the services concerned brought responses that the intent of Congress in this respect would be observed and the War Department appropriation act as finally approved carried a limitation removing the ambiguity from the law. If such an erroneous interpretation had been permitted to stand and officers granted allowances for heat and light in addition to their rental allowances, an unanticipated expenditure of hundreds of thousands annually would have been incurred.

The Congress has effected many small economies in the course of the preparation and passage of the appropriation bills which time and space will not permit of reiteration here. I have mentioned the foregoing items as the larger amounts and as typical examples of the character of work which Congress has done in the past and is continuing to do in the course of its functioning on the appropriation measures.

INCREASES IN BUDGET ESTIMATES.

Three large increases have been made by Congress in the Budget estimates. The amount for river and harbor improvements as contained in the Budget was $27,625,760. The Congress has increased this sum to $56,589,910, an increase of $28,964,150. Another item consists of the increase in the amount for carrying into effect the act concerning the welfare of infancy and maternity. The amount requested in the Budget was $800,000. Congress has appropriated $1,240,000, or an increase of $440,000. The third large item of increase of appropriations over Budget estimates arises in the amount for regulating immigration, which was raised from the Budget estimate of $3,000,000 to the appropriation figure of $3,300,000. I shall not comment here on the action of Congress in increasing these items. It is the prerogative of the representatives of the people to register what they believe to be the views of their constituents upon the question of expenditure of public funds as well as upon any other question. I did not favor the increase in the appropriation for rivers and harbors. I believed it to be unwarranted. A majority of both Houses of Congress, made up from both parties, supported the increase and the responsibility for their action rests with them.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS REDUCED.

The appropriations carried in deficiency acts on account of the fiscal year 1923 and prior fiscal years show a gratifying reduction under the amounts carried in like bills for the fiscal year 1922 and prior years. The total carried in the three deficiency acts for the fiscal year 1923 and prior years is $233,492,526.37. The comparable figure for the fiscal year 1922 and prior years carried in four deficiency acts set forth in my statement of June, 1922, is $332,760,884.55, or a reduction of $99,268,358.18. The following table gives a detailed classification of the amounts for the fiscal year 1923 and prior fiscal years by purposes of appropriation:

Total for 1923 and prior years		$233,492,526.37
Less Postal Service payable from postal revenues		12,108,013.58
		221,384,512.79
Veterans' Bureau—military and naval insurance		13,235,000.00
Agriculture—cooperative construction of rural post roads		25,000,000.00
Pensions—due to change from quarterly to monthly payments		16,000,000.00
Navy:
Scrapping naval vessels	$20,950,000.00
Increasing gun ranges	6,500,000.00
		27,450,000.00
Treasury—refunding taxes illegally collected		121,105,000.00
Amounts to carry out new laws or treaties effective after the regular annual appropriations had been made or subsequent to the submission of the regular estimates to the Bureau of the Budget		2,595,793.87
Judgments, court awards, damage claims, and claims allowed by the general accounting office		5,842,483.08
All other amounts, the bulk of which may properly be termed "deficiencies"		10,156,235.84
Total		221,384,512.79

The items properly classed as deficiencies show a decrease from $13,137,985.49 for 1922 and prior years to $10,156,235.84 for 1923 and prior years, or a reduction of $2,981,749.65. The figures presented on deficiency appropriations are evidence of the relentless policy pursued by Congress to hold deficiencies down to a minimum. I think the Congress has achieved a record in this respect.

REFUNDING TAXES ILLEGALLY COLLECTED.

The appropriations made at this session for refunding taxes illegally collected, largely for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, aggregate the sum of $121,105,000. While these figures by themselves seem startling, they are most satisfactory to the Government when taken in relation to the collections of back taxes. For the period covered by the fiscal years 1917 to 1922, inclusive, and for the first seven months of the fiscal year 1923 the Government collected in internal-revenue receipts $22,836,289,153.42. The amount of additional taxes collected during that period as the result of additional assessments and collections resulting from office audits and field investigations amounted to $1,606,905,243. The amount refunded to taxpayers during the period was $179,035,860.51. The amount collected from back taxes during the first eight months of the current fiscal year is approximately $300,000,000. This rate indicates that there will be collected during the entire fiscal year from this source in excess of $400,000,000.

SCRAPPING OF NAVAL VESSELS.

Another unusual item of appropriation at this session is the sum of $20,950,000 for expenses in connection with the scrapping of the seven battleships and four battle cruisers whose construction was discontinued in accordance with the provisions of the treaty emanating from the Conference on the Limitation of Naval Armament. An initial appropriation of $5,000,000 for the expenses of scrapping was made in the deficiency act approved July 1, 1922. It was estimated at that time that the total expenses of scrapping would approximate $70,000,000. The settlements made by the Navy Department with contractors thus far have been so much better than was anticipated that it is now expected the total expense will be in the neighborhood of $55,000,000, leaving a balance hereafter to be appropriated on this account of about $30,000,000. It will be of interest to the country at this time to have some idea of what saving will accrue to the Government from the scrapping of these vessels. The estimated cost of constructing the 11 ships is $436,800,000. There had been expended upon them to June 30, 1922, the sum of $155,615,000. If the vessels had not been scrapped, there would have been required to complete them the sum of $281,185,000. Deducting from this sum the estimated cost of scrapping and adding to the result a fair approximation of the value of the salvage, there will be an ultimate saving of somewhere between $240,000,000 and $250,000,000, traceable to the scrapping of the 11 vessels.

ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES, FISCAL YEAR 1923.

When the fiscal year 1923 commenced the preliminary estimates of receipts and expenditures for the year indicated an estimated deficit of $822,433,231. Reductions in the estimated expenditures for the year and increases in the estimated receipts brought the estimated deficit figures down to $273,938,712 on December 4, 1922, and still further down to $92,649,173 on January 15 last.

The estimated receipts, estimated expenditures, and estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1923, as computed on these dates, are as follows:

	July 1, 1922.	Dec. 4, 1922.	Jan. 15, 1923.
Estimated expenditures	$3,896,258,542	$3,703,801,671	$3,574,554,132
Estimated receipts	3,073,825,311	3,429,862,959	3,481,904,959
Estimated deficiency	822,433,231	273,938,712	92,649,173

Since the compilation of these figures on January 15 the large increase in the amounts required for the refunding of internal-revenue taxes illegally collected, additional expenditures for scrapping of naval vessels and elevation of guns of battleships, the enactment of the farm-credits legislation, and other unforeseen items of expenditure increase the estimated deficit as of this date to $180,000,000 for the current fiscal year. This figure, compared to the estimated deficit of $822,000,000 when the year commenced, lends encouragement to the expectation that when the year is finished even the $180,000,000 may be very materially decreased, if not disappear entirely. It must be remembered in connection with this deficit that the Government is still paying off war obligations. Included in the 1923 expenditures are $133,000,000 on account of the railroad administration; $125,000,000 on account of discount accruals of war-savings securities of 1918, which matured in January of this year; $127,000,000 on account of the refund of internal revenue taxes illegally collected—largely in the years 1917, 1918, and 1919—and many smaller items too detailed to enumerate here. If it were not for these hang-over obligations, the balance of the Government's books for the fiscal year 1923 would be on the surplus side of the ledger in a very creditable amount.

It will be interesting for the country to know at this time the decrease that has taken place in expenditures during the period which has elapsed since the armistice was signed. The expenditures for the fiscal year 1919, which was the fiscal year in which that event took place, covering the ordinary expenses of the Government and excluding public-debt retirements, were $18,514,879,955.03. The estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1924, which commences July next on a comparable basis, are $2,835,746,234.

The estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1924 are $3,361,812,359. The estimated expenditures for next year, including $345,097,000 for public-debt retirements payable from ordinary receipts, are $3,180,843,234. The estimated excess of receipts over expenditures for the year is $180,969,125.

POSTAL DEFICIT ELIMINATED.

The increase in the general postal business and the economies put into effect in the operation of the Postal Service portray a most satisfactory result. The postal deficit for the fiscal year 1921 was $81,387,387.08. For the fiscal year 1922 the deficit was reduced to $60,815,400.36. For the fiscal year 1923 the estimated postal deficit is $30,000,000. For the fiscal year 1924 it is expected that the postal revenues and expenditures will balance.

EXPEDITIOUS PASSAGE OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The action of the House at the second session of this Congress—the long session—in disposing of all of the regular annual appropriation bills by April 19, and thereby establishing a new record for expeditious passage of supply bills that was five weeks earlier than the average of any previous long session for 20 years, has been maintained by the House at the present short session. The last of the regular annual bills passed the House at this session on January 19, which is more than a month earlier than the average date of passage of the last of these bills at any previous short session for more than 20 years. Five of the appropriation bills became laws during the month of January, two of them as early as January 3, and one as early as January 5, an incident previously unknown at a short session of Congress. All of the regular annual bills became laws before the 3d of March. The usual date of approval of a large number of the appropriation bills at short sessions of Congress has been March 4. The early disposition of the appropriation bills has made possible the consideration of a vast amount of legislative business in the last month of the session, which otherwise could not have been taken up. I shall insert at this point the dates of passage by House of the last of the regular annual supply bills at the short sessions of this and 11 previous Congresses:

Dates of passage by the House of the last of the regular annual supply bills at the short sessions of the last 12 Congresses;
Fifty-sixth, February 20.
Fifty-seventh, February 20.
Fifty-eighth, February 27.
Fifty-ninth, February 23.
Sixtieth, February 26.
Sixty-first, February 25.
Sixty-second, February 26.
Sixty-third, February 23.
Sixty-fourth, March 2.
Sixty-fifth, February 28.
Sixty-sixth, February 17.
Sixty-seventh, January 19.
No note is taken in the foregoing dates of the failure of any of the bills in the Senate or a presidential veto requiring their repassage at a subsequent date.

THE WORK OF THE COMMITTEE.

The Committee on Appropriations in order to expedite the work of the House during the past session began its labors soon after the November elections. Five of its subcommittees were at work by the middle of November, and bills were ready for presentation to the House when it convened in December. Six of the regular supply bills had been presented to the House before the holidays, four of these had been passed by the House before that time, and the consideration of two others had been completed in Committee of the Whole with a final vote on them pending after New Year's Day. The committee gave more than the usual consideration to supply bills at a short session of Congress. It compelled justification of each request and in its search for information took 7,000 printed pages of testimony in the preparation of the 11 regular annual bills and three deficiency measures. The results which the committee has attained could only be reached by the utmost industry and sacrifice on the part of its membership and the splendid manner in which the House has received the reports it has presented. I wish here to record my thanks to all who have contributed so generously to the success of the work.

I shall append herewith as a part of my remarks five tables, which are interesting and illuminating to those who may care to study them. They cover every phase of the work of the past session with respect to estimates and appropriations:

[a] This sum is $7,500,000 more than the amount stated in the Budget. The difference arises under the Reclamation Service. The Budget does not include in the 1924 totals the amount for that service estimated to be funded from repayments to the reclamation fund ($7,500,000). As previous estimates and appropriations are computed on the basis of including such funding from repayments, it is confusing not to add that sum to the total for 1924, otherwise the Reclamation Service will show apparent reductions for 1924 under 1923 and prior years that are not actual.

MARCH 14, 1923.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the fiscal year 1924, for which appropriations have been made by the last session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, is the fifth year since the war came to an end. Liquidation of the war's heavy liabilities has been steadily going on during the past four years, and the Government should now be on a basis of peace-time expenditures. A heavy-burdened taxpaying people rightfully expect heavy reductions from the large expenditures made necessary by the war during the preceding years. As I have said many times, the only true test by which it can be determined whether Congress has reduced appropriations and been really economical is by a comparison of its appropriations with those made in previous years for similar purposes. This test can be applied to the appropriations carried in the regular annual supply bills for the fiscal year 1924 by comparing them with the appropriations carried in the regular annual supply bills for the fiscal year 1923.

The following table shows appropriations made for the two fiscal years named:

Department or establishment.	Appropriations for 1923 regular annual supply bills.	Appropriations for 1924 regular annual supply bills.
